LAHORE HIGH COURT

ADDISON AND DIN MOHAMMAD, JJ.

Maqbul Ahmad—Defendant—Appellant.

Mt. Afzal-Ul-Nisa — Plaintiff and others—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 433 of 1931, Decided on 3rd January 1935, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, D/- 12th December 1930.

* (a) Partition—Court should pass decree in favour of all co-sharers whether plaintiffs or defendants—It cannot make payment of Court-fee condition precedent to passing of decree in favour of defendants.

In a partition suit, each party stands in the position of a plaintiff with reference to the others and the Court has no reason to refuse the prayer of the defendants for partition of their shares if the plaintiff's right to claim partition has been established; and it cannot make payment of Court-fee a condition precedent to passing of decree in favour of the defendants; such a decree falls within the definition of an instrument of partition within the meaning of S. 2 (15), Stamp Act and under S. 29 (g), it is the duty of the Court to decide the proportion of the stamp payable by each person who desires his share separated. Art. 45 of the Act is the article under which this stamp duty is levied. It would, of course, be impossible for any of the parties to execute the decree until the stamp duty is first levied and paid; 1926 Cal. 184; 1918 Lah. 385; and 28 P. R. 1905, Rel on. [P 802]

(b) Partition—Final decree in partition suit—Execution by defendant—Defendant need not pay Court-fee to have his share separately allotted to him—Obiter.

Obiter—There is nothing in the law which requires a defendant in a partition suit to pay Court-fees in order to have his share separately allotted to him. The decree that is finally drawn up has to be stamped as an instrument of partition under the Stamp Act and except that duty, no other duty is payable by the defendant; 1926 Pat 154; 1932 Mad 722 and 1918 Mad 448, Not Foll., 1928 Bom 41 and 29 Bom. 79 Appr. [P 401, 2]

Addison, J.—One Abdul Hamid died leaving nine houses and one shop in Delhi. His heirs were a son, Abdul Samad and two daughters as well as his widow, Mt. Mahmud-Ul-Nisa defendant 3. One of the daughters Mt. Afzal-Ul-Nisa, instituted this suit for partition of her 7/32 share of the property. Abdul Samad is dead and is represented by his son, Abdul Jabbar and widow, Mt. Anwar-Ul-Nisa, defendants 1 and 2. The other sister, Mt. Niab-Ul-Nisa, is also dead and is represented by her son Abdul Rashid and husband Abdul Majid, defendants 4 and 5 respectively. The other defendants are transferees of portions of the property from various members of the family. The numbers of the houses are 2698, 2699, 2700, 2796, 2797, 2798, 2800, 2801 and 2802, while the number of the shop is 2770. It was recited in the plaint that Abdul Samad, the son, had mortgaged in his lifetime his 7/16th share in four properties, namely houses Nos. 2800, 2801, 2802 and shop No. 2770 to one Lachhu Mal whose son is defendant 11. Defendant 11 obtained two decrees for the sale of this share in these four properties. These decrees were purchased by defendant 6 Maqbul Ahmed who subsequently in execution purchased Abdul Samad's 7/16th share in these four properties. It was further recited in the plaint that before this auction sale took place plaintiff and other members of the family referred the matter of the partition of the estate of Abdul Hamid to arbitration and an award was given on 29th October 1923 according to which house No. 2800 fell to plaintiff's share. Maqbul Ahmed was taking possession of his share in this property as well as in the other three properties and plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration to restrain him on the ground that property No. 2800 had come to her share on partition. Her suit was however dismissed on the ground that the award was obtained collusively in order to defeat the claim of Maqbul Ahmed, defendant 6. Accordingly the plaintiff instituted this suit for partition of the whole property. Various defences were raised. The shares are not in dispute nor is it disputed that Maqbul Ahmed, defendant 6, is entitled to 7/16ths of the four properties mentioned. The cases of the other transferees need not be specially mentioned here. An order was recorded by the first Judge who was trying the suit as follows:

The question whether Maqbul Ahmed, defendant, should be turned out of the share of the properties purchased by him and should be awarded a share in the remaining property should be decided after the preliminary decree as it relates to the mode of partition.

At this stage it may be mentioned that the shop No. 2770 has already been partitioned between the parties and it was agreed that no further partition proceedings as regards it were necessary and that it should be excluded from this partition. It has also to be mentioned that there is a suit pending by Maqbul Ahmed for partition of his share of house No. 2802 without including his share in the other properties purchased by him. The trial Judge found that the partition effected by the award was invalid as it was collusive. The shares of the other transferees were set out and at the end of the judgment, directing a preliminary decree to be drawn up, it was said that the vendees should be allowed property alienated to them if the equities permitted this. Due regard, however, should be paid to the state of the family, its debts, nature of property, etc. It was directed that in the proceedings for drawing up the final decree regard should be had to these directions. The preliminary decree is dated 23rd July 1930, and there was no appeal against it. Thereafter a local commissioner was appointed to submit a report as to the mode of partition. On 18th October 1930, he submitted a report setting out the values of all the ten properties. In this he valued house No. 2800 at Rs. 2,768-2-0. He valued the share of Mt. Afzal-ul-Nisa at Rs. 3,065-9-0. He suggested that plaintiff should be allowed this house No. 2800 as her share and that the defendants should pay her the deficiency of Rs. 297-7-0.

The plaintiff herself objected to this report pointing out that shop No. 2770 had been valued at Rs. 2,006-13-3 while its value was more than Rs. 4,000. She further asked that instead of house No. 2800 and a share of shop No. 2770 being given to her she might be given shop No. 2770 and house No. 2801 the value of which according to the commissioner was Rs. 2,921-6-0. Most of the defendants also filed objections as regards the under-valuation of the property and asked for a complete partition of the shares of all the heirs. Maqbul Ahmed, defendant 6, specifically mentioned that house No. 2800, awarded to the plaintiff, had been very much under-valued and he added that he was being deprived of his share in the specific numbers purchased by him at the Court auction. Mt. Afzal-ul-Nisa put in another petition admitting that shop No. 2770 had already been partitioned agreeing that this previous partition should be maintained and stating that she had no objection to Maqbul Ahmad getting his share in house No. 2800 allotted to her by the commissioner. As already stated it was agreed before us that this shop No. 2770 should be excluded from the partition as it had already been partitioned. It has also to be noted that house No. 2800 had been valued at a much higher figure in the collusive award proceedings already alluded to.

After these objections were put in the trial Court ordered on 28th October 1930 that the local commissioner should make proposals for the complete partition of the property. Accordingly he put in a report dated 17th November 1930, suggesting a partition into four shares namely those of the original heirs of Abdul Hamid, i. e., his widow, two daughters and son. No attempt was made in this report to give Maqbul Ahmad and others the shares they were entitled to. The properties were valued at the same figures as had been given in the first report. Maqbul Ahmad, defendant 6, again objected to the commissioner's proposals and prayed that a competent commissioner might be appointed to prepare a complete scheme to settle the shares of the parties once for all. There were also objections on behalf of the other defendants. Maqbul Ahmed again pointed out that the local commissioner had awarded the same house, No. 2800, to Mt. Afzal-ul-Nisa which she obtained under the collusive award proceedings. In this second report of the commissioner the shop No. 2770 was excluded so that the value of the share of the plaintiff became Rs. 2,626-8-0, whereas the value of the house No. 2800, according to the commissioner, was Rs. 2,768-2-0. Maqbul Ahmad again asked that his 7/16th share in houses No. 2800, No. 2801 and No. 2802 should also be partitioned and awarded to him. In her application of 28th October 1930 the plaintiff Mt. Afzal-ul-Nisa had stated in para. 3 that she would be content to get a 7/16th share in property No. 2800 awarded to her and that she had no objection to the remaining portion going to Maqbul Ahmed.

Instead of framing issues on the numerous objections taken to the commissioner's report the trial Court at once proceeded to pass a final decree which is dated 12th December 1930. It was stated in this order that Maqbul Ahmed was not entitled to possession of the share he claimed in respect of the properties purchased by him until he came before the Court either as a plaintiff in respect of all these properties or paid proper court-fees in respect of them. The Judge, therefore, directed that a final decree should be drawn up allotting house No. 2800 to the plaintiff and directed her to deposit Rs. 141-10-0 for distribution among the other co-sharers. Against this decision Maqbul Ahmed, defendant 6, has preferred this appeal. From what has been said it will be clear that the trial Judge has acted very hastily in this matter. He should have framed issues, gone into the question of under-valuation and seen whether it was possible to allow Maqbul Ahmed portions of the properties or some of the properties, a share of which was purchased by him. Seeing that it is admitted that shop No. 2770 has already been partitioned these properties are now houses Nos. 2800, 2801, 2802. There has been no proper adjudication as regards the valuation of the properties and the way they should be allotted.

Apart from that, the trial Judge has erred in holding that Maqbul Ahmed or any other of the co-sharers must either come into Court as a plaintiff or first pay proper court-fees before a partition decree could be drawn up in their favour. This has never been laid down. In 86 I C 765 (1) the Calcutta High Court said that in a partition suit each party stands in the position of a plaintiff with reference to the others and that the Court had no reason to refuse the prayer of the defendants for partition of their share if the plaintiff's right to claim partition had been established. In 22 P L R 1918 (2) it was held that every co-sharer is entitled to obtain possession of the share allotted to him under a decree for partition whether he is a plaintiff or defendant, while it was held in 23 P R 1905 (3) that as a decree for partition is a joint declaration of the rights of all the co-sharers interested in the property of which partition is sought, each co-sharer is entitled to obtain possession of the share allotted to him under the decree whether he be plaintiff or defendant. It was therefore necessary for the trial Court also to separate the shares of those defendants who desired that to be done. It may be pointed out that such a decree would fall within the definition of an instrument of partition within the meaning of S. 2 (15), Stamp Act, and that under S. 29 (g), Stamp Act, it is the duty of the Court to decide the proportion of the stamp payable by each person who desires his share separated. Art. 45 is the article under which this stamp duty is levied. It would of course be impossible for any of the parties to execute the decree until the stamp duty is first levied and paid. Whether however it is necessary for the defendants who claim execution under such a stamped decree also to pay court-fees is a more difficult matter and I am doubtful if it arises at this stage of the case.

1. Loke Nath v. Radha Gobinda, 1926 Cal 184=86 I C 765.
2. Debi Sahai v. Tara Chand, 1918 Lah 835=44 I C 185=22 P L R 1918.
3. Wasudeo v. Rupchand, (1905) 28 P R 1905=13 P L R 1905.

As however the matter has been argued, I proceed to discuss this question.

In 29 Bom 79 (4) a defendant to a partition suit applied for execution in his favour of the decree therein. The Judge ruled that he could execute the decree when he had paid court-fees on his share. The decree itself imposed no such term as to court-fees. It was held by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court that the execution Court was not justified in requiring payment of an additional court-fee on the plaint. In this case, of course, the final decree had been passed without any stipulation as to its not being capable of execution by the defendants until the executing defendant had paid court-fees on his share. Another Division Bench of the Bombay High Court held in 1923 Bom 41 (5) that, where a complete decree had been drawn up on the award and the executing Court dismissed the application for execution on the ground that there was no decree as the necessary court-fees had not been paid, the order dismissing the application for execution was wrong and execution should have been allowed. Here again it will be seen that there was no provision in the decree to the effect that any defendant executing the decree must first pay court-fees on his share. In 42 I C 365 (6) however a Division Bench of the Madras High Court held that if a defendant under a decree or award for partition gets a share of the property allotted to him he must if he wishes to execute the decree pay his share of the court-fee payable on the entire decree. There was practically no discussion of the question by the Judges who decided the case.

The view taken by this Bench of the Madras High Court was not taken by a Division Bench of the Patna High Court in 1926 Patna 154 (7). It was there said that there was nothing in the law which requires a defendant in a partition suit to pay court-fees in order to have his share separately allotted to him. The decree that is finally drawn up has to be stamped as an instrument of partition under the Stamp Act and except that duty, no other duty is payable by the defendant. Further, another Division Bench of the Madras High Court in 55 Mad. 975 (8) took the same view as the Patna High Court. The Judges stated that they did not agree with the decision in 42 I C 365 (6) and that they preferred the reasoning in the Patna decision. There are also some remarks by Jenkins, C. J. in 29 Bom. 79 (4) which seem to indicate that he was of the same view. He said:

Now ex concessis this court-fee is to be imposed if at all in respect of the plaint, but the plaint is not the defendant's document; so why should he pay any fee on it? We can find nothing in the Court-fees Act which imposes the burden.

This seems to show that he was of the same view as was taken by the Patna High Court and by the Madras High Court in its later decision, though it was unnecessary for him to come to this decision as in the case before him the final decree had been drawn up without any stipulation that it could not be executed until each defendant had paid his share of the court-fee. In my judgment the law is correctly laid down in 55 Mad 975 (8) and 1926 Patna 154 (7). For the reasons given, this appeal must be accepted and the final decree set aside. The case will be remanded to the trial Court to proceed with the case from the stage of the preliminary decree. A new commissioner should be appointed and he should be directed to divide the property into as many lots as the parties desire. Of course any of the parties can elect not to have their shares divided but to leave them undivided, or any group can ask for their share to be treated as joint. When the Court has ascertained this the Commissioner should be instructed after a proper valuation of the property to make proposals for the partition of the various shares desired. So far as possible the share of the appellant Maqbul Ahmed should be given out of houses Nos. 2800, 2801 and 2802. If this is not possible some reasonable arrangement should be made. This remark applies to the others as well. Shop No. 2770 should be treated as already partitioned. As regards the Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of Civil Appeals Nos. 1708 and 1709 of 1934. They arise out of two suits by a subsequent lessee to dispossess a previous lessee who held two plots of land, under unregistered deeds and was entitled to remain in possession for an indefinite period unless he himself desired to quit on giving six months' notice.

The trial Court held in favour of the plaintiff in each case and decreed the suits. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that the doctrine of part-performance applied to the case and dismissed both the suits. The plaintiff has appealed in each case to this Court.

I am clearly of opinion that there is no force in the appeals. It has been clearly found by the learned Additional District Judge that the previous lessee took possession of the land in dispute in each case under his lease and has been continuously paying the fixed rent to the landlords. The learned Counsel for the appellants urged that S. 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to leases and in any case had no retrospective effect. These contentions have no force whatever. S. 53-A lays down that notwithstanding that the transfer has not been completed according to law, the transferor or any person claiming under him shall be debarred from enforcing against the transferee and persons claiming under him any right in respect of the property of which the transferee has taken or continued in possession. According to this section, the plaintiff was debarred from enforcing this claim against the defendant when he brought his suits. No question of giving retrospective effect to the section therefore, arises, though I agree with the view taken in 1933 Bom 381 (1) that according to the amended Act XX of 1929, S. 53-A was intended to have retrospective effect. That section merely gives statutory recognition to the equitable doctrine of part-performance which the Courts in India have applied in numerous cases. Along with the enactment of S. 53-A a proviso was added to S. 49 of the Registration Act. It has been held in 1933 Lah 1038 (2) that the law laid down in S. 49 is really one of procedure and the admissibility of a document in a suit is governed by the law as it exists when the suit is brought.

The learned Counsel for the appellant was unable to advance any convincing argument in support of his contention that the doctrine of part performance did not apply to a lease. There are Judgment. — The facts of this case, as found by the lower appellate Court, are as follows: Maula Bakhsh, the defendant-respondent, owed money to the firm Sant Singh-Sahj Singh of Gojra. Sant Singh-Sahj Singh were on the eve of insolvency. In order to keep this asset out of the hands of the official receiver, it was arranged that Maula Bakhsh should execute a bahi entry in which the name of the creditor was not mentioned. The insolvency took place, and the bahi was made over to Ram Lal Gulati, a relation of Sant Singh-Sahj Singh. Some time later Ram Lal Gulati threatened to bring a suit against Maula Bakhsh on the strength of this document. The matter was compromised, and the terms of the compromise were that Maula Bakhsh should execute two bonds for Rs. 1500, and Rs. 22 respectively in favour of Chuni Lal, the present plaintiff.

Chuni Lal has brought the present suit on these bonds, alleging that he received the consideration in cash. The lower appellate Court has found that no cash consideration passed, the reason for the execution of the bonds being as given above. It was found that the withdrawal of the present suit by Ram Lal formed a good consideration for execution of the bonds, but it was found that the whole transaction was void as contrary to public policy and the suit was dismissed with costs. Chuni Lal has appealed.

The findings of the lower appellate Court, as to the manner in which the bonds came to be executed, are findings of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. The only question to be decided is whether, on the finding that the bonds were executed in the way described above, Chuni Lal's claim should still be decreed. It is argued that, when once the learned District Judge had found that there was good consideration for the bonds, this should have decided the matter and it could not be held that the final transaction was either immoral or void or opposed to public policy. There would be some force in this contention, if the decision of the District Court as to the validity of the consideration is correct. If it is correct, and there is no good consideration, the creditor's claim must clearly fail. In finding that there was good consideration for the bonds in the withdrawal of the threatened suit by Ram Lal, the learned District Judge has relied upon a well-known principle of law. This principle of law was concisely laid down in 32 Ch D 266 (1):

If an intending litigant bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, he does give up something of value. It is a mistake to suppose it is not an advantage, which a suitor is capable of appreciating, to be able to litigate his claim, even if he turns out to be wrong.

It is open to question, however, whether this principle applies to the facts of the present case. As already mentioned, Maula Bakhsh did not owe any money to Ram Lal Gulati, nor had he executed any document in his favour. What had happened was that Ram Lal had come into possession of a document executed in favour of someone else in which the creditor's name was not present and was threatening to bring a suit on this document as if it was one executed in his own favour. He could not bring a suit as an assignee, for the fraud would have been apparent. In other words, he was threatening to bring an entirely false suit against Maula Bakhsh. Whatever may be said regarding the state of mind of the person who imagines that he has some right, it is entirely a different matter when a person threatens to bring an entirely false suit, the falsity of the claim being known to both parties. Such a claim must be treated as vexatious, and so falls within the exception to the rule given above. The threat of bringing a false suit is really a form of blackmail, and cannot be regarded as good consideration for the contract.

The contract in suit must thus be regarded as void for want of consideration under S. 25, Contract Act. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 155 of 1932, Decided on 1st July 1935, from order of Sub-Judge, Second Class, Delhi, D/- 29th October 1931.

* (a) Practice—Power of Court—Person on whose behalf suit is instituted becoming of unsound mind during pendency of suit—No finding that suit was not properly instituted—O. 32, Rr. 2 and 15, Civil P. C., do not apply.

Where a suit was instituted in the name of joint family firm consisting of R and his minor son by N, holding a power of attorney on behalf of R, and it was found during the pendency of the suit that R was of unsound mind but was not so at the time the suit was instituted:

Held: that in the absence of any finding that the suit had not been properly instituted, the Court had no power to order the plaint to be taken off the file.

Held further: that the rules relating to suits on behalf of minor could not be strictly applied under O. 32, R. 15 to the circumstances of the case and that O. 32, R. 2 did not apply as the suit was properly instituted. [P 8 C 1]

(b) Practice—Duty of Court—Party becoming of unsound mind during pendency of suit—Court should appoint next friend to protect his interests.

When a person becomes incapable of protecting his own interests by reason of unsoundness of mind, it is clearly the duty of the Court to take such steps as may be necessary to have them protected. The Court should proceed to appoint a next friend to continue the proceedings on behalf of the lunatic; and probably the best procedure would be to adjourn the proceedings to a reasonable time in order to enable a suitable next friend to come forward. Order.—The present suit was instituted in the name of a joint family firm consisting of Ram Gopal and his minor son. The plaint was signed and presented by Narain Singh, holding a power-of-attorney on behalf of Ram Gopal. After the institution of the suit an objection was raised that Ram Gopal was of unsound mind and unable to look after his own interests. After an inquiry, the trial Court found Ram Gopal, to be of unsound mind and directed the suit to be struck off the file. A petition for revision has been instituted by Narain Singh.

The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have been of opinion that Ram Gopal was of sound mind at the time when the power of attorney was given to Narain Singh. He has given no definite finding on the question whether Ram Gopal was insane at the time when the suit was instituted, but the presumption would be in favour of the continuance of the same state of mind. This has been confirmed by further inquiry on remand. On the other hand, it has been definitely ascertained that Ram Gopal is not of sound mind at the present moment. We must take it therefore that Ram Gopal was of sound mind at the time the suit was instituted, but that he has since become incapable of protecting his own interests.

In the absence of any finding that the suit has not been properly instituted, it does not seem to me that the trial Court had any power to order the plaint to be taken off. O. 32, R. 15, Civil P. C., provides that the other provisions of the order shall extend to persons found to be of unsound mind so far as they are applicable, but it is obvious that the rules relating to suits on behalf of a minor cannot be strictly applied to the circumstances of the present case. A person of sound mind may become of unsound mind during the pendency of a suit; but a person who is a major at the beginning of the proceedings cannot afterwards become a minor. Moreover, the plaint could only be struck off under R. 2, which does not apply when the suit has been properly instituted. When a plaintiff becomes incapable of protecting his own interests by reason of unsoundness of mind, it is clearly the duty of the Court to take such steps as may be necessary to have them protected. The position is most nearly analogous to that which arises when a next friend dies or retires, for which provision is made in O. 32, R. 11. The Court should proceed to appoint a next friend to continue the proceedings on behalf of the lunatic; and probably the best procedure would be to adjourn the proceedings to a reasonable time in order to enable a suitable next friend to come forward, as is also done in suits in which minors are concerned.

Further complications are liable to arise in this case owing to the unusual fact that the suit has been brought on behalf of a joint Hindu family (under the local rules applicable to this Province), and the family apparently consists only of the plaintiff and his minor son. I do not think, however, that it is necessary to enter into this aspect of the case at this stage, and it will be for the trial Court to make proper provision for the protection of the interests of all concerned. For the reasons given above, I accept the petition for revision and order the proceedings to be restored to the record for further procedure on the lines suggested above. The petitioner will receive his costs in this Court from the respondent, and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Criminal Appeal No. 628 of 1934, Decided on 11th June 1934, from order of Sess. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 8th March 1934.

(a) Confession—Retracted — Oral confession is admissible — Weight of such confession will depend on facts of each case and corroborative evidence—Such confession has not same weight as one recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C.

No doubt oral confession is admissible : 1933 Lah 716, Foll.

Nevertheless the amount of weight to be attached to an oral confession which has been subsequently retracted must be determined by the facts of each particular case and will depend on the extent to which the oral confession is corroborated in material particulars, by independent evidence. * (b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164—Confessions should be recorded with precaution, and as provided for by S. 164—If otherwise Court will be entitled to presume accused's denial to commit himself in writing.

Confessions intended to be admitted in evidence against persons accused of criminal offences should ordinarily be recorded with all the precautions and in the manner prescribed by S. 164, Criminal P. C. If this salutary provision of the law is ignored in favour of an oral confession, the trial Court will be entitled to presume, unless satisfied to the contrary, that the reason for adopting the oral method is that the accused has declined to commit himself to a written confession of the nature contemplated by S. 164, Criminal P. C. [P 9 C 2]

Zahur Din Naqshbandi — for Appellant.

Edmunds—for the Crown.

Young, C. J.—Karam Singh has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of his paramour Mt. Harnamo on or about 27th September 1933 and has been sentenced to death. From this conviction he appeals and the death sentence is before us for confirmation. Mt. Harnamo was the wife of Ujagar Singh (P. W. 13). In the beginning of September her husband had taken her to Tarn Taran to bathe in the Darbar Sahib tank. From there she disappeared; and on 13th September Ujagar Singh reported her disappearance to the Tarn Taran police. On 27th September Mr. Pratt (P. W. 2), an Assistant P. W. 1, reported to the police that a corpse was lying near the railway track between Faridkot and Kot Kapura stations. Investigation was undertaken by the police and the body was soon identified as that of Mt. Harnamo, wife of Ujagar Singh. It is not necessary to consider the evidence of identification as this has not been questioned in appeal and there can be no doubt that the corpse was that of Mt. Harnamo. It is proved by the medical evidence that death was due to shock and haemorrhage resulting from eight incised injuries inflicted mostly on the neck and face. There is no doubt therefore that the woman was murdered. The nature of these injuries is consistent with the allegation of the prosecution that they were inflicted by the kirpan (Ex. P-17). The main question for determination is whether the guilt of the appellant has been established as the perpetrator of this murder.

The first clue obtained by the police in this case was the receipt of a letter (exhibit P. K.) purporting to have come from one Hari Singh Giani intimating that Mt. Harnamo had been murdered by one Amar Singh at a spot $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles far from Faridkot railway station. This Amar Singh is P. W. 14. He was suspected because he was alleged to have illicit connexion with the deceased woman and was at first arrested by the police. He was however at a very early stage discharged and no suggestion has been made either in the cross-examination of witnesses or in argument before us that he has any connexion with the crime.

The case against the appellant depends mainly on an oral confession (subsequently retracted) said to have been made by him while in police custody on 27th October 1933 to Bhai Sri Ram Singh, Honorary Magistrate (P. W. 27). During the investigation of the case this Magistrate was, by orders of the Additional District Magistrate, associated with the investigating officer; and it is proved by the evidence of this Magistrate that the appellant pointed out various places alleged to be connected with the crime, and made admissions some of which led to the discovery of certain facts connected with the crime. The Magistrate did not record the admissions, but made a memorandum of their substance, as orally stated by the accused. This written memorandum was used by the Magistrate to refresh his memory, as permitted by S. 159, Evidence Act, while giving evidence before the Sessions Court.

The admissibility of this confession has not been contested by counsel for the appellant. That such a confession is admissible against the accused has been decided by numerous authorities of this Court, the most important of which is the Full Bench decision 14 Lah 290 (1). In view of this authority we are bound to hold that the oral confession question is admissible. Nevertheless we are of opinion that the amount of weight to be attached to such an oral confession (which, as in this case, has been subsequently retracted) must be determined by the facts of each particular case and will depend on the extent to which the oral confession is corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence. Clearly the same weight cannot ordinarily be attached to an oral confession as to one formally recorded with all necessary precautions under S. 164, Criminal P. C., and we take this opportunity of expressing our considered view that confessions intended to be admitted in evidence against persons accused of criminal offences should ordinarily be recorded with all the precautions and in the manner prescribed by S. 164, Criminal P. C. If this salutary provision of the law is ignored in favour of an oral confession, the trial Court will be entitled to presume, unless satisfied to the contrary, that the reason for adopting the oral method is that the accused has declined to commit himself to a written confession of the nature contemplated by S. 164, Criminal P. C. The result will be that in cases in which it is sought to rely on such an oral confession which has been subsequently retracted, very little weight will be given to the oral confession, unless there is independent evidence to corroborate the confession in such a way as to establish beyond doubt that the confession is a true statement which really connects the accused with the crime. (After a discussion of the evidence, the judgment proceeded). There was no defence. The accused contented himself with a bare denial of the allegations made against him.

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge, supported by the unanimous opinion of the assessors, that the cumulative effect of this evidence establishes beyond doubt the guilt of the accused under S. 302. The capital penalty is the only appropriate sentence for this cold-blooded calculated murder. We therefore confirm the sentence of death and dismiss the appeal.

 Trusts—Creation of—Trusts in favour of some creditors only—Notice of trust given by debtor to other creditors as well—They can also claim to be beneficiaries.

If a debtor conveys property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, who are not parties to the conveyance and to whom the fact of its execution is not communicated, the conveyance merely operates as a power to the trustees to apply the property in satisfying their claims and inasmuch as the debtor himself is in fact the only cestui que trust, it is revocable by him before the property is so applied, and cannot be enforced by the creditors. A trust in favour of creditors is not, however, revocable if the creditors are parties to assent to the conveyance or if the fact of its execution is communicated to them. [P 12 C 1]

Where therefore a trust is created in favour of some of the creditors, who sign the composition deed and if the deed is communicated to the other creditors, a notice of the trust being given by the debtor before it is executed and by the trustees after its execution to the other creditors, it will also create a trust in their favour and they would be cestui que trust under the deed: 25 Cal 642, *Acton v. Addison, J.—Khiala Shah, the proprietor of the firm Dyala Shah-Khiala Shah, in 1923, considered that his firm was unable to meet its liabilities and invited the creditors to take charge of its assets and to liquidate its liabilities. Negotiations took place at Rawalpindi, resulting in the execution of a deed of trust dated 20th December 1923, under which the defendants, who are some of the creditors, were appointed trustees. The plaintiffs are three firms, the partners of all being the same, except that Devi Dyal is not a proprietor of the third firm. In the trust deed it is stated that the signatures of those of the firms' creditors, who had accepted the composition deed, existed on Sch. 6, while it is further stated that Khiala Shah had given in detail an account of the money due to all creditors in Sch. 4. The trustees took charge of the trust property and commenced proceedings under the deed. The plaintiffs, instead of accepting the trust in the beginning, filed an application to have Khiala Shah's firm declared insolvent. This application is dated 19th March 1924. It was dismissed on 29th August 1924. In the meantime the trustees issued a notice to all creditors to appear before them and get their accounts compared and settled. It was stated that this should be done on or before 5th February 1924 so that they might participate in the partial dividend about to be distributed. Owing to the attempt to get the firm declared insolvent the plaintiffs did not appear before the trustees but later, namely, on 28th June 1925, did apply to the trustees to send them their proportionate share of the dividends. The trustees replied on 11th July 1925 asking the plaintiffs to come and settle their accounts with them.

The plaintiffs refrained from doing so and finally instituted the present suit on 17th February 1928 against the trustees for rendition of accounts, enforcement of the trust and recovery of the amount that might be found to be due to the plaintiffs. They stated in the plaint that it was the duty of the defendants to render an account relating to the administration of the trust to the plaintiffs as they were some of the persons for whose benefit the trust was created. They claimed that the amounts due to the three firms on 2nd December 1927 were Rs. 19,641-10-9, Rs. 1,368-2-0 and Rs. 1,072-5-0; total, Rs. 22,082-1-9. They further claimed that Khiala Shah entered them in the deed of trust itself as creditors for the sums of Rs. 11,300, Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 847-4-0 respectively, and that this admission was binding upon the trustees. They also claimed to be treated in the same way as the creditors to whom payments had already been made. There was an allegation that the trustees had been negligent in their duties in certain respects.

The defendants denied the right of the plaintiffs to demand an account as they were not beneficiaries. They admitted their liability to the debtor Khiala Shah only, but stated that they were willing to schedule the debts of the plaintiffs if proved. They added that the plaintiffs had refused to do so. They denied the plaintiffs' right to be treated on an equal footing with the other creditors because of their obstinacy and because some of the dividends had already been paid. Negligence was denied.

The trial Judge held that there was only one beneficiary, Khiala Shah himself, the trust being created for his benefit only. He also held that the creditors who had signed Sch. 6 in token of their agreement, might also claim to be beneficiaries, but that it could not be argued that the plaintiffs, who had not signed, were. For these reasons the Judge held that the plaintiffs could not rely upon the admission of Khiala Shah in the trust deed and that it was their duty to prove to the satisfaction of the trustees what was due to them. This they had never done and had not even done in Court. He therefore dismissed the suit leaving the parties to bear their own costs.

The suit had been valued for the purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction at Rs. 2,100. The plaintiffs accordingly appealed against the decree of the trial Judge to the District Judge. He found that the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction was more than Rs. 5,000 and he returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court.

Thereupon the plaintiffs presented the appeal to this Court and at the same time presented a petition on the revision side against the order of the District Judge returning the memorandum of appeal. This Revision Petition No. 483 of 1930 came before a Bench of this Court on 23rd February 1932. This Bench dismissed the petition, pointing out that the plaintiffs claimed payment of a sum of Rs. 22,082 in full or pro rata on the realisations made by the trust. Further they claimed accounts; a personal decree against the trustees and the removal of the trustees. It had been disclosed and admitted before the Bench that the trust realised and paid a dividend of five annas seven pies to the creditors who had proved their claims, this being on principal alone. As the claim therefore of the plaintiffs, whether good or bad, was for at least five annas on Rs. 22,000, the jurisdictional value was over Rs. 5,000 and the appeal lay to this Court. It was added that when and if the stamp had been made good and the appeal presented, the question of limitation would be considered. Thereafter the plaintiffs paid Court-fees on Rs. 6,875 being what they stated they were entitled to on account of past dividends. It has been held by another Bench that the appeal to this Court was within time. The appeal is therefore before us to be decided on the merits only to the extent as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the sum of Rs. 6,875 or less on account of past dividends.

The terms of the deed have already been partly given. Certain other terms must now be set out. If any other debt to the extent of Rs. 2,000 was shown by the books to be due by Khiala Shah, the Committee were to pay the same. If however a debt of more than Rs. 2,000 was proved to be due by him, the trustees were not liable but Khiala Shah himself was responsible for payment thereof. Again, the trustees were authorised to sell his moveable and immovable property and recover the debts due to him in any manner they liked. Similarly, they were to distribute the money realised rateably amongst his creditors. The proposal of the committee, whom he consulted (to which he also agreed) was that principal amounts should be proportionately paid to the creditors without interest. But the committee was authorised to make payments to his creditors in whatever way it liked. The above is contained in paras. 4 and 5 of the deed. Two of the debts due to the plaintiffs are specifically set forth in paras. 13 and 14 of the deed. Khiala Shah admitted that Rs. 11,300 on account of principal, without interest, was due by him to Jawahar Singh and Sons of Lahore. He added that if it was proved that he owed more than the above amount as principal to Jawahar Singh and Sons, he himself and not the committee would be responsible for payment thereof. Similarly, he admitted about Rs. 1,000 to be due to Jawahar Singh-Kartar Singh Babar of Amritsar. If the principal was proved to be more than the said amount, he himself was to be responsible for the payment of the additional amount. The third amount is in the schedule. Again, in para. 15 it was said that the debts should be proportionately paid to all his creditors alike. The law relating to these trust deeds is now well settled. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 28, para. 71, at p. 38, it is said that :

If a debtor conveys property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, who are not parties to the conveyance, and to whom the fact of its execution is not communicated, the conveyance merely operates as a power to the trustees to apply the property in satisfying their claims; and inasmuch as the debtor himself is in fact the only cestui que trust, it is revocable by him before the property is so applied, and cannot be enforced by the creditors. A trust in favour of creditors is not however revocable if the creditors are parties to or assent to the conveyance, or if the fact of its execution is communicated to them.

It follows that a trust was created in favour of the creditors who signed Sch. 6, and if the deed was communicated to the other creditors, it would also create a trust in favour of them. This seems to have been the view taken in 25 Cal 642 (1). In 39 R R 251 (2) it was held that :

If property be conveyed by a debtor in trust for the benefit of creditors, who are neither parties nor privy to the deed, the deed merely operates as a power to the trustees to apply the property in payment of debts, and such power is revocable by the debtor.

At p. 253 of the report the question was considered whether a communication by the trustees to creditors of the fact of such a trust would not defeat the power of revocation by the debtor, and it was held that it would. In 101 R R

81 (3) at p. 89, where the subject is again discussed, it was said that :

When the creditor is a party to the arrangement, the presumption then is that the deed was intended to create a trust in his favour, which he therefore is entitled to call on the trustees to execute. So even though he be not made a party, if the debtor has given him notice of the existence of the deed, and has expressly or impliedly told him that he may look to the trust property for payment of his demand, the creditor may thereby become a cestui que trust and may acquire a right as such, just as if he had been a party and had executed the deed.

Notice of the trust was given by the debtor before it was executed and by the trustees after its execution to the plaintiffs and it must be held that they are cestui que trust under the deed. It is impossible however to understand the attitude of the present plaintiffs in refusing to show their books to the trustees so that the accounts could be compared, or to prove these accounts in Court when an opportunity was offered to them to do so. In fact they filed in Court a complete copy of their accounts taken from their books but did not proceed to prove those accounts. Had they done so the case would probably have ended in their favour partially, at any rate, in the Court below and this appeal would have been unnecessary. This being the state of the law, it must be held that the appellants are beneficiaries as well as creditors under the trust deed, but not to the extent they claim in their plaint, for Khiala Shah has only admitted the principal debts to be Rs. 11,300, Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 847-4-0. It is not quite clear whether the trustees have paid dividends merely on the principal amounts admitted or whether they have also included interest. If the dividends have been paid only on the principal sums, a dividend of five annas seven pies would come to about Rs. 4,588 on Rupees 13,147-4-0. The claim of the plaintiffs-appellants is for Rs. 6,875. The learned counsel appearing for the appellants has stated before us that he does not now claim on behalf of his clients that the dividends already distributed to other creditors should be reduced or that they should be made to refund anything. He is content that his clients be allowed their pro rata share of the dividends already paid, out of the property still re-remaining to be sold or the debts still remaining to be realised. He has also agreed that before any other dividend is declared his clients will go into the accounts with the trustees. We accordingly accept this appeal to the extent of decreeing in favour of the plaintiffs the sum to which they are entitled under the trust deed as their share of the dividends already declared. This sum probably lies between Rs. 4,588 and the sum of Rs. 6,875, and it will be the duty of the trial Court in execution proceedings, if necessary, to work out the amount, which will depend upon the principle adopted by the trustees with regard to the other debts. This sum which is found due will be paid out of the assets lying with the trustees or out of the proceeds of property still to be realised and the past distribution will not be disturbed in order to pay it. It will also be added in the decree that before the plaintiffs are entitled to future dividends, they must have their accounts compared by the trustees. As the appeal has been rendered necessary by the plaintiffs' own obstinacy, parties will bear their own costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 64 of 1932, Decided on 10th June 1935, against order of Dalip Singh, J., D/- 14th October 1932.

(a) Res judicata—Representative suit—Public or private right claimed in common with others—Person may litigate bona fide and bind by S. 11, Civil P. C., others interested, by findings, though others not named—Under O. 1, R. 8 with Court's leave person may sue or be sued for others interested—But formalities provided must be observed—Failure binds none but himself.

A person may litigate bona fide in respect of a public or private right claiming it in common for himself and others and by virtue of S. 11, Civil P. C., bind all persons interested in such right by the findings arrived at in his suit. In such cases it may not be necessary even to name the persons expressly in the suit. Or on the other hand, under O. 1, R. 8, he may obtain the leave of the Court to sue or be sued on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. In these circumstances he shall have to observe all the formalities laid down in the section, and if he fails to do so, persons other than himself will not be bound by any decision arrived at in the suit. [P 14 C 1, 2]

A suit for ejectment was instituted by a proprietor of a village who was also a lambardar, on behalf of himself as well for other persons interested in the matter of the suit. The suit was dismissed on the merits. Afterwards two other proprietors of the village instituted a suit against the same defendants and for the same relief on behalf of the whole proprietary body under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. It was contended that the subsequent suit was barred as res judicata :

Held : that the test to be applied was whether the previous litigation was bona fide and whether any injury had resulted to the plaintiffs in the subsequent suit on account of the omission to comply with the provision of O. 1, R. 8 in the former suit. The previous litigation could not be said to be not bona fide nor had any injury resulted to the present plaintiffs by omission to comply with O. 1, R. 8. Hence findings in previous suit barred the subsequent suit on ground of res judicata : 1920 Mad 568, Rel. on.

Din Mohammad, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the order of Dalip Singh, J.

The facts bearing upon the point of law involved in this case may shortly be stated. The defendants-respondents built a wall on a piece of the village common land which formed part of the abadi. Thereupon one Nand Lal, who, besides being a proprietor in the village, was a lambardar as well, instituted a suit for the ejectment of the defendants and expressly alleged in the plaint that he was claiming that relief for himself and for all the other persons interested therein. The defendants resisted the suit on the ground inter alia that Nand Lal was incompetent to sue alone. The Subordinate Judge however decided this point against the defendants, but dismissed Nand Lal's suit on the merits. On appeal the case was remanded, but even the Second Subordinate Judge, to whom the case was sent, again dismissed it on the merits. The appeal against this order abated on 13th December 1927. On 21st March 1929, the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by two other proprietors of the village on behalf of the whole proprietary body under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., impleading Nand Lal as a co-defendant along with the other offending defendants. The contesting defendants contended inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation and by the rule of res judicata. Without framing any issues on the merits of the case the Subordinate Judge resolved these two pleas into issues and without definitely deciding the question of limitation came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata on the ground that the previous suit had been instituted in a representative capacity. On appeal the Senior Subordinate Judge disagreed with this conclusion and remanded the case for disposal in accordance with law. From this order the defendants took an appeal to this Court which was heard by Dalip Singh, J. He accepted the appeal, set aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. It is from this order that the present appeal has been preferred. The sole question for determination in this case is whether Nand Lal's suit was a representative suit so as to bar the present suit by its findings. In order to arrive at a decision on this point it will be necessary to refer to Expl. 6 of S. 11, and O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., which for facility of reference are produced below:

Explanation 6, reads as follows:

Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating.

Order 1, R. 8, says :

Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit, on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. . . .

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that these provisions of law are not independent of one another and that Expl. 6 is controlled by O. 1, R. 8. Be that as it may, as we read the above provisions we find that a man may litigate bona fide in respect of a public or private right claiming it in common for himself and others and by virtue of S. 11, Civil P. C., bind all persons interested in such right by the findings arrived at in his suit. In such cases it may not be necessary even to name the persons expressly in the suit. Or, on the other hand, under O. 1, R. 8, he may obtain the leave of the Court to sue or be sued on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. In these circumstances he shall have to observe all the formalities laid down in the section, and if he fails to do so, persons other than himself will not be bound by any decision arrived at in that suit.

Counsel for the appellants had relied on 56 Mad 657 (1), but that judgment does not go so far as to support the appellants' contention entirely. In the first place in that case, as will appear from p. 672, of the report, no reference to representation had been made at the time of the institution of the suit and their Lordships observed that this omission could not be regarded as a mere question of form. Secondly, at p. 677 while considering 43 Mad 487 (2), their Lordships observed that :

They would not exclude the possibility of a decree being within the benefit of the explanation where the litigation having been bona fide the omission to comply with the conditions of the rule has been inadvertent, and no injury from the omission has been sustained by the plaintiff in the second suit.

The Madras judgment that was referred to by their Lordships laid down as follows :

Explanation 6, to S. 11, Civil P. C., applied not only to cases where leave of Court has been granted under O. 1, R. 8, but also to cases where some of the persons claiming a private right in common with others litigate bona fide on behalf of themselves and such others.

It is significant that this judgment was not overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In our view therefore the test that is to be applied in such cases is whether the previous litigation was bona fide and whether any injury had resulted to the plaintiffs on account of the omission to comply with the provisions of R. 8 of O. 1. This will be a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case as it arises. Judging by this standard, we are not in a position to hold that Nand Lal's litigation was not bona fide and that injury had been sustained by the present plaintiffs on account of his not having applied under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. As stated above, it was expressly mentioned in his plaint that the suit was being instituted for the benefit of the entire proprietary body of the village. Not only this, both Bishen Singh and Bansil, who have now started the litigation and undertaken to contest it on behalf of the entire proprietary body, themselves appeared as witnesses in the previous suit as P. W. 2 and P. W. 4, respectively, and supported the plaintiffs. It cannot reasonably be contended on their behalf therefore that they had been left in the dark as to the institution of the previous suit or as to the nature of the relief claimed by Nand Lal. Had they not been satisfied with its conduct, they would have at once taken steps in the matter and applied for being made parties to the suit. Not having done so, the only irresistible conclusion is that Nand Lal was prosecuting the previous case in a bona fide manner and was completely safeguarding the interest of the entire proprietary body. We are rather disposed to think that the present litigation has not been started in a bona fide manner and is a mere attempt to avoid the previous judgment which, as stated above, had been delivered twice against the then plaintiff Nand Lal on full consideration of the facts of the case.

In these circumstances we affirm the decision of Dalip Singh, J., and dismiss this appeal. We however make no order as to costs.

The accused were found guilty of offences under Ss. 460 and 366 read with S. 149, I. P. C., and were sentenced to very long terms of imprisonment. No harm was caused to the abducted girl as she was soon rescued and the only harm done was grievous injury caused to one of the inmates of the house wherefrom the girl was abducted during the transaction :

(b) Criminal Trial—Sentence—Lorry engaged for abducting girl—Driver ignorant of purpose—Not participating in crime in initial stages—Becoming particeps criminis afterwards—Compelled to continue by circumstances—One year's imprisonment reduced to six months.

A motor lorry was engaged for the purpose of abducting a girl. The driver of the lorry was ignorant of the criminal purpose as the lorry had been engaged through a contractor. He did not take any part in the crime in its initial stages but became particeps criminis after the girl, who was screaming, was brought to the lorry. He however continued to do his part of the work :

Held : that the driver was in a difficult position and might have felt bound to carry on because of circumstances, hence sentence should be reduced from one year's imprisonment to that of six months.

R. L. Anand II—for Appellant.

Nazir Hussain—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellants have been convicted under Ss. 460 and 366 read with S. 149, I. P. C., and sentenced to various long terms of imprisonment. They have appealed as follows : Kartar Singh and Ujagar Singh through Sardar Jowahir Singh ; Gopal through Mr. Sachdev ; Sohan Singh and Diwan Singh through Mr. J. G. Sethi ; Rahim Bakhsh through Mr. Bashir Ahmad ; Mahommad Shafi through Mr. Ram Lal Anand II ; and the other three appellants, Labh Singh, Allah Ditta and Piara Singh, through the Superintendent of Jail. The Crown has been represented by Chaudhri Nazir Hussain. The case for the prosecution is that the principal appellant Kartar Singh had made overtures for the hand of Mt. Budhan, the abducted girl, to her father Kesar Singh, lam-bardar of Badiana in the Sialkot District. These overtures were rejected although Kartar Singh and his relations including his uncle Diwan Singh pressed the suit. On the night between 19th and 20th October a party of men suddenly appeared in the house of Kesar Singh, which is on the outskirts of the village, overpowered the inmates and carried off Mt. Budhan by force from her mother's bed in which she had taken refuge. Her father Kesar Singh was knocked senseless by a blow on the head with a chavi. Other persons in the house received minor injuries. The girl was dragged off naked and screaming to a waiting motor lorry where she was given some clothes. The lorry then drove off at considerable speed towards Kartar Singh's village Trigri in the Gujranwala District, which is about 25 miles away. But it so happened that where the road crossed the canal bridge at Daska, its way was blocked by another motor lorry. This motor lorry was conveying a party of police and notables, which had effected a raid and search for stolen property and was returning home. The abductors' lorry had to stop. The girl seeing policemen in uniform called out and the police party rescued her and captured most of the people in the lorry. According to the prosecution two or three escaped.

This is the case for the prosecution. I have not the slightest doubt that in its main outlines it is true and that all the people captured on the spot were rightly convicted. Sohan Singh and Diwan Singh were not so captured and were not mentioned in the memorandum which the Sub-Inspector in charge of the party prepared at the spot. They are named in the first information report lodged by Mt. Jassi, mother of the girl, at their local police station. Although they were well known to the inmates of the house, nothing specific is assigned to them beyond beating Kesar Singh. Sohan Singh is the brother of Kartar Singh, Diwan Singh is his uncle, and the probability is that they were implicated on a suspicion that they were privy to the plot; but that is not proof that they were actually concerned in the abduction. I accept their appeals and acquit them. On behalf of Ujagar Singh it was urged that he was a chance passenger in the lorry. He was unfortunately found in possession of an unlicensed pistol. It was also urged that Gopal was one of the bystanders and arrested under mistaken identity, and a similar allegation was made about Rahim Bakhsh. Rahim Bakhsh however belongs to Kartar Singh's village.

In my opinion, except Sohan Singh and Diwan Singh, the appellants were rightly convicted; but the sentences are much too severe. Kartar Singh is a man who might have married Mt. Budhan. Her age is given as 18, his age as 30; he is said to be unmarried and he is a distant connexion by marriage of Kesar Singh. Mt. Budhan was asked in cross-examination whether he had not given Rs. 200 to her father for betrothal; but this was denied and there is no evidence either as to betrothal or as to the money paid. There is nothing at all to support a discreditable written statement, which Kartar Singh put in, to the effect that he was on intimate terms with the girl who had sent for him to take her away. Nevertheless, except for the grievous injury to Kesar Singh, no great harm was done and the girl was rescued. The Magistrate sentenced Kartar Singh to a total of ten years' rigorous imprisonment, those who went in the house to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and those who stayed outside to guard against surprise to three years' rigorous imprisonment. I think these sentences are too severe, and reduce them as follows: Kartar Singh, the principal appellant, to two years' rigorous imprisonment; Labh Singh, his uncle, who went inside, to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment; the others, except Mohammad Shafi, the lorry driver, to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The case of Mohammad Shafi is different. He stayed with the lorry and took no active part in the earlier stages of the abduction. There is evidence that the lorry was hired through a contractor by Kartar Singh and that the owner of the lorry ordered Shafi to take it. It is quite probable that before the lorry started on its journey, he did not know for what purpose it was required. But when it halted at dead of night at the village, of Badiana, still more when a naked screaming girl was dragged to the lorry, he became particeps criminis. Still he was in a difficult position and may have felt bound to carry on. I reduce the sentence in his case to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Asa Ram Aggarwal — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge, Montgomery, in proceedings relating to the liquidation of a company named the Radhe Sham Beopar Company Limited. The Liquidators sought to place the respondents on the list of contributories on the ground that they were purchasers of certain shares. The respondents objected stating that the shares had never been validly allotted to them. The learned District Judge has upheld this objection and from this decision the present appeal has been preferred.

The facts alleged by the Liquidators were that the respondents had applied for the shares, on 10th August 1930 and a sum of Rs. 250 had been paid along with the application. The allotment is said to have been made on 17th October 1931. On 2nd March 1932 a letter was issued to the respondents asking them to pay the allotment money as well as the call money. They at once repudiated the allotment stating that it was fraudulent and that they had received no notice about it earlier. The main point for decision was whether the shares had been allotted to the respondents according to law. The learned District Judge has held that the allotment ought to have been made within a reasonable time and as it was not admittedly made till 17th October 1931, it was invalid. In support of this decision he has relied on 1 Ex. 109 (1). The learned counsel for the appellants sought to distinguish this ruling on the ground that it applies only to a going concern and not to a company which has gone into liquidation. In support of this argument he has relied on 54 L J Ch D 550 (2). But in that case the shareholder had been communicated the allotment before the liquidation proceedings and had not repudiated it within a reasonable time. The decision in 1 Ex. 109 (1) is not based on any such distinction, as far as I can see, as the learned counsel for the appellant has sought to draw. I further note that the liquidators have produced no evidence at all to show that any notice of allotment was sent on 17th October 1931.

It was urged that the names of the share-holders appeared on the register of the company, but it is not shown when their names were brought on the register. No evidence was led by the Liquidators and the letter which was issued on 2nd March 1932 calling for an allotment money appears to be highly suspicious in view of the fact that the company resolved to go into liquidation on 3rd March 1932, i. e., the next day.

In my opinion the decision of the learned District Judge is correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mt. Kishno—Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 636 of 1930, Decided on 22nd February 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 24th February 1930.

Custom (Punjab) — Widow — Forfeiture—Ludhiana Jats—No forfeiture for unchastity if husband's house is not left.

Among the Hindu Jats, to which class the Ludhiana Jats belong, mere unchastity involves no penalty of forfeiture of a widow's right to her husband's estate so long as she does not leave her husband's house : 25 P. R. 1891, not foll. [P 18 C 1]

Badri Das—for Appellants.

Inder Dev for Achhru Ram—for Respondent.

Coldstream, J.—Chanda Singh, a Khahgoora Jat of Ludhiana Tahsil, died about 1918, leaving a widow Musammat Kishno who took possession of his property, about 36 bighas of land, a house and two residential sites. On 9th November 1926, Phuman Singh and thirteen other collaterals of Chanda Singh instituted a suit for possession of Chanda Singh's land alleging that Musammat Kishno had forfeited her right by her unchastity. The trial Court decreed the suit, but on appeal the District Judge of Ludhiana, while holding it established that Musammat Kishno had been unchaste (she had given birth to an illegitimate child some months before the suit) dismissed the suit because he found it not proved that Mt. Kishno had left her husband's house. Against this decision the collaterals have appealed, the learned District Judge having granted a certificate on the question whether Mt. Kishno can be deprived of her widow's estate although she has not left her husband's house.

It is contended by Mr. Badri Das that the lower Court's decision is not justified by the evidence on the record. He relies mainly on a riwaj-i-am compiled in 1882 from information given by tribes of the locality to which the parties belong which declares the custom to be that an unchaste widow is deprived of her right in her deceased husband's estate and goes on to define an unchaste widow as one who is habitually unchaste and gives birth to illegitimate children. He has also referred us to the often-cited ruling, 25 P R 1891 (1) and to two judgments of Munsifs delivered in 1922 and 1895 (Suit No. 79 of 1922 and Suit No. 180 of 1895). In reply reliance is placed by the respondent's Counsel on the riwaj-i-am prepared at the time of the settlement of 1911. The rule there stated (in answer to Question No. 42) is that among Hindu Jats mere unchastity involves no penalty:

So long as the widow does not leave her husband's house she is safe; on leaving his house she is generally dispossessed.

This is important evidence raising a presumption against the appellants. We have been led through the evidence of I. Sobhi v. Bhana, (1891) 25 P R 1891, both sides by the appellants' Counsel and I find that there is a good deal of evidence, including several judicial decisions, going to show that the custom was rightly declared in this riwaj-i-am and that this evidence is much more weighty than that put forward by the appellants. Seeing no sufficient reason for interfering with the decision of the Court below I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Faqir Chand Mital—for Respondents.

Sale, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession by redemption of 515 kanals, 9 marlas of land without payment or on payment of such amount as the Court may deem just. The area in suit was part of a plot of 4890 kanals, 8 marlas mortgaged by Ganda Singh, deceased, father of the plaintiff, to Hazari Mal, deceased, father of defendant 3, by deed dated 12th April 1882. As a result of a series of transactions in respect of this land, which will be recited in due course, the area in suit, 515 kanals, 9 marlas, came into the possession of Jaimal Singh, deceased father of defendant 1 in 1905. The defence is, briefly stated, that Jaimal Singh had purchased this land in full proprietary rights in execution of a decree on 6th January 1905 that the plaintiff's mortgage rights in this land had by then been extinguished and that the suit for possession by redemption brought by the plaintiff is not maintainable. This plea was upheld by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge who dismissed the suit accordingly. On appeal the learned additional District Judge reversed this finding holding that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee in respect of the said land still subsists and that the rights and liabilities of the parties must be determined according to the terms of the mortgage deed of 1882 executed by the plaintiff's father in favour of Hazari Mal. He accordingly accepted the appeal and remanded the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. for a fresh decision on the merits. The sole point urged in this second appeal is that Jaimal Singh, deceased father of defendant-appellant Narain Singh, had purchased the land in dispute in full proprietary right at a Court auction sale in 1905 and that the redemption suit by the plaintiff is not, therefore maintainable.

It must be mentioned here that in 1918 the present plaintiff, who is the posthumous son of Ganda Singh, the mortgagor of 1882, sued for possession of a total area of 972 kanals, 16 marlas, which included the land now in suit and secured a decree from the then Senior Subordinate Judge. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the Senior Subordinate Judge's decree in respect of an area of 457 kanals, 7 marlas, but so far as the area of 515 kanals, 9 marlas now in suit was concerned, he accepted the appeal, on a technical ground to which reference will be made in due course. The plaintiff did not sue for possession by redemption on payment of the mortgage charges, but for possession by avoidance of the mortgage on the strength of a decree obtained by his elder brother Asa Singh on 11th August 1900 as representing the reversioners of the original mortgagor Ganda Singh (since deceased), to the effect that this mortgage did not affect their reversionary rights. The District Judge decided to leave the question as to the plaintiff's title to the 515 kanals, 9 marlas, which he held had not been established in that suit, undecided for determination in a regular suit for redemption "if the plaintiff is competent to sue for redemption." The decision of the District Judge was confirmed in second appeal to this Court by a Division Bench on 26th April 1928 (Civil Appeal No. 2155 of 1924). The litigation that has given rise to this appeal is a consequence of the decision in the previous case to leave undecided the question whether the plaintiff was competent to sue for redemption of the particular area now in suit.

It is now necessary to recite the material circumstances leading up to the transaction by which Jaimal Singh, father of defendant 3, obtained possession of the land in suit on 6th January 1905. It has already been stated that Ganda Singh, father of the plaintiff, mortgaged an area including the land in suit to Hazari Mal, predecessor-in-interest of one of the defendants-appellants by deed dated 12th April 1882. In 1885 Nihal Singh, predecessor-in-interest of one of the defendants-appellants in execution of a decree, attached the mortgagee rights of Hazari Mal embodied in the mortgage deed of 1882, and later himself purchased these mortgagee rights over a total area of 1076 kanals, 19 marlas (including the area now in suit). Thus Nihal Singh became the mortgagee of this land under the mortgage of 1882. On 20th April 1889 Nihal Singh obtained a decree on this mortgage. The land was sold in execution; and was purchased (after Nihal Singh's death) by his sons Ishar Singh and Mangal Singh. On 20th October 1897 Ishar Singh and Mangal Singh duly obtained possession of the mortgaged area of 1076 kanals, 19 marlas, including the land now in suit. On 28th March 1894, the mortgagee rights of the deceased Nihal Singh under the mortgage of 1882, together with his rights under the decree of 1889, were mortgaged to Kishore Chand and Kanshi Ram Khatris. On 13th March 1897 Kishore Chand and Kanshi Ram sued Nihal Singh's sons Ishar Singh and Mangal Singh for recovery of their money secured by this mortgage and obtained a decree on 13th July 1897 with an order that the money should be realized by sale of the property mortgaged. The land in question was sold by the Court in execution of this decree and on 21st November 1904 Jaimal Singh, father of one of the defendants-appellants, purchased the area now in suit, (515 kanals 9 marlas) at this auction sale.

It is conceded in appeal that the lower appellate Court was right in holding that what Jaimal Singh acquired at this auction was the right, title and interest in the property held by the judgment-debtors, Ishar Singh and Mangal Singh, sons of Nihal Singh. The case for the defendants-appellants is that Nihal Singh had become a full owner of the land in suit and that accordingly the right, title and interest, which Jaimal Singh had purchased at the auction sale on 6th January 1905, was the full proprietary rights in the land and not merely the mortgagee rights. It is necessary at this stage to mention that on 7th May 1898 Asa Singh, son of Ganda Singh, the original mortgagor, (and elder brother of the present plaintiff Waryam Singh) sued for a declaration that the mortgage of 1882 and the decree obtained by Nihal Singh in 1885 should not affect his reversionary rights. He obtained an ex parte decree on 11th August 1900, a decree which still subsists. In 1903 Asa Singh died and in 1916 Ganda Singh died, his successor-in-interest being his posthumous son, Waryam Singh, the present plaintiff. In the previous suit brought by Waryam Singh, to which reference has already been made, it was decided, (and the decision was affirmed in appeal by a Division Bench of this Court), (i) that the decree, which was obtained by Asa Singh on 11th August 1900, enured for the benefit of the present plaintiff Waryam Singh and (2) that this decree was binding on the alienees. The only reason why Waryam Singh had failed in the previous suit to obtain possession of the 515 kanals, 9 marlas of land covered by the present litigation was the technical one that Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand, the mortgagees of the area in 1894, had not been impleaded in Asa Singh's declaratory suit of 1898 and that the declaratory decree was not therefore binding on Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand and their successors-in-interest. Jaimal Singh, as the auction-purchaser of this land, was held in that suit to be the successor-in-interest of the decree-holders Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand. In regard to this decision the lower appellate Court has observed that the auction-purchaser cannot be looked upon as the successor-in-interest of the decree-holder in any sense.

As held in 6 Lah 544 (1), the auction-purchasers of property attached in execution of a decree, are the representatives of the judgment-debtor. In the present case it has, in fact, been pleaded that Jaimal Singh as the auction-purchaser is the representative-in-interest not of Kishore Chand and Kanshi Ram but of Nihal Singh. But this plea, as pointed out by the lower appellate Court, is inconsistent with the position taken by the defendants in the previous case, where it was pleaded that the defendants were the successors-in-interest of Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand and that because Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand had not been made parties to the declaratory suit by Asa Singh, they were entitled to repudiate, as not binding on them, the declaratory decree, impugning the mortgage made in their favour in March 1894. Litigants cannot be permitted to take up inconsistent pleas in this way to suit their own purpose. In the previous case the defendants defeated Waryam Singh's suit in respect of 515 kanals, 9 marlas by claiming to be representatives-in-interest of Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand. Waryam Singh has sued again in respect of this same area, and defendant cannot now be heard to claim succession to Nihal Singh and his sons against whom Kanshi Ram and Kishan Chand secured a mortgage decree. In any case Kanshi Ram and Kishore Chand had obtained a mere mortgage decree against Nihal Singh's sons; and it was in execution of this mortgage decree that Jaimal Singh purchased an interest in the land in 1905. Although, therefore, there may have been no privity of contract between Waryam Singh and Jaimal Singh, we hold that Jaimal Singh purchased the land in suit subject to Waryam Singh's equity of redemption which still subsisted and we find therefore that Waryam Singh is entitled to redeem the land.

In the previous case brought by Waryam Singh the District Judge expressed the view, in a judgment which still stands, that the plaintiff Waryam Singh could be granted possession of the land now in suit by redemption of the mortgage subsisting on it. It has been urged before us in appeal that this decision operates as res judicata; it could not be, since the opinion was really obiter for the purposes of that case. But we have, for reasons already stated, independently come to a decision uniform with the decision reached in the previous litigation. We confirm the decision of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs. The cross-objections were not argued and are dismissed with costs.

Misc. Appeal No. 24 of 1935, Decided on 3rd April 1935, from decision of Senior Sub-J., Shahpur, D/- 7th November 1934.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Applicability—Decision on custom is not final—It is only relevant instance under S. 13, Evidence Act.

A decision on custom is not a final decision. It only becomes a relevant instance under S. 13, Evidence Act, that such a right has been asserted and recognized. It is always necessary to assert and prove what the custom is. [P 22 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Ancestral land—Tiwanas of Punjab—Unrestricted right of alienation doubtful—Quaere.

Quaere—It is doubtful whether a custom giving right to alienate ancestral land exists among the Tiwanas of the Punjab. [P 22 C 1]

(c) Custom (Punjab)—Reversioner—Rights—His right is deferred and is vested interest.

The right of the reversionary heir under custom is a right in property, the enjoyment of which is deferred and it is a vested interest though only in the sense that the person in whom it inheres has a present fixed right to its future enjoyment. [P 22 C 1]

(d) Custom (Punjab)—Succession—Tiwanas—Widow—Widows do not take absolute interest.

Amongst Tiwanas, who do not follow Mahomedan law but custom, widows only succeed for their lives and other females take under special conditions. They do not take an absolute interest but they defer the enjoyment of the estate by a reversioner. [P 22 C 1]

(e) Custom (Punjab)—Reversioner—Rights of—Reversioner inherits from common ancestor.

Everywhere under custom there is a right of alienation to a greater or smaller extent but the agnatic theory is the basis and foundation of all custom and the reversioner, whether son or not, is always looked upon as inheriting to the common ancestor and not from the last owner.

(f) Custom (Punjab)—Ancestral property—Ancestral property sought to be attached—Litigant can prove that holder is legal representative.

It is open to a creditor to plead a custom that the person in possession of ancestral property, which it is sought to attach is the legal representative of the deceased debtor and that the property is deemed to be the property of the said debtor and the successor of the debtor inherits the property from the debtor and is his legal representative: 1919 Lah 145, Rel. on. [P 22 C 1, 2]

(g) Custom (Punjab)—Succession—Ancestral property—Reversioner—Reversioner does not succeed as legal representative.

The idea of a reversioner succeeding to ancestral property as the legal representative of a deceased person, is ordinarily foreign to the foundation on which custom in the Punjab rests; he succeeds by virtue of his connexion through the common ancestor. [P 22 C 2]

(h) Custom (Punjab)—Ancestral land—Reversioner or major son not liable for debt of last holder—Ancestral land cannot be attached or sold to meet debts.

The reversioner or a major son, who is in possession of the ancestral land, is not liable to pay the debts of the last holder out of the ancestral land which came to him through the common ancestor and such land cannot be attached or sold in their hands to meet those debts: 4 P R 1913 and 1919 Lah 145, Rel. on. [P 22 C 2, P 23 C 1]

Addison, Ag. C. J.—Jaimal Singh obtained a money decree against K. B. Muzaffar Khan. Both the decree-holder and judgment-debtor are dead. The legal representatives of the decree-holder took out execution against the son of K. B. Muzaffar Khan, namely Malik Ahmad Yar Khan, and attached a certain area of ancestral land. It was objected by Malik Ahmad Yar Khan that this ancestral property could not be attached in view of the Full Bench decisions in 4 P R 1913 (1) and 17 P R 1919 (2). His objection has succeeded and the land has been released from attachment. Against this decision the representatives of the decree-holder have appealed. It is admitted that the judgment-debtor and his family are Tiwanas who are governed by custom. Only in one respect it is contended that the custom which governs them is at variance with the custom of the majority of tribes in the Punjab. This exception is said to be as regards their right to alienate land without restriction. This contention is based on a decision of this Court reported as 78 I C 451 (3). A decision on custom however is not a final decision. It only becomes a relevant instance under S. 13, Evidence Act, that such a right has been asserted and recognised. It is always necessary to assert and prove what the custom is, and there is not sufficient evidence on the present record to establish the unrestricted right of Tiwanas to alienate their ancestral land. It is doubtful, therefore, whether it can be said that such a custom does exist.

Assuming however that it does, it does not seem to me that this necessarily takes the case outside the principle laid down in the two Full Bench judgments referred to. The right of the reversionary heir under custom is a right in property the enjoyment of which is deferred and it is vested in interest though only in the sense that the person in whom it inheres has a present fixed right to its future enjoyment. A reversioner does not inherit from the last owner but from the common ancestor from whom his interest is derived. Amongst Tiwanas, who do not follow Mahomedan law but custom, widows only succeed for their lives and other females take under special conditions. They do not take an absolute interest but they defer the enjoyment of the estate by a reversioner. Everywhere under custom there is a right of alienation; in some cases that right is greater than in others but the agnatic theory is the basis and foundation of all custom and the reversioner, whether he is a son or not, is always looked upon as inheriting through the common ancestor and not from the last owner. As it was expressed in 17 P R 1919 (2), it is open to a litigant to plead a custom that the person in possession of ancestral property, which it is sought to attach, is the legal representative of the deceased debtor and that the property is deemed to be the property of the said debtor, i. e. that the successor of the debtor inherits the property from the debtor and is the legal representative as the term is usually understood. The idea of a reversioner succeeding to ancestral property as the legal representative of a deceased person is ordinarily foreign to the foundation on which all custom in the Punjab rests: he succeeds by virtue of his connection through the common ancestor. It is further contended however, that the son in this case might be looked upon as the legal representative of his father by reason of the answer given to Question 10 in S. 4, General Code of Tribal Custom in the Shahpur District compiled in 1896. In my judgment this is not so. This section deals merely with the relationship between guardians and wards and the powers under custom of the de facto guardian. The question is as follows:

Is a minor whose father is dead, and who has inherited the father's estate, liable for his father's debts? If such debts are not payable till the minor comes of age, can the property inherited be alienated in the interval?

The Answer is as follows:

All tribes except Khokhars: A minor who has inherited his father's estate is liable for his father's debts. Previous to his coming of age the guardian may arrange for their payment.

The reply of Khokhars was the same, except that it was added that the guardian cannot sell the minor's land to pay the father's debts. It seems to me that what this answer means is that the guardian of a minor can, just as the minor can when he attains majority pay his father's debts and sell the ancestral land which came to him through his father in order to do so. It does not mean that he succeeds his father as his legal representative. Although for the most part in the Punjab ancestral land is not liable under custom for the debts of the last-holder, it is frequently the case that these debts are met by the sons selling such land though they cannot be compelled to do so. The answer to the question means that the guardian has the same power in this respect as the son has when he attains majority. It seems to me that it is impossible to carry the answer in question further than I have done. Nowhere is it said that a reversioner or even a major son is liable to pay the debts of the last-holder out of the ancestral land which came to him through the common ancestor and that such land can be attached and sold in their hands to meet those debts. Surely a distant reversioner and major son ought to be liable if a minor son is. In the present case, the son is a major; this shows in a convincing way that the reply relied upon is merely a reply stating the power of the guardians and not showing that ancestral land is liable to attachment and sale to pay the debts of the last-holder thereof.

I am clear that it has not been established that the son succeeded as the legal representative of his father and I hold that the ancestral land is therefore not liable to be attached in execution of a decree against the father. I would therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Munshi Ram—Plaintiff—Appellant.

Mela Ram Wafa and another—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 1516 of 1933, Decided on 17th June 1935, from decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, D/- 16th June 1933.

(a) Tort—Defamation—Allegory may be libel—Definite imputation upon definite person must be proved—Article published in newspaper painting Sub-Inspector in Criminal Investigation Department in very dark colours—Cursory reading of article sufficient to connect it with person actually serving in Criminal Investigation Department—Identity held to be sufficiently established and proprietor of paper held liable to pay damages.

Even an allegory may be a libel, but in such cases there must be a definite imputation upon a definite person and that person must be the plaintiff. A narrative apparently fictitious may in fact be a libel upon a living person. If a writer intends to portray a real person under an imaginary name and chooses for that purposes what he supposes to be a fictitious name, he will nevertheless be liable if he happens to choose the name of a real person though he had no intention whatever of doing so. If the defendant's words have in fact injured the plaintiff's reputation it is no defence to an action that the defendant intended to refer to some one else. The plaintiff in such case of libel can aver extraneous facts to show that he was the person expressly referred to. It is not legally essential that the plaintiff should produce any persons who are said to have made enquiries from him after the publication of the article nor is it necessary that all the world should understand the libel. It is sufficient if those who know the plaintiff can make out that he is the person meant. Even want of malice and deliberateness will not be enough to protect the defendant. A man may be liable although he had not a particle of malice against the person defamed [P 25 C 1, 2]

Where a narrative in story form published in a newspaper painted one M, a Sub-Inspector in the Criminal Investigation Department, posted at L, in most abominable terms openly accusing him of crime, immorality vice and dishonourable conduct in the discharge of his official functions, and even a cursory reading of the story would have at once led any ordinary reasonable reader to connect it with M, a Sub-Inspector posted at L, who was officially concerned in the investigation of conspiracy cases and belonged to the Criminal Investigation Department :

Held: (1) that the identity was fully established and it was futile to argue that the writer did not intend to defame the real M, and that he had used the name at random as a mere representative of the class which was dealt with in the article; [P 25 C 1]

(2) that it was amply proved that it was M who was defamed and injured in his office and as no justification was pleaded he was entitled to general damages. [P 26 C 1]

(b) Tort—Defamation—Libel appearing in newspaper—Mere fact that proprietor has no knowledge of it does not absolve him.

The mere fact that the proprietor of a paper had no knowledge of the publication of libel in his paper cannot absolve him from being held liable. [P 26 C 1]

(c) Tort—Defamation—Words on face of them amounting to libel—Plaintiff can claim general damages without proof of actual pecuniary loss.

When on the face of it the words used by the defendant clearly must have injured the plaintiff's reputation, they are said to be actionable per se and the plaintiffs may recover a verdict for substantial amount without giving any evidence of actual pecuniary loss. General damages differ in this respect from special damages. [P 26 C 1]

(d) Tort—Defamation—Assessment of damages—One feature to be considered is method of publication—Publication in print is more serious.

One feature of a libel that must be considered in the assessment of damages is the method of its publication. Where it has been printed in a newspaper it may fall into any hands. Moreover a printed matter is generally of a most permanent character and people are disposed to believe what they generally see in print. Where therefore a libel is published in a newspaper the person defamed is entitled to substantial damages. [P 26 C 2]

Ram Lal (Dewan), Govt. Advocate and Assadullah Khan—for Appellant.

V. N. Sethi and Puran Chand Mehta—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Pandit Munshi Ram, an officiating Inspector in the Criminal Investigation Department, Punjab, at Lahore. It was brought against Pandit Mela Ram Wafa, proprietor of an Urdu newspaper of the name of "Vir Bharat" published at Lahore, and Asa Ram, its editor, printer and publisher, who was then undergoing imprisonment for sedition in the Campbellpur jail. It was to recover Rs. 5,100 from the defendants on account of damages for their publishing a defamatory article in a special Swarajya issue of the said paper, dated 19th May 1931. The suit was resisted on various grounds. It was contended inter alia that the plaintiff had no cause of action as the article, being a mere fictitious narrative, did not refer to him at all, that the circulation of the paper was ordinary and that, at any rate, the proprietor was not liable at all as he had taken no part either in the writing of the offending article or its publication. Only three issues were framed in the case, the first two referring to the identity of the plaintiff and the third to the quantum of damages. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the article in question did not relate to the plaintiff and consequently there was no reflection on his character or conduct. He further remarked that even if the plaintiff had succeeded in proving that the story related to him, he would have been entitled to a normal sum of Rs. 5 only by way of damages, as he had suffered no injury at all. At the same time while dismissing the plaintiff's suit, he did not award any costs to the defendants against him, as, to quote his own words, "the libel is of the most heinous character, and that it contains imputations of the worst sort and lowest character." From this decision, an appeal has been preferred to this Court.

The learned Government Advocate, who has appeared on behalf of the appellant, has strenuously contended that the findings of the Subordinate Judge on all the issues in the case are perverse, that there was ample evidence on the record to connect the plaintiff with Munshi Ram, Sub-Inspector, of the story, that the imputations were of the worst possible character, that they exposed the plaintiff to contempt, hatred and obloquy and that the plaintiff was consequently entitled to substantial damages and costs. Counsel for the respondents has reiterated the same grounds before us as were urged in the trial Court and has laid great stress on the fact that the story being a mere fiction was not aimed at any particular individual, and that accordingly no damages could be allowed against the respondents. The crucial point therefore in the case is whether it has been established by the plaintiff that the libel was aimed at him and that he could be easily recognized in the story by those who knew him.

It may be necessary here to produce the salient features of the narrative complained of. In the headlines of this narrative, which are in bolder print than the rest of the story, attention is drawn to a wicked Sub-Inspector killing an innocent person, to the method employed in the investigation of revolutionary crime, to a member of the secret police force turning approver, to the protection of a woman's honour presumably against the wickedness of the Sub-Inspector referred to therein, and to the interesting nature and eye-opening effect of the story. Then follows the story itself narrating how a young student accompanied by a young sister, of the names of Ram Nath and Bimla, respectively, arrived at the Lahore Railway Station, how they were inveigled by a C. I. D. man in disguise, how they were further entrapped into a Dharm-sala at Ram Gali, how a loaded pistol was smuggled under the pillow of Ram Nath and how Ram Nath was arrested in pathetic circumstances by one Munshi Ram, Sub-Inspector, who thundered in rage and arrested Ram Nath for the illicit possession of arms. After the departure of Ram Nath, the narrative brings the "evil natured Munshi Ram" in Bimla's room bent upon violating her chastity at any cost; the girl addresses him as father; but in spite of that, the lascivious Sub-Inspector first communicating his infernal desire in veiled language, afterwards bursts out openly and says "I want you". Bimla's abuses attract two cyclists to the scene of occurrence, one of whom is shot dead by the Sub-Inspector in the scuffle that ensues and the other is arrested on suspicion. In the meantime Bimla escapes. An interviewer later visits Ram Nath and informs him that he has been a victim of deception and that some man of the Criminal Investigation Department has fabricated this false case against him in conspiracy with his officers. It may be remarked here that in ordinary parlance the members of the Criminal Investigation Department are known as khufia police (secret police force). Even an allegory, as stated by Odgers on Libel and Slander at p. 21, may be a libel, but in such cases there must be a definite imputation upon a definite person; and that person must be the plaintiff. We have therefore to determine whether certainty as to the person defamed has been established before us. Even a cursory perusal of the story, as summarised above, will at once lead any ordinary reasonable reader to connect it with one Munshi Ram, Sub-Inspector of Police, who is officially concerned in the investigation of conspiracy cases and belongs to the Criminal Investigation Department, and when it is once proved that there is a real person of that name posted at Lahore and entrusted with similar work, the identity is fully established. In these circumstances, it is futile to argue that the writer did not intend to defame the real Munshi Ram and that he had used this name at random as a mere representative of the class which was dealt with in the article in question. The law on the subject is quite clear.

In the publication of matter which would be libellous if applying to an actual person, the responsibility is as follows: in the first place, there is responsibility for the words used being taken to signify that which readers would reasonably understand by them: In the second place, there is responsibility also for the names used being taken to signify those whom the readers would reasonably understand by those names; and in the third place, the same principle is applicable to persons unnamed but sufficiently indicated by designation or description. (per Lord Shaw at p. 128 of Odgers).

Again,

Libel is a tortious act. What does the tort consist in? It consists in using language which others knowing the circumstances would reasonably think to be defamatory of the person complaining of and injured by it. A person charged with libel cannot defend himself by showing that he intended in his own breast not to defame, or that he intended not to defame the plaintiff, if in fact he did both. . . . His intention in both respects equally is inferred from what he did. His remedy is to abstain from defamatory words (per Lord Loreburn, L. C., at p. 128 of Odgers).

A narrative apparently fictitious may be in fact a libel upon living persons. If a writer intends to portray a real person under an imaginary name and chooses for that purpose what he supposes to be a fictitious name, he will nevertheless be liable if he happens to choose the name of a real person, though he had no intention whatever of doing so. If the defendant's words have in fact injured the plaintiff's reputation, it is no defence to an action that the defendant intended them to refer to some one else (Odgers, p. 128). There is unimpeachable evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff at the time of the publication of the article was the only person connected with the Criminal Investigation Department, Lahore, bearing the name of Munshi Ram, that his substantive post was that of a Sub-Inspector, that he was generally entrusted with the investigation of revolutionary crime, that he had actually been concerned in an investigation of the case of two revolutionaries that occurred in the Ram Galli Dharamsala two years before and that the defendant Mela Ram Wafa was suspected by the Criminal Investigation Department of the Police to be in sympathy with the revolutionaries. The plaintiff in such cases of libel can aver extraneous facts to show that he was the person expressly referred to and all the circumstances mentioned above clearly indicate that it was he and none else who was made the target of the defendants' attack. The hit was so direct that there could be no mistake. The name which the plaintiff bears, the office which he holds, the department to which he belongs, and the work he generally does, were all expressed in such unmistakable terms as not to leave any doubt in the mind of any casual reader who was even slightly acquainted with the plaintiff that he was the person named. The law goes so far as to say:

Whether a man is called by one name, or whether he is called by another, or whether he is described by a pretended description of a class to which he is known to belong, if those who look on know well who is aimed at, the very same injury is inflicted; the very same thing is in fact done, as would be done if his name and Christian name were ten times repeated (per Lord Campbell, O. J., at p. 126, Odgers).

It has further been urged on behalf of the respondents that the plaintiff has not been able to produce any persons who are said to have made inquiries from him after the publication of this article, but this is not legally essential. Nor is it necessary that all the world should understand the libel. It is sufficient if those who know the plaintiff can make out that he is the person meant.

Even want of deliberateness and malice will not be enough to protect the defendants. As stated by Odgers, at pp. 4 and 5:

The intention or motive with which the words were employed is, as a rule, immaterial. If the defendant has in fact injured the plaintiff's reputation, he is liable, although he did not intend so to do, and had no such purpose in his mind when he wrote or spoke the words. Every man must be presumed to know and to intend the natural and ordinary consequences of his acts: The words are actionable, if false and defamatory, although published accidentally or inadvertently.

A man may be liable, although he had not a particle of malice against the person defamed. It has further been urged that the proprietor had no knowledge of the publication and was therefore free from blame. This again is an erroneous proposition of law to advance. In a case quoted by Odgers at p. 6, the proprietor of the "Times" retired to live in the country, leaving the entire management of the paper to his son, with whom he never interfered yet he was held criminally liable for a libel which appeared in the paper in his absence and without his knowledge. We have no hesitation in finding therefore that it has been amply proved that it was the plaintiff who was defamed and injured in his office and as no justification has been pleaded, he is entitled to general damages. This takes us to the question of the amount of damages, which would meet the ends of justice in this case. The Subordinate Judge has, as stated above, proposed a nominal sum of Rs. 5 in case the plaintiff's identity was established, on the ground that "the plaintiff has not suffered in any way in his pay or promotion and he has been getting regular increments." This again is based on a misconception of law. When on the face of them, the words used by the defendants clearly must have injured the plaintiff's reputation, they are said to be actionable per se, and the plaintiff may recover a verdict for a substantial amount without giving any evidence of actual pecuniary loss (Odgers at page 304). General damages differ in this respect from special damages. In the case before us, neither has it been pleaded that the accusation, if it referred to the plaintiff, was true, nor is it denied that the words do amount to defamation of the worst possible type. The plaintiff has been painted in the most abominable terms and has been openly accused of crime, immorality, vice, and dishonourable conduct in the discharge of his official functions. In these circumstances, he will be clearly entitled to general damages for which no proof of pecuniary loss will be legally necessary.

Another feature of the libel in suit that must be considered in the assessment of damages is the method of its publication. It has been printed in a newspaper. It may fall into any hands. Moreover, printed matter is generally of a permanent character and people are disposed to believe implicitly what they see in print. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, it is our considered opinion, that the plaintiff is entitled to substantial damages. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 2,250 with proportionate costs both in the Court below and before us.

Judgment.—The Secretary of State for India in Council sues on documents whereby the defendants in these two connected appeals were granted the right to occupy and use certain water-mills under the management of the Irrigation Department in the Sargodha District. The defendants occupied the mills, but vacated them before the period of their lease was over. The suits are for arrears of rent and damages for the breach of the contract. The plea of the defendants is, that the documents required registration as leases of immovable property under S. 17 (1) (d), Registration Act, and cannot be admitted in evidence. On behalf of the Secretary of State, it was at first contended that the contracts did not amount to leases; but this contention has now been withdrawn, and the only question is whether the instruments are protected by S. 90 (1) (d) of the Act. This section exempts from registration sanads, inam title deeds and other documents purporting to be or to evidence grants or assignments by Government of land or of any interest in land. The trial Court held that the documents on which the present suits are based were not exempt from registration and dismissed the suits on this preliminary issue. The lower appellate Court held that the documents were exempt and remanded the suits for decision on the merits. The defendants have appealed.

In holding that Government leases of land are exempt from registration the learned Additional Judge has followed the decisions in 43 Mad 65 (1) and 6 Pat 446 (2). The same view was taken in 9 O L J 629 (3). A different view had previously been taken in 36 All 176 (4); but this decision is fully discussed in the later decisions, from which I see no reason to disagree. If S. 90 (1) (d) is read in its plain meaning, Government leases of land are exempt from registration. There is however a further difficulty in the present case. S. 17 (1) (d), which makes registration of leases compulsory, refers to immovable property, while S. 90 (1) (d), which grants exemption, refers only to land; and it has been argued before me that Government leases of buildings, as such do not fall within the scope of the exemption. Immoveable property is defined in S. 2 (6) of the Act as including both land and buildings. Land is not defined anywhere in the Act, but it would appear to be distinguishable both from buildings and immovable property, since it is certainly used as distinguishable from buildings in S. 2 (6) and the expression "immovable property" is not repeated in S. 90 (1) (d). Immoveable property has been defined in the General Clauses Act 1897 as including both land and things attached to the earth; but here again there is no separate definition of land. The general practice in India has been, when land is to be used in an extended sense, as in the Acts relating to the collection of revenue, to give any special extended sense as a definition in the Act itself.

In the absence of any such special definition in the Registration Act, I am of opinion that land cannot be taken as including buildings, so that the present leases would not apparently be covered by S. 90 (1) (d). The learned Government Advocate has argued that a lease of a building necessarily includes a lease of the land thereunder. I quite see that difficulties might arise in applying the wording of the Act to a lease of immovable property consisting of a building with a large estate attached; but each case must be adjudged on its merits. In the present instance the wording of the leases so clearly and definitely refers to the use and occupation of each of the buildings, that I consider that they must be taken as leases of immovable property falling under S. 17 (1) (d), Registration Act, but not exempt under S. 90 (1) (d) as grants or assignments of an interest in land. It follows that they were properly rejected by the trial Court as inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and that the plaintiff's suits for rent and damages for breach of the contract must fail.

It has finally been suggested that the suits should now be treated as ones for Criminal Appeal No. 347 of 1935, Decided on 31st May 1935, from order of First Class Magistrate, Ferozepore, D/- 7th March 1935.

(a) Criminal Trial—Duty of prosecution—It must make out its own case—Gaps cannot be filled by statement of accused.

The prosecution must make out its own case and gaps cannot be filled up by any statement made by the accused in his examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C. : 1916 Mad 407 ; 27 Mad 238 and 1923 Lah 225, Hel on. ; 1925 Lah 432, Ref. [P 29 C 1]

Statements made by accused in reply to questions required to be put under S. 342, Criminal P. C., cannot be used as gaps to fill up defects in prosecution. But voluntary written statement by accused can be so used. [P 29 C 1, 2]

(c) Criminal Trial—Duty of prosecution—Deceased receiving fatal injuries while stealing—Assault by three persons armed with lathis—Grievous hurt.

In accordance with the principles of English and Anglo-Indian procedure, it is for the prosecution to prove its case. The prosecution, without any statement made by the accused, proved that the deceased received his fatal injury while stealing carrots and that the injury was inflicted by one of the accused. If the deceased had received only one blow in a fight at the hands of one of his assailants and it was not known whose hands inflicted the blow, each of the assailants would be presumed to have had the intention of causing grievous hurt : 29 All 282 and 1914 Lah 305, Foll.

Barkat Ali—for Appellants.

Mohammad Amin Khan for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Hasham and Ismail have been convicted under S. 304, Part. 2, I. P. C., and sentenced each to five years' rigorous imprisonment. They have appealed through Mr. Barkat Ali and Mr. Abdul Karim represented the Crown. The case was started on a first information report made at Ferozepore City Thana at 4 a. m. on 22nd January 1935 by Mohammed Din, son of Bhana Arain. He stated that Mohammad Din, son of Nur Mohammad Arain, deceased, together with Umer Din and Abdul Aziz, sister's sons of the reporter, were watching their wheat field as it had been previously damaged by mares belonging to Abdul Ghani, sufedposh. About midnight the reporter was awakened by his nephews who said that mares were doing damage ; the deceased tried to catch them, when Ismail and Hasham appellants, together with two others named Mohammad Sharif and Ilam Din, attacked him with dangs. Abdul Ghani said "Finish him" and took him to his house. The reporter was afraid to go to the house of his enemy Abdul Ghani and had been to the police station to find out if Mohammad Din had been brought there ; but about 3 a. m. the accused had thrown down Mohammad Din who was a relation of the reporter near his house. Ali Mohammad had come and told him that Mohammad Din was lying unconscious outside the house of Nihal Arain and the reporter had brought him in an unconscious state to the police station on a charpoy. He was taken on to the hospital and died without recovering consciousness at 5-30 the same morning. (After discussing evidence, the judgment proceeded) The learned counsel for the Crown drew my attention to a written statement filed by Hasham's pleader on his behalf on 5th March 1935. In that statement he said :

On the day of occurrence Ismail, Mohammad Shariff and I were on thikri pehra duty. Ismail and I were ahead of Mohammad Sharif. When we got close to the railway line, we heard a sound. On going near we found that two men were committing theft in a carrot field. Getting close to them, we accosted them whereupon they set on us with dangs. A dang blow fell on me; but as I had a dohar of khaddar on I was not hurt. I used my dang to ward off dang blows. One of the thieves was hit with my dang. As soon as he received the blow, he grappled with us, while the other thief took to his heels. In the meantime Mohammad Sharif, who was coming behind, turned up. Seeing him the injured man disengaged himself and ran away. It being dark we did not pursue him.

Counsel for the Crown argued that Hasham had admitted striking the deceased and that the onus of bringing the case within the exception of self-defence lay on him, as to which there was no evidence. Counsel for the appellants urged that the statement was inadmissible in evidence and cited 4 Lah 55 (1) and 6 Lah 183 (2). The latter ruling is hardly relevant. According to 4 Lah 55 (1) at p. 57, the prosecution must make out its own case and gaps cannot be filled up by any statement made by the accused in his examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C. It cites 27 Mad 238 (3) to the same effect and 39 Mad 770 (4) to the effect that where no evidence has been given implicating the accused, the Magistrate has no right under the statute to put questions to the accused or to invite him to make a statement. All these rulings refer to the answers given by the accused to questions put to him by the Court in accordance with S. 342, Criminal P. C. In the present case, the accused was duly questioned in accordance with S. 342; and Hasham, Ismail and Mohammad Sharif when asked:

Did you along with other accused go to the carrot field of Ibrahim and strike Mohammad Din on his head with a dang?

each replied: "I shall put in my written statement." This was on 9th February and these three accused were charged on the same day. None of the accused except Hasham put in a written statement, and he put in two. The first, lodged on his behalf on 27th February, is a mere blank denial; the other quoted above was lodged on 5th March. It must be regarded as placed on record in accordance with S. 256 (2), Criminal P. C., which runs: "If the accused puts in any written statement, the Magistrate shall file it with the record." I have been unable to find any authority dealing with a written statement lodged by the accused or his pleader and I am not sure that the same principle should apply to such a statement as to questions put to the accused by the Magistrate in accordance with the statute. The statement such as we are considering is lodged by the accused of his own accord; the questions under the statute are compulsory. The appellants' counsel urged that in accordance with the principles of English and Anglo-Indian procedure, it is for the prosecution to prove its case. In the present case the prosecution has, without any statement made by the accused, proved that the deceased received his fatal injury while stealing carrots and that the injury was inflicted by one of the appellants, or by Mohammad Sharif. If the deceased has received only one blow in a fight at the hands of one of his assailants and it is not known whose hands inflicted the blow, each of the assailants is presumed to have had the intention of causing grievous hurt: 29 All 282 (5) and 37 P R 1914 Cr (6). Thus without considering the written statement of Hasham there would be evidence on which to convict Hasham and Ismail under S. 325, I. P. C.

In these circumstances, I think it is proper to take into consideration the statement of Hasham. The next question is whether it is true. I would have had no hesitation in holding it to be true, if Hasham had made a statement orally when examined by the Magistrate or even if he had lodged a written statement at once. This however is a second written statement, at variance with the first, but it fits in so closely with what is established by the prosecution that I am inclined to regard it as true. Relying on that statement then Ismail is entitled to an acquittal. Hasham alone struck the fatal blow in a fight which he says the thieves began and which was certainly entered into with thieves in defence of private property. I would therefore acquit

Ismail and convict Hasham under S. 304, I. P. C. The next question is that of sentence. The Magistrate said :

The action and (of ?) Hasham and Ismail is not covered by the right of private defence of property. The accused knew the culprits very well. They could move the authorities for the paltry theft of carrots. It has not been proved by any evidence whatsoever that the accused apprehended that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence if such right of private defence would not be exercised.

This is altogether too severe a view. The Magistrate made no allowance for the feelings of simple rustics protecting property. Under S. 105, I. P. C., the right of private defence of property against theft continues till the offender has effected his retreat with the property. Even assuming, as is proper, that Mohammad Din was struck while running away, the fact that carrots were found along his tracks proves that he had not effected his retreat with the property and Hasham was therefore acting in the right of private defence of property. Of course in striking a fatal blow on the head he exceeded that right, but in the circumstances I am of opinion that a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment is sufficient and I reduce the sentence accordingly. I have referred to two rulings 29 P R 1902 Cr (7) and 1 Cr L J 285 (8), which deal with somewhat similar cases. In 29 P R 1902 Cr (7) a Division Bench of the Chief Court found that the appellant was watching his field (some of the grain of which had on previous occasions been stolen), that he saw Hukman cutting corn in it, that he gave chase, that Hukman ran his head against a tree and fell, that the appellant hit him recklessly, with a stick while on the ground, on the head and fractured his skull in two places, causing death. The Bench reduced the sentence under S. 304, Part I, to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

In 1 Cr L J 285 (8) the accused armed with swords, pursued thieves at night who were taking cotton pods from their fields, and, in a scuffle killed one who was unarmed and caused grievous hurt to another armed with an iron bound stick. The thieves might have been in possession of a few handfuls of cotton.

The accused were found guilty under S. 304, I. P. C., and the members of the Court held that a sentence of nine months' rigorous imprisonment was sufficient. The President was of opinion that a severer sentence would be more appropriate but accepted the opinion of the members. This was a case from an Indian State and illustrates the ideas of indigenous India towards thieves caught red-handed, which are similar to those of primitive Rome where thieves caught in the act could be killed.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 487 of 1935
Decided on 26th June 1935, against order of Dist. Judge, Campbellpore, D/- 14th February 1935.

Execution — Executing Court must proceed at decree-holder's instance till decree satisfied—Full satisfaction should not be refused in absence of statutory bar—Land not saleable — But executing Court empowered to lease same—Judgment-debtor cannot claim exemption of sufficient area for maintenance.

Ordinarily, the executing Court must proceed at the instance of the decree-holder until the decree is fully satisfied ; and it is only when a statutory bar exists, that execution to the full extent can be refused. There is no statutory provision that a judgment-debtor (holding land not liable to sale is entitled to have a sufficient area for his maintenance exempted from the farm or lease which an executing Court is empowered to arrange. The instructions to Collectors contained in the Standing Order 61, para. 16, issued by the Financial Commissioner of the Punjab refer only to those cases in which the Collector has decided to intervene under S. 72, Civil P. C. [P 81 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—The decree-holder holds a decree against the judgment-debtor for a sum which now amounts to Rupees 792-5-0 including costs. He applied for execution of this amount by attachment of the judgment-debtor's land. This land is exempt from sale in execution under the provision of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. The Court accordingly consulted the Collector as to the best means of satisfying the decree. The Collector suggested a farm of half the land belonging to the judgment-debtor for a sum of Rs. 510. This sum would not have been sufficient to satisfy the full amount of the decree, but the Collector was of opinion that the remainder of the land should be left for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. On receiving this report the Court decided not to follow the Collector's advice, but to lease out the whole of the judgment-debtor's land for a period of fourteen years, which would be sufficient to satisfy the full amount of the decree. One of the reasons which influenced the executing Court in arriving at this decision was that the judgment-debtor had already disposed of part of his immovable property by way of gift in favour of his son.

The judgment-debtor then appealed to the District Court claiming that the advice of the Collector should have been followed. The District Judge held that the previous conduct of the judgment-debtor should not have influenced the decision of the Executing Court and that there were no sufficient reasons for refusing to follow the advice given by the Collector. No notice was taken of the fact that the farm suggested by the Collector would not suffice to pay off the full amount of the decree and the executing Court was directed to proceed with the proposed farm of only half of the judgment-debtor's land. The decree-holder has come up in second appeal against this order.

Ordinarily, the executing Court must proceed at the instance of the decree-holder until the decree is fully satisfied; and it is only when a statutory bar exists that execution to the full extent can be refused. There does not appear to be any statutory provision that a judgment-debtor holding land not liable to sale is entitled to have a sufficient area for his maintenance exempted from the farm or lease which an executing Court is empowered to arrange. The only authority which has been put forward in support of this suggestion is a standing order of the Financial Commissioner which contains certain instructions to Collectors (Standing Order No. 61, para. 16). One of these instructions is to the effect that a Collector, who decides to intervene under S. 72, Civil P. O., should arrange to leave sufficient land for the support of the judgment-debtor and his family. The effect of this standing order has been fully discussed by the executing Court, and I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that it is difficult to see how the power of an executing Court can be affected thereby. In any case, the instructions refer only to those cases in which the Collector decides to intervene under S. 72, and this is not one of those cases. In the present instance the Court was entitled to reject the advice of the Collector, and it had sufficient reason for doing so when the course suggested by the Collector would result only in the partial satisfaction of the decree. For these reasons I consider that the learned District Judge acted erroneously in setting aside the arrangement made by the executing Court and in ordering it to follow the advice given by the Collector. I accept the appeal, and return the proceedings for the arrangement ordered by the Executing Court to be carried into effect. The decree-holder will receive his costs in this Court.

Mt. Mahanto—Defendant—Respondent.

Civil Misc. Petn. No. 321 of 1935, Decided on 9th July 1935, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Privy Council, from order of Addison and Din Mohammad, JJ., D/- 14th January 1935.

(a) Civil P. C., (1908), S. 110—Suit property worth less than Rs. 10,000—Decree for mesne profits of suit property obtained in separate suit—Decretal amount sought to be added to increase value in appeal—Amount held could not be so added not being within Cl. (2), S. 110.

The subject-matter of a suit in the Court of the first instance was less than Rs. 10,000. In order to make up the prescribed valuation for appeal to the King in Council, it was sought to add the amount of the decree for mesne profits of the property, which decree was obtained in a separate suit.

Held: that the decretal amount could not be added so as to increase the value of the appeal to the Privy Council as it did not fall within Cl. 2, S. 110; 1916 Mad 985 and 1930 P C 44, Rel on [P 32 O 2]

(b) Civil P. C., (1908), S. 110—Words, 'amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of the first instance' mean amount or value at institution and not at time of decree.

The words 'the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of the first instance' mean the amount or value at the institution of the suit, and not at the date of the decree in the Court of first instance, which meaning is not affected by the alternative condition which follows in the section: 1930 P C 44 Foll. [P 32 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., (1908), S. 110—Claims indirectly connected with subject-matter of main suit—Adding claims to make up prescribed valuation—Indirect relation must not be too remote—Phrase 'directly or indirectly' refers to existing suits—Indirect relation must be decided from actual circumstances—Possible further suits may be considered if res judicata affects them.

If, in order to make up the prescribed limit of valuation for leave to appeal to the Privy Council various claims indirectly connected with the subject-matter of the main suit are sought to be added, the indirect relation must not be too remote. The phrase 'directly or indirectly' in S. 110 refers to suits in existence and cannot be stretched to cover suits not yet brought. The indirect relation must be decided with reference to actual circumstances at the time and not to circumstances which are remote. On the other hand the possibility of future suits may be taken into consideration if such suits will be affected by the doctrine of res judicata: 35 All 445; 1925 P C 159; 1932 Mad 125 and 1922 P C 257, Discussed and Foll. [P 33 C 1, 2]

J. N. Aggarwal—for Petitioners.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Respondent.

Addison, Ag. C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council. The principal plaintiff is Bal Raj, son of Mohan Lal and grandson of Ganga Ram. Mt. Mahanto, defendant 1, is the daughter of Muni Lal, who was the son of Ganga Ram. The plaintiff sued Mt. Mahanto for possession of a house and shop in Amritsar city on the ground that when Muni Lal was separated from his father Ganga Ram in 1909, Muni Lal then admitted by the deed of release, dated 13th August 1909, that he had only a life interest in the property given to him by his father at the time of his separation. It was further contended that Ganga Ram bequeathed the suit property upon the death of Muni Lal to Bal Raj who was, therefore, entitled to it as against Mt. Mahanto. The suit was valued at Rs. 5,250 for purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fee and this may be taken to be the correct valuation. The trial Court decreed the claim for possession but on appeal we dismissed the suit with costs throughout.

It was held by this Court that the property was meant to go to Muni Lal and to his heirs, of whom the daughter in the absence of sons was one; in other words, that there was an heritable estate given in the property to Muni Lal at the time of his separation from his father. It was further held that, though it was stated in the so-called deed of release, that he had no power to alienate the property, that restriction was invalid and ineffective. In the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council it is admitted that the value of the suit and of the appeal is only Rs. 5,250. It is claimed, however, that in a separate suit a decree has been given for Rs. 871 for mesne profits and it is desired to add this amount to the valuation for the purpose of valuing the appeal to the Privy Council. It is further claimed that one half of an area of 467 kanals, 13½ marlas is affected by our decision. This land is in possession of the plaintiff and no suit may ever be brought by Mt. Mahanto as regards this area. It is contended, however, that the value of this land should be added as, if a suit is brought, the decision must follow what has been found by us in this suit as the matter will be res judicata. As regards the claim to include the sum of Rs. 871 decreed as mesne profits in a separate suit, we hold that that cannot be added so as to increase the value of the appeal to the Privy Council. This does not fall within Cl. 2, S. 110, Civil P. C., which runs:

Or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value.

This follows from a decision of the Madras High Court, 39 Mad 843 (1) and the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, 57 I A 56 (2). The latter decision is also an authority for the proposition that the words 'the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of the first instance' mean the amount or value at the institution of the suit, and not at the date of the decree in the Court of first instance, which meaning is not affected by the alternative condition which follows in the section. The question, however, remains whether the value of the half share in 467 kanals 13½ marlas should be added as falling within the alternative Cl. 2, S. 110 already quoted. In 35 All 445 (3) it was held that, where the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of the first instance was over Rs. 10,000, but the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council was less than Rs. 10,000, and, where on the other hand the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council necessarily involved a decision as to the validity of an award which dealt with property of far greater value and which had been declared by the High Court to be invalid, the provisions of S. 110, Civil P. C., applied and a certificate should be granted. It was added that it was not necessary that at the time of presenting an application for leave to appeal there should be pending in a Court a dispute respecting other property of the value of Rs. 10,000. On the other hand in 52 Cal 650 (4) it was held that for the alternative clause to apply the final order or decree must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value but that the connection must not be too remote. In 61 M L J 692 (5) it was held that the mere possibility of similar litigation in the Presidency would not entitle the petitioner to add to the value in one case the value of other cases as being 'indirectly involved,' unless the other litigation would be affected by the doctrine of res judicata. The remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council at p. 481 of 45 Mad 475 (6) are worthy of consideration in this respect:

The proceedings may, in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern the rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit.

In such cases it was said that the Courts with propriety may make the necessary certificate: see also 1929 Mad 780 (7). From what has been said it follows that the indirect relation must not be too remote and there is authority to the effect that the phrase "directly or indirectly" refers to suits in existence and cannot be stretched to cover suits not yet brought. The indirect relation must be decided with reference to actual circumstances at the time and not to circumstances which are remote. On the other hand the possibility of future suits may be taken into consideration if such suits will be affected by the doctrine of res judicata. Such being the state of the authorities, we are of opinion that the case must be remitted to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, to hold an enquiry and report as to the value of the land held by the plaintiff, which may be affected by the decision in the present suit on the principle of res judicata, namely, one half of 467 kanals 13½ marlas. It will depend upon this valuation as to whether the decree or final order involves, directly or indirectly, some question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000. Return should be submitted by 16th October 1935 and any objections thereto put in within fifteen days.

Misc. First Appeal No. 564 of 1934, Decided on 22nd June 1934, from order of 1st Class, sub-J., Lahore, D/- 5th February 1934.

(a) Attachment—Application for attachment before judgment—Court should be fully satisfied on proper affidavit or other materials before it takes any action.

The provisions of O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6, are very drastic as the plaintiff can secure a very great advantage over his opponent in the earlier stages of the litigation long before the merits of the controversy are tried out. The Court should therefore be fully satisfied on a proper affidavit or other materials before it can take any action under O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6. It should not paralyse the defendant against whom the suit is brought by lightly making an order of attachment before judgment. Where the affidavit filed by the applicant is wholly inadequate and is not in law an affidavit at all, the Court should not take action under O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6: 1928 Lah 376, and 1922 Bom 276, Foll. [P 34 C 2 P 35 C 1]

(b) Attachment—Application for attachment before judgment—Issue of notice under O. 38, R. 5 (1) is absolutely necessary—Court must strictly carry out stringent procedure laid down in O. 38, R. 5.

Issue of notice to defendant under O. 38, R. 5 (1) is absolutely necessary before an order under O. 38, R. 5 (3), is passed. Where no notice is issued no foundation is laid for an action under O. 38, R. 5 (3). Before passing the order of attachment before judgment, the Court must faithfully and strictly carry out the stringent procedure as laid down in O. 38, R. 5 and no short cuts are permissible. [P 35 C 1]

(c) Attachment—Order granting application for attachment before judgment without notice to defendant under O. 38, R. 5 (1) is appealable.

An order granting an application for attachment before judgment without issuing notice to defendant under O. 38, R. 5 (1) can be deemed to have been one under O. 38, R. 6 and is therefore appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (q): 1928 Lah 445 and 1914 All 511, Foll. [P 35 C 1, 2]

(d) Revision—Application for attachment before judgment granted without issue of notice under O. 38, R. 5 (1)—Order appealed from—Court may treat it as application for revision if no appeal lay.

When the lower Court grants an application for attachment before judgment, without issuing notice to the defendant under O. 38, R. 5 (1) and there is an appeal against the order, the Court may treat it as an application for revision and can interfere on the ground that the order of the Court below is unjust and fair and passed in defiance of the legal procedure prescribed by the Code, if the order is not appealable. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an application made under O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C. The plaintiff, Hari Das Kapur, brought a suit on 3rd February 1934, against Messrs. Madan Theatres Ltd., 5 Dharamtalla Street, Calcutta, for recovery of a sum of Rs. 6,500. Along with the petition of plaint the plaintiff also filed an application for the attachment before judgment of the furniture locked in the Elphinstone, the Excelsior and the Majestic Theatres and also for an order restraining the Lahore Electric Supply Co. from paying the sum of Rs. 610 deposited with them on account of security, and further that the defendant be called upon to furnish security as required by law. This application was accompanied by a so-called affidavit.

On 5th February 1934 the Subordinate Judge, First Class Lahore, made the following order:

Lala Kirpa Ram Bajaj, Advocate for plaintiff, is present. An affidavit is attached. A warrant for attachment before judgment be issued under O. 38, R. 5 (3), Civil P. C., as prayed. Process fee to be deposited within two days.

The defendant has come up to this Court in appeal against this order. A preliminary objection was taken by the respondent that no appeal lies against the order which, on the face of it, was passed under O. 38, R. 5 (3). I shall consider this objection later on. The affidavit in support of the application filed by the plaintiff in the Court below is wholly inadequate and is in fact no affidavit at all. In para. 3 it is stated that the respondents intend to misappropriate their property at Lahore with the object that the applicant may not get anything in case a decree is passed in his favour in the above-noted case. In para. 4 it is stated that the respondents dishonestly intend to withdraw the security deposited in respect of the Majestic Talkies. In paras. 7 and 8 it is stated that the respondents have already misappropriated the furniture, motor, electric fans and other goods belonging to them and lying in the Excelsior Theatre and that the Elphinstone Theatre has been closed for the last five or six days. There is nothing in this affidavit to show how the plaintiff came to know the intention of the defendants to misappropriate the properties in the Elphinstone, Excelsior and Majestic Talkies and also their object that the plaintiff may not get anything in case a decree is passed in his favour. The same remark applies to para. 4 of the affidavit. Again it is not explained how a party can misappropriate its own property and yet the allegation is made in paras. 3 and 7 of the affidavit that the defendant was committing such misappropriation. The affirmation attached to the affidavit is wholly insufficient. It does not give any details as to what portion of the affidavit was based upon the personal knowledge of the deponent and what allegations were founded upon information and whether he believed it to be true.

The provisions of O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6 are very drastic, as the plaintiff can secure a very great advantage over his opponent in the earlier stages of the litigation long before the merits of the controversy are tried out. The Court should be fully satisfied on a proper affidavit or other material before it takes any action under O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6. It should not paralyse the defendant against whom the suit is brought by lightly making an order of attachment before judgment. In the present case, as already mentioned, the affidavit on which the Court below acted, was wholly incompetent and was not in law an affidavit at all: vide the observations of Tek Chand, J., in 106 I C 808 (1) and 46 Bom 431 (2). Again, no notice, which is clearly contemplated by O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., was issued to the defendant directing him within a fixed time either to furnish security, in such sum as may be specified in the order, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court, when required, the said property or the value of the same, or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree, or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security. The Court at once proceeded to pass an order under the provisions of O. 38, R. 5 (3). The provisions of this sub rule permit a conditional order to be passed for the attachment of the whole or any portion of the property, but it must be clearly understood that this order takes effect only if action has been taken under O. 38, R. 5 (1), Civil P. C., and that proper notice has been issued. Here no notice whatsoever was issued, and therefore no foundation was laid for action being taken under O. 38, R. 5 (3), Civil P. C. Before passing an order of attachment before judgment the Court must faithfully and strictly carry out the stringent procedure as laid down in O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., and no short cuts are permissible: vide, 106 I C 808 (1) and 57 I C 907 (3).

The question now arises whether an appeal lies. The authority of a learned Single Judge of the Lahore High Court reported in 107 I C 276 (4) goes to show that an order like the one passed by the Subordinate Judge in the present case must be deemed to have been one under 4. S. Jai Dev Singh v. S. Jai Singh, 1928 Lah 445=107 I C 276.

O. 38, R. 6, Civil P. C., and is therefore appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (1): vide also 23 I C 107 (5). In this view of the matter an appeal lies to this Court. Even assuming for the sake of argument that the order in question is not appealable, the memorandum of appeal under the circumstances of the case may be treated as an application for revision, and this Court can interfere on the ground that the order of the Court below is unjust and unfair and was passed in defiance of the legal procedure prescribed by the Code. Whatever view may be taken I set aside the order of the Court below and dismiss the application of the plaintiff. The plaintiff respondent to pay the costs of the application throughout. The stay order is discharged.

First Appeal No. 2276 of 1934, Decided on 15th May 1935, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 5th October 1934.

(a) Pre-emption—Cause of action—Plaintiff merely alleging in plaint that he has right of pre-emption without specifying grounds of his claim—Grounds specified in replication—Pleading taken as whole discloses cause of action with sufficient clearness.

Where the plaintiff states in the plaint in a pre-emption suit that he has a right of pre-emption, but does not specify the grounds on which he bases his claim, it cannot be said that the plaint does not disclose a cause of action. It is merely not sufficiently specific, but if in his replication the plaintiff clearly states that he claims the right of pre-emption by reason of his being co-sharer in the property sold and as the owner of contiguous property, the pleadings taken as a whole make the plaintiff's position quite clear; and it cannot be said that they do not disclose the plaintiff's cause of action with sufficient clearness: 42 I C 268 and 1933 Lah 774, Disting. [P 36 C 2]

(b) Punjab Pre-emption Act (1913), S. 3 (5)—Sale of insolvent's property by Official Assignee does not amount to act in execution of order of Court—Sale is subject to right of pre-emption.

The act of an Official Assignee in selling the property of an insolvent is not an act in execution of the order of a Court and the sale is therefore subject to the right of pre-emption: 1935 Lah 268 (F B), Foll. [P 37 C 1]

Kishan Dayal and Bhagwant Dayal—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Sud and Achhru Ram for Mehr Chand Mahajan and Govind Ram Khanna—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The property in dispute is a part of the estate of R. B. Sri Kishan Das of Delhi, who was adjudicated insolvent by an order of the Bombay High Court. On adjudication his estate vested in the Official Assignee. On 30th July 1932, the Official Assignee sold the property in dispute to the Bank of Upper India (in liquidation). On 19th April 1933 the plaintiff Sat Narayan, who is one of the sons of the insolvent, instituted the present suit for pre-emption of the properties sold by the Official Assignee to the Bank of Upper India. In the body of the plaint it was stated that the plaintiff had got a right to pre-empt the property in dispute, but the incidents of the right on which the claim was based were not specified. The defendant Bank filed a lengthy written statement pleading inter alia (1) that the sale, having been effected by the Official Assignee, must be taken to have been made in execution of an order of a Court, and therefore was exempt from pre-emption under S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act, and (2) that the plaint did not disclose a cause of action as the plaintiff had not specified the incidents on which he based his alleged claim. In his replication the plaintiff traversed the first plea, and as to the second he stated clearly that he claimed pre-emption by reason of his being (a) a co-sharer in the property, and (b) the owner of a house which is contiguous to the property sold. The learned Sub-Judge, Sardar Sewa Singh, framed a preliminary issue:

Whether the sale by the Official Receiver was not a sale within the meaning of S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act.

After hearing arguments he passed an order on 31st May 1934, deciding this issue in favour of the plaintiff. He then framed 14 other issues one of which was:

Whether the plaint disclosed a cause of action, and, if not, what was the effect of the particulars of the right of pre-emption given in the replication by the plaintiff.

At this stage Sardar Sewa Singh was transferred and his successor, Mr. Abdul Rab, decided this issue against the plaintiff, holding that the plaint as framed did not disclose a cause of action and that the particulars given in the replication could not be taken advantage of by the plaintiff as supplying the defect. He accordingly dismissed the suit without deciding the issues on the merits. After examining the record and hearing counsel I have no doubt that the decision of the lower Court that the plaint did not disclose a cause of action, is incorrect. As stated already the plaintiff had stated in the plaint in general terms that he had a right of pre-emption, and though he did not specify the grounds on which he based his claim, it cannot be said that the plaintiff did not disclose a cause of action. All that can be said is that the plaint, as originally presented, was not sufficiently specific, but the matter was put beyond doubt in the replication, when the plaintiff clearly stated that he claimed to pre-empt the property by reason of his being a co-sharer in the property sold, and also as the owner of contiguous property. These particulars were supplied at the earliest possible opportunity and before the issues were framed. The pleadings taken as a whole made the plaintiff's position quite clear and it cannot be said that they did not disclose the plaintiff's alleged cause of action with sufficient clearness of precision.

The learned counsel for the respondents has referred us to 42 I C 263 (1) and 144 I C 822 (2). In both those cases, however, the plaintiff had originally based his claim for pre-emption on one particular ground, and then, after the trial had proceeded, and evidence led, he had attempted to change his front and to rely upon a totally different ground. This he was held not entitled to do. The present case is entirely different. Here there has been no 'departure' from the original plaint. All that the plaintiff did in the replication was to amplify the plaint and to clearly state his grounds of attack. The rulings cited have no bearing whatever. I hold that the decision of the learned Sub-Judge on this point is incorrect and must be set aside. Counsel for the respondent Bank attacked the finding of Sardar Sewa Singh on the preliminary issue and urged that the sale by the Official Assignee was not subject to pre-emption, under S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act. This matter is concluded by a recent Full Bench of this Court in 155 I C 693 (3), where it has been held that the Act of an Official Receiver in selling the property of an insolvent is not an act in execution of the order of a Court and is, therefore, subject to the right of pre-emption. The result is that this appeal must be accepted, the judgment and decree of the lower Court set aside and the case remanded under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for decision of the remaining issues. Court-fee on this appeal shall be refunded. As the plaintiff had not expressly stated in the plaint the grounds on which he claimed pre-emption he is not entitled to the other costs of the litigation and I would accordingly leave all parties to bear the costs incurred by them up to date in both Courts.

First Appeal No. 1544 of 1932, Decided on 7th June 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Attock, D/- 27th June 1932.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Documents containing mere opinion of Government officers who have held no personal inquiries are not admissible.

The documents consisting of mere opinions expressed in Secretariat correspondence which passed between various officers of the Government who had held no personal inquiries in the matter are inadmissible in evidence. [P 38 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b)—Additional evidence can be admitted only when appellate Court requires it.

Under O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b), it is only where the appellate Court 'requires it (i.e., finds it needful) that additional evidence can be admitted. It may be required to enable the Court to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, but in either case it must be the Court that requires it. The legitimate occasion for the exercise of this discretion is not, whenever before the appeal is heard a party applies to adduce fresh evidence, but when on examination of evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent. It may well be that the defect may be pointed out by a party, or that a party may move the Court to supply the defect, but the requirement must be the requirement of the Court upon its appreciation of the evidence as it stands: 1931 P C 143, Foll. [P 39 C 1]

(c) Practice—Pleadings—Particular passage should not alone be looked into to determine nature.

It is not possible to expect any extreme degree of exactitude in the pleadings drafted in the Mufassil Courts, nor is it fair to confine oneself to a particular passage therein while determining their true nature. It must be taken as a whole. [P 39 C 2]

(d) Punjab Land Revenue Act (17 of 1887), S. 45—Entry in record of rights in favour of defendants—Any person aggrieved by it can file suit under S. 42, Specific Relief Act.

Section 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, clearly empowers any person aggrieved by an entry in the record of rights to seek relief under S. 42, Specific Relief Act. It is for the plaintiffs to decide whether they feel aggrieved by any such entry, and if the plaintiffs assert that they are so aggrieved, the defendants cannot be allowed to urge that the plaintiffs should not feel aggrieved and be not permitted to knock at the door of the Court. [P 39 C 2]

(e) Punjab Land Revenue Act (17 of 1887), S. 45—Entry in record of rights—Subsequent declaratory suit—Cause of action arises when plaintiff feels aggrieved and not from date of entry—Suit is governed by Art. 120, Lim. Act.

A suit for a declaration in respect of an entry made in record of rights filed under S. 42, Specific Relief Act, read with S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, is governed by Art 120, Lim. Act. The cause of action in all such cases would accrue when the plaintiff feels aggrieved and not from date of entry. [P 40 C 2]

(f) Limitation—Person continuing in possession in spite of adverse entry in revenue papers—No question of limitation arises.

Where a person continues in possession of proprietary rights in spite of an adverse entry appearing in revenue papers, no question of limitation arises: 1919 Oudh 80, Appl.

(g) Custom (Punjab) — 'Ala malik' and 'talukdar' differences explained.

The words 'ala malik' literally mean 'superior proprietor', and the word 'talukdar' conveys the idea of a land-holder or an overlord. A talukdar may be an ala malik, but it is not necessary that he should be so. The status of ala maliks carries with it certain privileges which a mere talukdar does not enjoy and hence the important distinction between these two different kinds of tenures. An ala malik may inter alia be entitled to all the unculturable land in the village; he may possess a right of reversion or in other words the right of succession to all lands whose owners die without an heir; he is entitled by the law of pre-emption to exercise a preferential right of purchase on the sale of inferior proprietorships and he may claim a share of the sale money for himself if the inferior proprietorships are sold. But a talukdar is not entitled to any such privileges. [P 40 C 2, P 41 C 1]

(b) Record of Rights — One sided entries made by illegal procedure cannot prejudicially affect interest of others.

Where the procedure adopted in the preparation of record of rights is illegal, the one-sided entries therein cannot prejudicially affect the interests of others. [P 41 C 2]

(i) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35 — All views expressed before final stage is reached are not admissible — Only final decision is admissible — Other requirements necessary mentioned.

The very wording of S. 35 conveys the idea of a duty imposed upon the maker of the entry by law or his official position to record the information he possesses or has gathered in an official document of the nature described therein. It further imports that the entry will be of a permanent nature and thus excludes all such writings as are merely of an ephemeral character; and in so far as they do not incorporate the result of personal inquiries, are not intended to be used for reference in future. Another idea which runs underneath this section is that the person making the entry should be such as is invested with authority to record a decision which, so far as the matter before him is concerned, will be final. It thus excludes all views expressed before the final stage is reached and makes only those decisions relevant which constitute the final word in the matter. Hence letters which have passed between the various officials cannot be admitted under S. 35 so as to make the remarks made therein as legal evidence in the case; and if the final conclusions arrived at are recorded in the settlement papers those are the only documents which can be consulted in the decision of these cases. [P 41 C 1, P 42 C 1]

(j) Custom (Punjab)—Ala maliks — Mere provision for payment of dhauri and juti tax is not enough to confer status of ala maliks.

The fact that the dhauri and juti tax is provided for in a village, by itself is not enough to confer the status of ala maliks especially where there is no indication in the entry itself as to person or persons responsible for its payment or as to the method of its realization and where it has not been established that this tax was ever collected. [P 42 C 1]

Shuja ud-din and Mohammad Munir—for Appellants.

Durga Das Jain, Inder Dev and Ram Lal Anand I—for Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—There are five appeals before us, viz. Civil Appeals Nos. 1544 and 1545 of 1932, and Civil Appeals Nos. 1081, 1082 and 1083 of 1933. They have arisen out of five suits brought by the proprietors of five villages, namely Pind, Ahmadal, Utran Maghian and Jangla, respectively, against Khan Bahadur Nawab Gulam Mohammad Khan and others, popularly known as the Maliks of Pindigheb. In each case the proprietors claimed full ownership of the lands in their possession and denied the status of ala maliks claimed by the defendants in relation to them. The Pind and Ahmadal suits were instituted in the month of April 1932, while the Utran, Maghian and Jangla suits were instituted after the decision of the first two suits. The former two suits were decreed in favour of the proprietors and in those cases the defendants have lodged Appeals Nos. 1544 and 1545 of 1932. The latter three suits were dismissed and in those cases the plaintiffs have lodged Appeals Nos. 1081, 1082 and 1083 of 1933.

The main point for determination in all the five appeals is common, but in the interests of clarity and precision we have considered it proper to dispose of Civil Appeals Nos. 1544 and 1545 of 1932 in the earlier part of this judgment leaving the other three appeals to be dealt with later, as the subsidiary points raised by the defendant in the first set of appeals have not been raised in the second set, and the evidence relied on by the defendants in the second set of appeals was not adduced in the previous suits and could not, therefore, be referred to in their decision. Civil Appeals Nos. 1544 and 1545, as stated above, relate to the villages Pind and Ahmadal respectively. In these cases, counsel for the appellants has applied at the outset that he may be allowed under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C., to produce certain documents which he did not produce before, as he could not obtain them during the pendency of the proceedings in the trial Court. We have, however, decided not to allow this request. In the first place, as discussed in the connected appeals, the documents intended to be produced, consisting of mere opinions expressed in Secretariat correspondence which passed between various officers of the Government who had held no personal inquiries in the matter, are inadmissible in evidence. Secondly, even if they were admissible, we are not prepared to let them in at this stage. The affidavit put in by the appellants' agent is couched in very vague terms and does not mention when the copies were obtained and why they could not be had before. Besides, R. 27 of O. 41, Civil P. C., has been quite recently interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 10 Pat 654 (1), and to allow this application will amount to a complete disregard of both the letter and the spirit of the law as enunciated therein. At p. 668 of the Report their Lordships observed as follows :

Under O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b), it is only where the appellate Court "requires" it (i. e. finds it needful) that additional evidence can be admitted. It may be required to enable the Court to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, but in either case it must be the Court that requires it. This is the plain grammatical reading of the sub-clause. The legitimate occasion for the exercise of this discretion is not, whenever before the appeal is heard, a party applies to adduce fresh evidence, but 'when on examining the evidence as it stands,' some inherent lacuna or defect becomes 'apparent'. This is laid down in the most positive terms by Lord Robertson in 81 Bom 381 (2). It may well be that the defect may be pointed out by a party, or that a party may move the Court to supply the defect, but the requirement must be the requirement of the Court upon its appreciation of the evidence as it stands.

We do not feel any inherent lacuna in the case, nor do we require these documents to be produced to enable us to pronounce our judgment thereon. We will therefore proceed with these cases as they were presented in the Court below. Counsel for the appellants has urged that the suit as framed did not lie, inasmuch as no suit for a declaration that the defendant does not possess a certain legal character claimed by him is competent. He has relied on the wording of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, as well as on that of S. 45, Land Revenue Act. It is no doubt true that a declaratory suit must claim for the plaintiff any legal character that is denied to him by the defendant, but the plaints in the suits before us, read as a whole, fulfil the requirements of law. It is not possible to expect any extreme degree of exactitude in the pleadings drafted in the Mufassil Courts, nor is it fair to confine oneself to a particular passage therein while determining their true nature. The plaints in both the suits start with a declaration of the real status of the plaintiffs, deny the claim of the defendants in relation to the lands possessed by them and end with a prayer for the declaration that the defendants do not possess the status which is claimed by them. This prayer involves the real point at issue, viz., whether the plaintiffs are full owners of the lands possessed by them, and their ownership is not burdened with an encumbrance in the shape of ala milkiyat or superior proprietorship, as alleged by the defendants. This is what one understands from the plaints taken as a whole and this is what the defendants themselves understood the plaints to mean when they put in their pleas. So much so that they did not raise this technical point in the Court below. The point there raised and developed by them was that inasmuch as the plaintiffs could seek consequential relief in the form of correction of revenue entries, a suit for a mere declaration was not maintainable. That this is so will be obvious from the discussion of the Subordinate Judge under issue 1. The grounds of appeal were also confined to attacking the decision of the Court below on this point. It is too late in the day now to raise this highly technical plea and to entertain it would be most unfair to the plaintiffs. Had this plea been taken at the proper time when the pleas were put in, the plaintiffs could have easily amended the plaints and brought their prayer into line with the rest of the plaint and in accordance with the strict requirements of law. On these grounds we disallow this objection.

Counsel has further urged that the plaintiffs have no cause of action and hence their suits were incompetent. He has contended that no encroachment took place on the rights of the plaintiffs, that the defendants did not come into conflict with the plaintiffs in any manner and that beyond the existence of an entry in the revenue records which did not touch the plaintiffs at all nothing had happened which could have justified the institution of these suits. Here also he is mistaken. S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, clearly empowers any person aggrieved by an entry in the record of rights to seek relief under S. 42, Specific Relief Act. It is for the plaintiffs to decide whether they feel aggrieved by any such entry, and if the plaintiffs assert that they are so aggrieved, the defendants cannot be allowed to urge that the plaintiffs should not feel aggrieved and be not permitted to knock at the door of the Court. It is apparent that the names of the defendants were inserted in the column provided for the names of the ala maliks and this materially detracted from the status of the plaintiffs. Even an angel would have felt aggrieved in these circumstances, and we cannot blame the plaintiffs for being hypersensitive on this score. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs had a cause of action by virtue of S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, read with S. 42, Specific Relief Act, when they came into Court, and that these suits were maintainable. Counsel has next urged that if the entry complained of afforded a substantial cause of action to the plaintiffs then, inasmuch as this entry was made in 1905-06, their suits are evidently time barred. This also is a belated attempt to create stumbling blocks in the way of the plaintiffs. It was alleged in the plaints that the defendants, taking undue advantage of their position, got these entries made in the jamabandis behind the back of the plaintiffs and that they learnt of these entries for the first time in 1929-30. The defendants in their pleas, dated 21st May 1932, traversed these allegations. Issues were struck on the 23rd May, but it appears that this objection was waived, as no issue was framed on this point. This fact is borne out by the judgment itself. The defendants again changed their mind and mooted this point at the time of arguments in the trial Court, and the Subordinate Judge decided this point against them on the merits. In the first place, in the face of the defendants' waiving this point at the time of the issues and thus depriving the plaintiffs of an opportunity of proving their assertions in the Court below, it would not be proper to allow them to raise this point in appeal. The bar of limitation is not patent on the face of the record. The plaintiffs, if confronted with this plea at the proper moment, could have led evidence to prove that they had no knowledge of these entries prior to 1929-30, and as the determination of this question is not possible without the introduction of these facts and as these facts have been withheld on account of the defendants' waiver, we are not prepared to allow the defendants to contest this point before us. Secondly, to such suits Art. 120, Lim. Act, applies and the terminus a quo in such cases is when the cause of action accrues. Reading this Article with S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, the cause of action in all such cases would accrue when the plaintiffs feel aggrieved, and in these circumstances, on the plaintiff's allegations, these suits will be within time. Moreover, as laid down in the authorities cited before the Court below, where a person continues in possession of proprietary rights in spite of an adverse entry appearing in the revenue papers, no question of limitation arises: vide 54 I C 317 (3). Even on the merits, therefore, there is no force in this contention and we overrule it. (His Lordship then examined the entry and held that that entry by itself could not be sufficient to confer upon the defendants the status claimed by them. The judgment then proceeded).

1. Parsotim Thakur v. Lal Mohar, 1931 P C 143 = 132 I C 721 = 58 I A 254 = 10 Pat 654 (P C).
2. Kessowji Issur v. G I P Ry., (1907) 31 Bom 381 = 84 I A 115 = 9 Bom L R 671 (P O).

It may be useful here to explain what the term 'ala malik' imports and how it is distinguishable from the term 'talukdar'. A reference to pp. 217 and 218 of the Gazetteer of the Attock District will throw sufficient light on this matter. These are two out of several forms of proprietary tenures which were found to exist in some parts of this Province when the Punjab came under the British domination. The words "ala malik" literally mean "superior proprietor", and the word "talukdar" conveys the idea of a land-holder or an overlord. A talukdar may be an ala malik but it is not necessary that he should be so. All those persons who claimed this status at the time of the annexation of the Punjab by the British Government were really those petty chieftains who had settled with the Sikh Government for the payment of the revenue of locality in which they held sway or occupied some position of trust and responsibility. Though it is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rules which governed the settlement of such claims at the time of the first regular settlement, yet a study of the history of those times leads one to conclude that where the Government was satisfied that when the village had been founded by the ancestors of the claimants, their status was recognised as that of ala maliks; but where this was not the case and it was only proved that under the Sikh rule the claimants had exercised some sort of superior rights or had helped in the realisation of land revenue, their rights were recognised as those of talukdars and the persons so recorded in the revenue papers were allowed a fixed percentage of the land revenue payable by the estate.

3. Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh v. Sant Prasad 1919 Oudh 80=54 I C 317=22 O C 369.

The status of ala maliks carries with it certain privileges which a mere talukdar does not enjoy, and hence the important distinction between these two different kinds of tenures. An ala malik may inter alia be entitled to all the unculturable land in the village; he may possess a right of reversion or in other words the right of succession to all lands whose owners die without an heir; he is entitled by the law of pre-emption to exercise a preferential right of purchase on the sale of inferior proprietorships and he may claim a share of the sale money for himself if the inferior proprietorships are sold. But a talukdar is not entitled to any such privileges. The following passage at p. 218 of the Gazetteer may be referred to with advantage:

The talukdars are sometimes ala maliks of the village and as such own all uncultivated lands and have been recorded as ala maliks in the papers. Elsewhere, they have no rights of any description in the talukdari villages except to receive these dues and they have nothing to do with the payment of the revenue.

From the evidence which has been summarised above, it is abundantly clear that the defendants hold a pure and simple status of talukdars without the appendage of superior proprietorship, and either on account of the influence they wielded in the locality or on account of political services rendered to the Crown by themselves or their ancestors, they were recorded as talukdars in the revenue papers. There was no separate column provided for this purpose in the jamabandis and consequently their names were entered in the column provided for ala maliks, but it was expressly mentioned therein that they were talukdars. Accordingly they cannot claim any higher status than what was conferred upon them in the revenue records. It is also significant that even these entries were made for the first time in 1905-06 by the ipse dixit of the Revenue Officers responsible for the preparation of the records and not as the result of any mutation which under the law in force it was necessary to do, if it was intended to confer any status on them or to derogate from the title of the plaintiffs. The procedure adopted being illegal, these one-sided entries cannot prejudicially affect the interests of the plaintiff. (His Lordship then examined Appeal No. 1545, and after dismissing it took up Appeals Nos. 1081, 1082 and 1083 of 1934, and after referring to certain documents, the judgment proceeded). These documents are all letters addressed by one official to another incorporating his own opinions on the claim put forward by the Maliks of Pindigheb. These opinions are mainly based on the individual predilections of the writer for the maliks with a view to strengthen the position advocated by him. The recommendation made in some of these letters were not even accepted in the form as made and it was only the final result of this correspondence that was eventually incorporated in the settlement records. Those entries alone can be admissible and not the views expressed by the different officials at any intermediate stage. For the admissibility of these letters, counsel for the respondents has relied on S. 35, Evidence Act; but in our opinion that section does not warrant such a conclusion. The section reads as follows:

An entry in any public or other official book, register or record stating a fact in issue or relevant fact and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or by any other person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact.

In the first place, neither these letters are public or official books, registers or records as provided for by S. 35, nor are the opinions expressed therein such entries as are contemplated by this section. The very wording of the section conveys the idea of a duty imposed upon the maker of the entry by law or his official position to record the information he possesses or has gathered in an official document of the nature described therein. It further imports that the entry will be of a permanent nature and thus excludes all such writings as are merely of an ephemeral character and in so far as they do not incorporate the result of personal inquiries, are not intended to be used for reference in future. Another idea which runs underneath this section is that the person making the entry should be such as is invested with authority to record a decision which so far as the matter before him is concerned will be final. It thus excludes all views expressed before the final stage is reached and makes only those decisions relevant which constitute the final word in the matter. Tested in the light of these observations, it will be obvious that these letters which have passed between the various officials cannot be admitted under S. 35 so as to make the remarks made therein as legal evidence in the case. The final conclusions arrived at were recorded in the settlement papers and those are the only documents which can be consulted in the decision of these cases. (After dealing with evidence, the judgment proceeded). In the Utran case, besides other documents, the plaintiffs have produced a certified copy of an entry in the wajibularz to which is appended a note which says that by order of the Settlement Officer, dated 31st August 1864, talukdari dues were granted to the Malik of Pindigheb. In this case also the defendants were described as mere talukdars upto 1905-06 and it was for the first time then that their names were inserted in the jamabandi in the column of ala maliks and in the Muafi records the words "adna maliks" or inferior proprietors were used for the de facto proprietors. But as remarked above, this entry made behind the back of the plaintiffs, does not derogate from their right at all. The fact is that the dhauri and juti tax is provided for in the case of this village too; but that by itself is not enough to confer the status of ala maliks on the defendants, especially as, firstly, there is no indication in the entry itself as to the person or persons responsible for its payment or as to the method of its realisation and secondly, it has not been established that this tax was ever collected.

The remarks made above in relation to the Utran case apply mutatis mutandis to the Maghian and Jengla cases also, with this distinction that on the record of the Maghian case there is a detailed order of Major Cracroft, dated 3rd August 1864, refusing the claim of the defendants as ala maliks and assigning to them the talukdari dues only. If, as alleged by the defendants, the terms "ala malik" and "talukdar" are interchangeable, there was no point in the defendant's claiming the status of ala maliks at the time of the first regular settlement and no reason why the authorities concerned should have denied the status of ala maliks to them and conferred upon them the status of talukdars only. We have given our best consideration to these cases and have reached the conclusion that these three appeals must succeed. We therefore set aside the order of the Court below and accept these appeals with costs throughout.

C. N. Chandra and others—Plaintiffs —Appellants.

Dwarka Das — Defendant — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 543 of 1934, Decided on 21st May 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 21st December 1933.

(a) Mortgage—Mortgage with possession—Mortgagee's suit against lessees of mortgagor for rent—Decree—Failure to execute decree—Mortgagee was in position of lessor, hence held responsible for execution of decree though lease effected by mortgagor.

A mortgagee who was in possession of the mortgage property instituted a suit for rent against the lessees on the property. He obtained a decree against the lessees but failed to execute it:

Held: that the mortgagee was himself in the position of the lessor; hence he was the person responsible for the execution of the decree and not the mortgagor though the lease was effected by the mortgagor. Therefore he must make good to the mortgagor the loss caused by the non-execution of the decree, [P 44 C 1]

(b) Mortgage — Interest — Mortgage with possession—Mortgagee to take income in lieu of interest—Balance to be paid by mortgagor — Compound interest chargeable if failure to pay as stipulated—Income of property insufficient to cover interest—Mortgagee's failure to inform mortgagor accordingly—Mortgagee held not entitled to compound interest.

In a mortgage with possession it was stipulated that the mortgagee should absorb the income of the mortgaged property towards interest on the mortgage amount, and in case the income fell short of the amount of interest accrued due, the mortgagor should make good the balance thereof. In case of failure to pay the interest as agreed the mortgage amount was to carry compound interest at a higher rate. The income of the property was found to be insufficient to cover the interest. The mortgagee however failed to inform the mortgagor about the shortage:

Held: that the mortgagee was not entitled to charge compound interest. [P 44 C 1]

Hargopal and Sewa Ram—for Respondent.

Currie, J.—The facts leading to this litigation may be briefly stated. On 21st October 1924 Khota Ram and others mortgaged with possession their share in Daya Pindwala well consisting principally of a garden to Dwarka Das for a sum of Rs. 11,000. The mortgage money was to carry interest at the rate of 12 annas per cent per mensem. The mortgagee was to be in possession and realise the income which was to be credited against interest. If any default in payment of interest were made, the amount was to carry compound interest at 1 per cent per mensem. On 23rd March 1930 the mortgagors executed an agreement to sell to one Thakar Das for Rs. 30,000, of which Rs. 15,000 was to remain with Thakar Das, to pay off the mortgage held by Dwarka Das. Any excess or deficit in the amount due to the mortgagee was to be adjusted between the vendors and the vendee. The vendee sued for specific performance of this agreement and the matter was compromised on 29th April 1930 and the deed registered. On 21st August 1930 Thakar Das applied to the Revenue Courts for redemption of the mortgage on payment of Rs. 11,000, alleging that the produce had exceeded the amount due as interest and that really less than this amount was due. He deposited that amount on 2nd September 1930. The mortgagee claimed a sum of Rupees 16,641-0-9 plus Rs. 276 interest on the expenses and future interest. The Revenue Assistant, by his order of 20th February 1932, came to the conclusion that a sum of Rs. 15,989-4-0 was due. This amount was deposited under protest a few days later. On 11th April 1932 the mortgagee sued for a declaration that he was entitled to a sum of Rs. 2,100 over and above the amount allowed by the Revenue Assistant. On 7th May 1932 the vendee sued for a declaration that not more than Rs. 11,000 was payable. The vendee's suit was dismissed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, while he decreed a sum of Rs. 1,749-14-6 with future interest in favour of the mortgagee.

The decision of the trial Court was based on the mortgagee's account, which the Court held must be considered conclusive under the terms of the mortgage. It is clear however that the condition which occurs in Cl. (3) of the mortgage deed relates only to petty expenses incurred for repairs to the well, etc., and payment of revenue such as are detailed in that clause. The principal ground taken by Mr. Kishen Dayal on behalf of the appellants is that the mortgagee under the provisions of S. 76, T. P. Act, was under an obligation to maintain regular accounts of the income and expenditure, and that as he has failed to do so he should be allowed nothing by way of interest. The rulings cited in support of the proposition that the whole of the interest should be wiped out proceed on the particular circumstances of those cases. The principle governing such cases is that laid down in 44 I C 9 (1) that where the mortgagee has failed in his duty in respect of keeping of account, every presumption is to be taken against him. In the present instance the mortgagee did file certain accounts, or rather a statement of accounts supported by receipts from the purchasers of fruit. The account as prepared by him is given at p. 160 of the paper book. For the first two years he has allowed a sum of Rs. 348 on account of the year 1924-25 and Rs. 327-8-0 on account of the year 1925-26. Actually the land was leased for those two years at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per annum. He realised Rs. 348 from the lessees and succeeded in ejecting them after 18 months and then realised Rs. 327-8-0 as the owner's share for sale of the fruit. He accordingly sued the lessees for the sum of Rs. 1,152, i. e. Rs. 1,500 on account of 18 months, less the amount Rs. 348 already received, and obtained a decree for Rupees 1,152 from the revenue Court. He attempted to execute this, but according to his own account has realised nothing, and the execution proceedings were eventually filed in default of payment of process fees in August 1930. The mortgagors were impleaded by him as defendants in these proceedings and he claimed that Khota Ram, mortgagor, was the person really responsible for effecting the lease in favour of these persons. However, it is clear that he was in the position of, lessor himself and as such responsible for executing the decree. The lease money represents the value which the parties attached to the land at the time and credit should actually in my opinion, be given in the account.

The next item attacked is that of compound interest. This has been allowed throughout. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that it was the duty of the mortgagee to inform the mortgagors annually if the income received was not sufficient to cover interest on the mortgage and if any amount was due from them. In view of his failure to do this it is obvious that he is not entitled to compound interest specially in view of the fact that he has maintained no regular accounts. I therefore disallow the item of compound interest entirely. A sum of Rs. 184-10-6 was allowed for miscellaneous expenses in connection with the well and payment of revenue. Cl. (3) of the mortgage deed provides that no objection will be taken to the account prepared by the mortgagee as regards these items. This item, therefore has been rightly allowed. In addition, the vendee claimed credit for certain items which had been disallowed by the Revenue Assistant and the trial Court. The first of these was on account of chhirkao, that is to say, payments made by the Municipality for water used for sprinkling on the roads. There is no evidence however worth the name to show that any sum on this account ever reached the mortgagee's hands though the tenants did collect something. This item, in my opinion, cannot be allowed. A further item was claimed on account of some shisham trees which were alleged to have been sold for Rs. 120, but the evidence produced in support of this item was worthless. The item was rightly disallowed. A further sum was claimed on account of earth and water alleged to have been paid for by Ch. Narain Singh in connection with certain building operations, but this claim has not been pressed. Finally a claim was made on account of Rs. 410 for pomegranate trees which were alleged to have been removed from the nursery attached to the well and transferred to the mortgagee's own garden. In support of this the principal witness is Allah Wasaya. He was a tenant under the mortgagee and is still a tenant. This man throughout has stated that 410 plants were removed and there appears to be no reason to doubt this evidence. Admittedly the mortgagee has a pomegranate orchard at his own well, though he says that it was in existence when he obtained the land by pre-emption. I therefore hold that the vendee was entitled to claim credit for these trees. As regards the value to be attached to the trees the evidence varies.

In my opinion the amount should be allowed at the rate of eight annas per tree, giving a total of Rs. 205. Thus the account ran as follows:

Due on account of principal	Rs. 11,000-0-0
Due on account of interest after deducting receipt shown by the mortgagee plus the sum of Rs. 1,152	4,033-0-0
Due on account of expenses allowed	184-10-6
Total	15,217-10-6
Deduct on account of value of pomegranates	205-0-0
	<hr/>
Total due to the mortgagee	15,012-10-6

This is practically the sum that the parties themselves estimated to be due when they allowed Rs. 15,000 in the sale deed. Accordingly we accept the appeal and pass a declaratory decree declaring that the amount due on the land was Rs. 15,012-10-6. As neither party has succeeded in full, we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

ADDISON, JAI LAL AND ABDUL RASHID, JJ.In the matter of Stamp duty on security bond executed by Murad Ali.

Civil Ref. No. 51 of 1935, Decided on 31st October 1935, from Financial Commissioner, Revenue, Punjab, Lahore, D/- 23rd April 1935.

* Stamp Duty — Security bond—Insolvent asked to execute security bond — Art. 57 of Stamp Act applies to such bonds and not Art. 15, Sch. 1.

A person who had applied to be adjudged insolvent was asked by the Court to execute a security bond for Rs. 500 with one surety, to secure the insolvent's attendance in Court till the decision of his application. Accordingly a security bond was executed on a stamp of one rupee only. The question was whether this security bond was adequately stamped :

Held : that the bond had been executed to secure the due performance of a contract made by the insolvent to appear, and the surety to produce him in Court, under the provisions of S. 21, Provincial Insolvency Act. Therefore, Art. 57, Stamp Act, was applicable to bonds of this description. Art. 15, Sch. 1, Stamp Act, was not applicable and a maximum duty of Rs. 7-8-0 under Art. 57, Sch 1, Stamp Act, as amended by the Punjab Act, was leviable on a bond given under the provisions of S. 21, Provincial Insolvency Act : 1933 Lah 1004, Appl. [P 46 C 1]

Anant Ram Khosla—for Secy. of State.

Order.—This reference under S. 57, Stamp Act has been made by the Financial Commissioner, Punjab, under the following circumstances : An application was made under the Provincial Insolvency Act for adjudicating one Pir Bakhsh an insolvent. The Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, in whose Court the application was made, acting under S. 21, Provincial Insolvency Act, directed the alleged insolvent to execute a security bond in the sum of Rs. 500 with one surety to appear in Court till the case was finally decided, and in accordance with this order a bond was given by Pir Bakhsh with Murad Ali as his surety. It was stamped only with a court-fee stamp of one rupee and a question having arisen whether it was sufficiently and properly stamped, the Financial Commissioner has referred the matter for decision by this Court.

The Financial Commissioner is inclined to the view that the article applicable to the bond in question is Art. 15, Sch 1, Stamp Act. That article provides for stamp duty on a bond which is not a debenture and has not been otherwise provided for by the Indian Stamp Act or by the Indian Court fees Act. It is clear that, as the learned Financial Commissioner has remarked, this is a residuary article and we have, therefore, to see whether there is any other article of the Indian Stamp Act or any provision of the Court-fees Act which is applicable to the bond in question. The only article in the Indian Court-fees Act applicable to bonds is Art. 6, Sch. 2, which applies to a bail bond or other instrument of obligation given in pursuance of an order made by a Court or Magistrate under any section of the Code of Criminal Procedure or the Code of Civil Procedure and is not otherwise provided for in the Act. Now, it is obvious that the bond in this case was not given under any of the provisions either of the Criminal Procedure Code or of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, Art. 6 of the Court-fees Act is not applicable to it and no other provision of the Act has been brought to our notice which could be made applicable.

Coming to the Stamp Act, besides Art. 15 there are two articles which need consideration, viz. Arts. 40 and 57. Art. 40 which regulates stamp on a mortgage deed, expressly excludes a security bond from its operation. Moreover it is to be noted that no immoveable property was mortgaged in the bond in question. Art. 57 governs the case of a security bond or mortgage deed executed by way of security for the due execution of an office, or to account for money or other property received by virtue thereof or executed by a surety to secure the due performance of a contract. The duty to be levied is the same as the duty on a bond under Art. 15 if the amount secured does not exceed Rs. 1,000, and in any other case it is Rs. 5, which has been increased to Rs. 7-8 in this province by an amendment of the Indian Stamp Act by a local Act. The question then is whether the security bond in question can be held to have been executed to secure the due performance of a contract, as obviously it was not executed by way of security for the due execution of an office, or to account for money or other property.

In 15 Lah. 78 (1) a Division Bench of this Court held that a bond given for refund of the money realised by a decree-holder in case of success of the appeal by the judgment-debtor was governed by Art. 57, Sch. 1, Stamp Act, as amended by the Punjab Act 8 of 1922. The bond in that case was given under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and, though the question was not directly decided, it appears that the learned Judges held that it was executed to secure the due performance of a contract. In my opinion the bond in the present instance also is of a similar nature, that is to say, it has been executed to secure the due performance of a contract made by the insolvent to appear, and the surety to produce him, in Court under the provisions of S. 21, Provincial Insolvency Act. My opinion therefore is that Art. 57, Stamp Act is applicable to bonds of this description. The learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer, who appeared for the Crown, also supported this view. I would therefore hold that Art. 15, Sch. 1, Stamp Act, is not applicable and that a maximum duty of Rs. 7.8.0 under Art. 57, Sch. 1, Stamp Act, as amended by the Punjab Act 8 of 1922, is leviable on a bond given under the provisions of S. 21, Provincial Insolvency Act, and I would answer the reference accordingly. As in the present case the bond was for a sum of Rs. 500, the duty would be Rs. 3.2.0 in this Province.

Second Appeal No. 2049 of 1930, Decided on 7th December 1934, from order of District Judge, Hissar, D/- 21st July 1930.

(a) Punjab Tenancy Act (1887), S. 77 (3) Cl. H—Occupancy holder mortgaging tenancy with possession—Landlord claiming possession on ground that tenancy was extinguished and by dispossessing mortgagee—Suit falls under S. 77 (3), Cl. H.

Where the occupancy holding was alleged to be mortgaged with possession in favour of mortgagee by the last occupancy holder, and the landlord wants to dispossess him, a suit for such a relief would clearly fall under Cl. (h) of S. 77 (3) of the Act and the mere fact that the landlord is claiming on the ground that the tenancy had become extinct on the death of the last occupancy holder would not make any difference: 32 P R 1912, Foll. [P 47 C 1]

(b) Punjab Tenancy Act (1887), S. 77 (3)—Civil Court finding it necessary to decide matter coming under S. 77 (3)—Whole suit becomes triable by Revenue Court.

In a suit for possession of tenancy as soon as the civil Court finds it necessary to decide any matter which is cognizable exclusively by a Revenue Court under S. 77 (3) of the Act, its jurisdiction is ousted and the whole suit becomes triable by a Revenue Court. [P 47 C 2]

Bhide, J.—Mt. Lado, the last holder of the occupancy tenancy in dispute having died, the land was mutated in favour of Gobinda, Richhpal and Sundu (defendants 1 to 3). The landlords thereafter instituted the present suit for possession of the land on the ground that defendants 1 to 3 were not entitled to succeed and that the tenancy had become extinguished in default of heirs. The suit was resisted by defendants 1 to 3 on various grounds and one of the points raised by them was that the suit was triable by a Revenue Court and not by a civil Court. This contention was not upheld and the suit was decreed by the trial Court. On appeal the learned District Judge confirmed the decree of the trial Court to the extent of the shares of the landlords who had instituted the suit. From this decision defendants 1 to 3 have preferred a second appeal.

On behalf of the appellants, the question of jurisdiction was again raised before us and it was contended that the suit being triable by a Revenue Court, the decree passed by the Court below in favour of the respondents was wholly without jurisdiction. This contention was based firstly on the ground that the land having been mutated in favour of the appellants as occupancy tenants, and the plaintiffs having also realised rent from the appellants for about six years, the appellants must at any rate be held to be tenants and the suit was therefore one between landlords and tenants. As the suit was for ejectment of the appellants and the question of occupancy rights was also in dispute, it was contended that it was necessary for the Court to decide matters falling within the purview of Cls. (d) and (e) of S. 77 (3), Punjab Tenancy Act. It was further contended that as Mt. Lado had mortgaged the holding in favour of appellant Gobinda, and the plaintiffs were seeking to dispossess him without payment of the mortgage charge, there was also an issue between the parties falling within Cl. (h) of the same section. In view of these facts, it was urged that civil Courts had no jurisdiction to try the suit and the plaint should have been returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the Collector as required by the proviso to S. 77 (3), Punjab Tenancy Act. I do not think there is any force in the first contention. The plaintiffs sued the defendants as trespassers and not as tenants and the Courts below have not come to any finding that the appellants were treated by the plaintiffs as tenants. Nor was the learned counsel for the appellants able to point out any evidence worth the name on the record to show that the plaintiffs had recognised the appellants as tenants.

The second contention of the learned counsel, viz., there was an issue between the parties falling under Cl. (h) of S. 77 (3), Punjab Tenancy Act, which required decision in the suit, appears however to be correct. There is no doubt that the occupancy holding was alleged to be mortgaged with possession in favour of the appellant Gobinda by Mt. Lado, the last holder, and the plaintiffs wanted to dispossess him. A suit for such a relief would clearly fall under Cl. (h), S. 77 (3), Punjab Tenancy Act, and the mere fact that the plaintiffs were claiming on the ground that the tenancy had become extinct on the death of Mt. Lado would not make any difference: cf. 32 P R 1912 (1). The learned counsel for the respondents contended that the issue affected only one of the appellants, but this is immaterial, for according to the proviso to S. 77, Punjab Tenancy Act, referred to above, as soon as the civil Court finds it necessary to decide any matter which is cognizable exclusively by a Revenue Court under S. 77 (3), Punjab Tenancy Act, its jurisdiction is ousted and the whole suit becomes triable by a Revenue Court. The contention of the learned counsel for the appellants on this question of jurisdiction must therefore prevail.

The suit has been however tried on merits on all the necessary issues and I do not think the parties have been prejudiced. Under S. 100, Punjab Tenancy Act, I would, therefore, accept the appeal; and setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge direct that the decree passed by the trial Court be registered as a decree of the Collector and that the appeal presented to the District Judge be returned to the appellants for presentation to the proper Court. I would leave the parties to bear their costs in this Court as well as the District Judge's Court in view of all the circumstances of the case.

Criminal Trial—Fresh complaint—Inquiry under S. 202 — Complaint dismissed — Fresh complaint on same facts should not be entertained.

Though a previous order dismissing a complaint under S. 202 is not a bar to the institution of a fresh complaint, it is only in exceptional circumstances that the second complaint should be entertained on the same facts, for instance where the order of dismissal was manifestly perverse or foolish or based upon an incomplete record. Order.—Two brothers, Mahram and Mowaz of Bhera, mortgaged a house by registered deed executed on 26th

1. Changu v. Mahomed Bakhsh, (1912) 82 P R 1912=8 I O 666.

September 1924 in favour of one Ram Jowaya. The mortgage was with possession. Ram Jowaya died and was succeeded by Ralla Ram, who is said to be insane. In December 1930 Mahram took the house on lease from Ralla Ram. He made default in payment of rent and Ralla Ram obtained an ejectment decree against him on 16th November 1931. In execution of that decree Munshi Ram, a process server, with Chaman Lal and Basant Ram, nephews of Ralla Ram, went to the house to take possession of it on 5th June 1934. On 9th June 1934 Mowaz instituted a complaint in a Magistrate's Court in Sargodha accusing the process-server, Chaman Lal and Basant Ram of criminal trespass. The case was sent for enquiry under S. 202 to the Tahsildar, who, after recording the statements of four witnesses, reported that the case was false and had been made only for the purpose of evading delivery of the house to the mortgagee. Upon this report the Magistrate dismissed the complaint on 9th August 1934. In November 1934, three months later, Mowaz submitted a similar complaint to another Magistrate in Sargodha accusing the process-server, Chaman Lal and Basant Ram of criminal trespass on the same facts which had been alleged in the previous complaint. He made no mention of the previous complaint. The Magistrate recorded the evidence of the four witnesses whose statements had been taken by the Tahsildar and framed a charge against Chaman Lal and Basant Ram.

Chaman Lal and Basant Ram applied to the Sessions Judge for a recommendation to this Court for revision of the order. The learned Sessions Judge, while recording in his judgment that he was inclined to think that the Magistrate would have been well advised in dismissing the complaint and refusing to entertain it, nevertheless refused to interfere, mainly, it seems, because he thought the application was belated. Chaman Lal and Basant Ram have now come to this Court on revision and ask for the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court to be quashed. As has been pointed out on many occasions by this Court, though a previous order dismissing a complaint under S. 203 is not a bar to the institution of a fresh complaint, it is only in exceptional circumstances that the second complaint should be entertained on the same facts, for instance where the order of dismissal was manifestly perverse or foolish or based upon an incomplete record. There are no such exceptional circumstances in the present case. On the contrary it is clear that the order dismissing the complaint on 9th August 1934 was passed in view of the report based upon the whole evidence produced by the complainant. It is also manifest that the Tahsildar's recommendation was well grounded and was certainly not perverse and foolish. I accordingly accept this petition, and quashing the proceedings taken by the Magistrate dismiss the complaint of Mowaz against Chaman Lal and Basant Ram.

Civil Misc. Petn. No. 464 and Appeal No. 291 of 1935, Decided on 11th October 1935, from order of Din Mohammad, J., D/- 30th April 1935.

(a) Review—Erroneous admission of fact by counsel is not sufficient ground.

An erroneous admission of fact made by counsel cannot be considered to be a good ground for review. [P 49 C 2]

(b) Mahomedan law — Mutwalli—Decree declaring person as Mutwalli is not capable of execution—Remedy of Mutwalli is not under S. 144, Civil P. C.

In a dispute about takia, a person was declared to be a Sajjadanshin and another a Mutwalli. They were allowed to take over the property of the takia and give security for the same till the decision of an appeal from the order declaring them to be Mutwalli and Sajjadanshin. The Mutwalli took charge of some of the property and died. The Court allowed the Sajjadanshin to take over the remaining property in spite of the objections of one F who claimed to have been appointed as a Mutwalli. Afterwards this F obtained a decree declaring him to be a Mutwalli, and made an application under S. 144, Civil P. C., to be restored with the property of the takia.

Held: that a declaratory decree to the effect that a person is a Mutwalli was incapable of execution. A Mutwalli entitled to get the property under a declaratory decree could not have his remedy under S. 144, Civil P. C. [P 49 C 1]

Mohammad Alam—for Petitioner.Dev Raj Sawhney — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application for review of the order passed by Din Mohammad, J., in appeal on 30th April 1935. The material facts are that there has been a protracted litigation in connection with takia Shah Shohda at Ludhiana and eventually Sardar Ali Shah, respondent, and one Gahne Shah succeeded in establishing their claims as Sajjadanashin and Mutwalli respectively. From this decision an appeal was preferred by one Maula Shah to their Lordships of the Privy Council and this is still pending. The property belonging to the takia was in the hands of a receiver. Maula Shah made an application that the property should not be made over to Sardar Ali Shah and Gahne till the disposal of his appeal, but this Court allowed them to take it over on furnishing security. Part of the property was accordingly taken over by Gahne Shah but thereafter Gahne Shah died and the balance consisting of a sum of about Rs. 13,000 was taken over by Sardar Ali Shah. The respondent Fateh Mohammad claimed to have been appointed Mutwalli of the takia after the death of Gahne Shah, but his claim had not yet been established. The Court allowed Sardar Ali Shah alone to take the aforesaid balance of about Rupees 13,000 in spite of the objection raised by Fateh Mohammad, holding that there was no Mutwalli of the takia, at the time. Fateh Mohammad subsequently succeeded in appeal and got a declaratory decree to the effect that he was the Mutwalli of the takia and made an application under S. 144, Civil P. C., for restitution to him of the property taken over by Sardar Ali Shah and this application was granted by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana.

From this decision the present appeal was preferred. The appeal was at first accepted on the ground that Fateh Mohammad was not a party to the suit and had therefore no locus standi to make any application under S. 144, Civil P. C. At the hearing it seems to have been admitted by both parties that Sardar Ali Shah was a stranger to the suit, but it is now stated that this admission was erroneous, and it is on this ground that the order in appeal is sought to be reviewed. I doubt if an erroneous admission of fact made by counsel can be considered to be a good ground for review. But apart from this there is, I think, no force in this application for review; for S. 144, Civil P. C., seems to be clearly inapplicable to the circumstances. The decree in consequence of which the property in dispute was made over to Sardar Ali Shah has not been varied. The order passed by this Court was that the property should be made over to the respondents, i. e. both Sardar Ali Shah and Gahne Shah on their furnishing security (vide., the order of this Court dated 9th July 1930). In pursuance of this order Sardar Ali Shah has got the property. The security was ordered to be furnished only to meet any claims arising out of the result of the appeal to the Privy Council and the present claim does not obviously fall within that category. Fateh Mohammad has moreover only obtained a declaratory decree to the effect that he is a Mutwalli and such a decree is incapable of execution. It may be that Fateh Mohammad as a Mutwalli is entitled to get the property from Sardar Ali Shah, but his remedy does not appear to me to lie under S. 144, Civil P. C.

I therefore dismiss this application. No order as to costs.

Second Appeal No. 603 of 1935, Decided on 10th October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Attock, D/- 21st January 1935.

(a) Hindu Law—Gift—Delivery of possession not essential—Property capable of being delivered—Donee capable of taking possession—Possession must be delivered.

Passing of possession is not always necessary to validate a gift under the Hindu law, but it is an essential condition in order to make a gift valid if the property which is the subject-matter of the gift is capable of being given possession to the donee and the donee is capable of taking possession. [P 50 C 1]

(b) Deed—Setting aside—Limitation—Donor executing gift deed of property—Possession not given to donee—Donor instituting suit to declare gift invalid—Time commences to run when donee attacks donor's title to property.

A person executed a deed of gift of property but did not deliver its possession to the donee, Donee got the property mutated in his name. On this, the donor brought a suit to declare the gift invalid :

Held : that as possession was never delivered to the donee, time for such suit began to run when the donee first attacked the title of the donor. [P 50 C 1, 2]

Badri Das—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Sud—for Respondents.

Judgment.—On 29th November 1924 the plaintiff Bhagwan Das made a gift of a house in Campbellpur to the respondents, Gian Chand and Mt. Chandra-wali. It has been found that possession of the house was not given to the donees though it was provided in the deed of gift, which was a registered document, that the donor would be entitled to reside in one of the rooms of the house and actual possession of the remaining house had been or was to be given to the donees. After the date of the gift the donor remained in possession of the whole house throughout. In 1932 a mutation in respect of the house was made in the revenue records in favour of the donees. Consequently a suit was instituted by the appellant Bhagwan Das for a declaration that the gift was invalid because it was not accompanied by possession. The trial Court decreed the suit, but the District Judge on appeal has held, while agreeing with the trial Court that possession did not pass, that under the Hindu Law passing of actual possession is not necessary and therefore the gift was valid. He has also held that the suit was barred by time and further that it did not lie for a mere declaration because the plaintiff should have also asked for the cancellation of the deed of gift.

In my opinion the view of the District Judge on all these matters is erroneous. While it is true that passing of possession is not always necessary to validate a gift under the Hindu Law it is an essential condition in order to make a gift valid if the property which is the subject-matter of the gift is capable of being given possession of to the donee and the donee is capable of taking possession. There are some exceptions to this rule, e. g. when the donor and the donee stand in such relationship that the donor is practically the guardian of the donee or the property is not in possession of the donor but in possession of the tenants or even a trespasser and the donor has done all that is in his power to divest himself of his ownership and dominion over the property and to vest the same in the donee. Another exception is where both the donor and the donee are living together in the gifted house. But these exceptions have no application to the present case where the house in dispute was in actual possession of the donor and could have been given to the donees. It has been found that the donor has throughout been living in the whole house and the donees never took possession of any part thereof. The rule laid down in para. 358 of Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law has full application to the facts of this case. Some cases cited at the Bar merely illustrate the instances that I have given above on both sides and do not in any way militate against the general rule that ordinarily possession must be given to the donee in order to create a valid gift under the Hindu Law.

The suit in my opinion was not barred by time. The plaintiff was throughout in possession and he need not have instituted a suit to have the gift declared void till the donees did something to attack his title, and the first attack by them was by getting a mutation sanctioned in their favour in 1932. I am also of opinion that under the circumstances it was not necessary for the plaintiff to have prayed for the cancellation of the deed of gift. The plaintiff's principal contention is that the transaction evidenced by the deed is not effectual because owing to the accompanying circumstances the deed did not transfer any valid title to the defendants. It is probable that if his main ground for relief had been that the deed of gift was ineffectual owing to his consent to it having been given under undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation, etc., or for some such reason, then it would have been necessary for him to have the deed cancelled. On all these grounds therefore I hold that the decree of the District Judge is erroneous and must be set aside. I accept the appeal, and setting aside the decree of the District Judge restore that of the trial Judge with costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 12 of 1934, Decided on 17th December 1934, from decree of Dist. Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, D/- 31st August 1933.

(a) Contract — Novation — Essentials of—Subsequent contract has to be complete and valid.

Where the debtors execute a pronote in favour of the creditors and subsequently they execute a bond for the same consideration, but there is a condition precedent to the validity of the bond which is not fulfilled, there is no novation of contract and the suit on the pronote is maintainable: 1925 Mad 261, Foll; 1923 Lah 396 and 21 I C 222, Rel on.

(b) Accounts — Accounts settled—Settled account gives rise to cause of action and cannot be re-opened except on ground of fraud or mistake.

Where accounts have been settled and agreed upon between two parties and one party promises to pay, a suit can be filed on that promise. A settled account gives rise to a cause of action and the creditor need not prove that the balance found is correct provided it is accepted as correct by the debtor. The debtor will not be allowed to re-open the settled account and to defeat the claim of the creditor, based on a pronote by contending that certain account books relating to a particular period have not been produced in Court. For a settled account cannot be re-opened except on specific allegations of fraud or mistake: 1923 Rang 304 and 1919 Lah 497, Foll.

(c) Decree—Construction — Instalments—Amount and period of instalments is matter of discretion of Court—it should be exercised within reasonable bounds.

Where the Court directs a decree to be paid by instalments, the amount of the instalments and the period for their payment is a matter for the discretion of the Court, which is to be exercised within bounds and not in a manner so as to constitute a virtual denial of the creditors' rights.

Where debtors want instalments to be fixed, they ought to place evidence on record to show their inability to pay in a lump sum. In the absence of such evidence, the Court is not entitled to presume debtor's inability to pay the amount due to the creditors in a lump sum: 1933 All 90, Rel on.

Abdul Rashid, J.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by the Firm

Prem Das-Radha Kishen against Khan Bahadur Sardar Mohammed Hassan Khan (defendant 1) and Khan Bahadur Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan (defendant 2) for recovery of Rs. 17,792 10-6 on the basis of a pronote dated 20th April 1929, executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiffs. Defendant 2 is the nephew of defendant 1 and both of them belong to the family of Gurchani Chiefs. Jallab Khan, the grandfather of defendant 2, who was the first Tummandar, died in 1917. Thereafter defendant 2 became the Tummandar, but from 1917 to 1931 defendant 1 was acting as the Sarbrah Tummandar on behalf of his nephew. According to the plaint the dealings between the parties started in the year 1919. Prior to this, Lashkar Khan, the father of defendant 2, and Jallab Khan, his grandfather, had dealings with the plaintiffs. From the year 1919 to 1931, the defendants struck balances in the books of the plaintiffs and also executed several ruggas and pronotes in their favour. The last pronote was executed on 20th April 1929, and forms the basis of the present suit. On 25th June 1931 defendant 1, for himself and as "zimewar" of defendant 2, executed a bond in favour of the plaintiffs, whereby the entire amount due by the defendants was made payable by means of annual instalments of Rs. 500 each. The allegations of the plaintiffs were that defendant 1 had promised that he would get the signature of defendant 2 affixed to the aforesaid bond, and that it was distinctly understood that the parties would be bound by the terms of the bond only if defendant 2 agreed to abide by them; that defendant 2 refused to sign the bond, and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to institute the present suit on the basis of the pronote dated 20th April 1929.

Defendant 1 pleaded, inter alia, that the pronote dated 20th April 1929, (Ex. P/2) had been superseded by the bond dated 25th June 1931 (Ex. P/1); that there was no agreement on his part that he would get the signature of defendant 2 affixed to the said bond and that he was therefore liable for payment of the debt due from him according to the instalments fixed under the bond. It was further pleaded that at the time of the execution of the bond, the plaintiffs had absolved defendant 2 from all liability and that the suit was liable to dismissal as it had been instituted before the first instalment had fallen due in due accordance with the terms of the bond. It was also stated in the written statement that the defendants had signed the balances without fully understanding the accounts and that the amount mentioned in the pronote was not really due to the plaintiffs. Defendant 2 pleaded that the plaintiffs had got a bond executed by defendant 1 in respect of the debt in dispute and had absolved him from all liability; that no suit was maintainable on the original pronote and that the acceptance of the bond by the plaintiffs from defendant 1 had the effect of discharging defendant 2 from all liability. On these pleadings, the trial Court framed the following issues :

(1) Is the suit premature against defendant 1? (2) Can the plaintiffs sue the defendants on the basis of the pronote (Ex. P-2) dated the 20th April 1929? (3) If so, was defendant 2 discharged and is he not liable? (4) Are the pronote (Ex. P-2) and the bond (Ex. P-1) without consideration? (5) Is the plaintiff entitled to any interest and compound interest? (6) Are the defendants entitled to instalments?

The learned Judge of the Court below was of the opinion that "strictly speaking" the suit against defendant 1 was premature, but that he was prepared to take an equitable view and would decide the case on the merits and not dismiss it on account of this technical defect. He held that the pronote (Ex. P-2), dated 20th April 1929, was cancelled by the execution of the bond (Ex. P-1) in June 1931; that the plaintiffs could not sue the defendants on the basis of the pronote and that defendant 2 was discharged as defendant 1 took the entire responsibility under the terms of the bond. He further held that the pronote was for consideration, but to a limited extent. On these findings he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against defendant 1 for Rs. 9,976 and dismissed the suit against defendant 2. The decretal amount was made payable by annual instalments of Rs. 500 each. Against this decision, the plaintiffs have preferred an appeal to this Court. The most important point for determination in this appeal is whether there was any nova-tion of contract on 25th June 1931, when the bond Ex. P-1 was executed by defendant 1 in favour of the plaintiffs, and whether the plaintiffs are debarred from maintaining the present suit on the basis of the pronote dated 20th April 1929. It is therefore necessary to quote the following passages from the bond in extenso :

I, Khan Bahadur Sardar Mohammad Hassan Khan, son of Nawab Jallab Khan, Gurchani for myself and as 'Zimmawar' of Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan, son of Sardar Lashkar Khan, Gurchani, do hereby declare as follows :

A sum of Rs. 16,210 is jointly and severally due by me and Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan aforesaid to the joint Hindu family of Bhai Radha Kishen, etc. The agreement as to the payment of the said amount is as under :

We will pay the above debt with interest at the rate of annas 7 per cent per mensem by instalments given hereinafter. In default of payment of any instalment according to the agreement, the obligee shall realize the entire amount due in a lump sum with interest at the rate of Re. 0-11-0 per cent per mensem from my and Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan's persons and movable and immovable property without having any regard to the period of instalments or allow time for payment of the amount due with interest at the rate of Re. 0-11-0 per cent per mensem. No objection shall be raised thereto Moreover interest on an instalment paid shall be given credit for. Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan and I, the executant, shall jointly and severally be responsible for payment of amounts due to the obligee. We will not raise any objection regarding each other's liability The account has been fully understood. There is no dispute about rendition of the account.

It is clear from the wording of the bond that it was executed by defendant 1 on his own behalf as well as on behalf of defendant 2. Moreover though it was signed only by defendant 1, the persons and properties of both the defendants were made liable for the payment of the debt due to the plaintiffs under the terms of this bond. Defendant 1 had no right to make the person and property of defendant 2 liable, and it is therefore obvious that it was the intention of the parties that the bond shall be signed by both the defendants. It has been established on the record that this bond was taken to defendant 2 on 13th April 1932, but he refused to sign it. Radha Kishen, plaintiff, appeared as a witness in the case and stated that the bond Ex. P-1 was executed by defendant 1 on his own behalf and on behalf of defendant 2; defendant 2 was not present at that time and that according to this bond both the defendants were liable and that he did not mean to discharge Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan, defendant 2. Sardar Ghulam Haidar Khan admitted in his evidence that he was not present at the time when his uncle Sardar Mohammad Hassan Khan executed the bond Ex. P-1; that it was brought to him by the plaintiff and that he refused to sign it. All the circumstances of the case point to the fact that the plaintiffs never intended to absolve defendant 2 from liability, and that at the time of the execution of the bond by defendant 1, it was clearly understood by the parties that the bond would be operative only after it had been signed by defendant 2. As defendant 2 refused to sign the bond, the bond remained incomplete and did not give rise to any valid contract between the parties. In these circumstances it cannot be held that there was any novation of contract, which had resulted in the execution of the bond dated 25th June 1931, by defendant 1 in favour of the plaintiffs. In other words, there was a condition precedent to the validity of the bond, and this was that defendant 2 would sign it. But as he refused to sign it, the bond never became operative.

Reference may be made in this connexion to 1925 Mad 261 (1), where it was held that it was open to the parties to a contract to supersede that contract by another contract, but in order to do so all the parties to the first contract must be parties to the second contract. In the case reported as 21 I C 222 (2), a hundi, by which the defendant promised to pay to one C or order Rs. 10,000 sixty days after date, was endorsed to the plaintiff Bank by the drawee. The defence was that the bank was not a holder in due course and that the hundi was discharged by a subsequent mortgage given by the drawee to the Bank by way of merger or novation and also that defendant being liable as a surety was discharged under S. 135, Contract Act. It was held in that case that the defendant not being a party to the novation (i.e., the contract of mortgage), S. 62 of the Act would not help him, and there was no recital or evidence that the hundi was considered as discharged on the execution of the mortgage. There is not a tittle of evidence on the present record, either oral or documentary, with the exception of the statement of defendant 1, that the plaintiffs absolved defendant 2 from liability at the time of the execution of the bond. In fact the wording of the bond makes it perfectly clear that both the person and the property of defendant 2 were made liable for the payment of the debt due to the plaintiffs, and this could not be done unless it was intended that defendant 2 would sign the bond. If there was no novation of contract, it is evident that the plaintiffs are entitled to base their suit on the pronote, dated 20th April 1929, against both the defendants. Mere execution of a document by defendant 1 cannot absolve defendant 2 unless it is held that the bond gave rise to a fresh contract whereby defendant 2 was discharged from all liability.

Reference may be made in this connexion to 4 Lah 151 (3), where it was held that where a hundi, insufficiently stamped, is given in renewal of a prior hundi and a suit on the basis of the subsequent hundi is not maintainable owing to its not being properly stamped, the creditor can fall back on the prior hundi. S. 62, Contract Act, is no bar to his doing so. The second hundi would have operated as a discharge of the previous hundi, only if the second hundi was legally enforceable. It was for the defendants to prove that the right of the plaintiffs under the pronote had been extinguished. They have not tendered any evidence on this point. It was contended on behalf of defendant 1, that, at least so far as he was concerned, there had been a complete novation and therefore his liability under the pronote had been wiped out. This contention is wholly devoid of force in view of the finding already given that it was intended by the parties, at the time of the execution of the bond, that it would not become operative until both the defendants had signed it. Under the pronote both the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs and the bond was only intended to make the amount payable by instalments instead of being payable on demand. The plaintiffs however were not prepared to accept only one of the defendants as their sole debtor and to absolve the other from all liability. The bond not having resulted in a completed contract cannot be of any avail to defendant 1. I therefore hold that the suit on the pronote is maintainable against both the defendants.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the entire consideration for the pronote had not been received by them. It was urged that the plaintiffs had not produced their bahis with respect to the sum of Rs. 4,751-1-3 alleged to be due from Sardar Lashkar Khan, the father of defendant 2, nor had they produced the tombu of Nawab Jallab Khan relating to the sum of Rs. 7,850 alleged to be due by him to the plaintiffs. Exception was also taken to two other items of Rs. 617-8-0 and Rs. 181, the details of which had not been given in the accounts. All these items however relate to the period prior to 1919. The defendants struck a balance in the bahi of the plaintiffs on 16th March 1919 and admitted that a sum of Rs. 12,867-4-3 was due by them to the plaintiffs. The four items referred to above had been entered in the account prior to 16th March 1919, and by striking a balance on that day, the defendants admitted their liability for these four items. The defendants struck further balances on 27th March 1920, 13th March 1921, 25th March 1922, 22nd April 1923, 16th April 1924, 15th March 1925, 17th March 1926, 21st March 1927 and 15th April 1928, after fully understanding the accounts.

This fact has been mentioned in writing in Urdu characters at the foot of each balance, and each one of the balances has been signed by both the defendants. Both the defendants are Honorary Magistrates and can read and write Urdu. In these circumstances, it cannot possibly be held that the defendants struck these balances without understanding the accounts and that they did not satisfy themselves that the sums of Rs. 4,751-1-3 and Rs. 7,850 were actually due from Sardar Lashkar Khan and Sardar Jallab Khan respectively. No allegations were ever made by the defendants in their pleas or in their statements in Court that any fraud had been practised upon them. In these circumstances, the defendants cannot be allowed to re-open a settled account and to defeat the claim of the plaintiffs based on a pronote by contending that certain account books relating to the period prior to 1919 had not been produced in Court. It was held in 6 Rang 538 (4), that where accounts have been settled and agreed upon between two parties and one party has promised to pay, a suit can be filed on that promise. A settled account gives rise to a cause of action and the plaintiff need not prove that the balance found was correct, provided it was accepted as correct by the defendant. It was held in 1 L L J 220 (5) that a settled account cannot be re-opened except on specific allegations of fraud or mistake.

It was urged by the learned counsel for the respondents that it was not sought to re-open a settled account, but that only four items were being challenged by the respondents as the accounts relating to these four items had not been produced in Court. As these four items were included in the very first balance struck by the defendants, it would amount to the re-opening of settled accounts, if the plaintiffs were required to prove that these four items had actually been advanced to the defendants or to Lashkar Khan and Jallab Khan before 16th March 1919. The defendants have obviously adopted this course, as two of these items relate to very large amounts and constitute the major portion of the claim of the plaintiffs. In conclusion, it was argued on behalf of the defendants-respondents that instalments should be fixed as it was clear from the terms of the bond that at one time the plaintiffs were prepared to accept payment of their dues by means of annual instalments of Rs. 500 each. The learned counsel for the appellants urged very strenuously that no evidence had been brought on the record to show that the defendants were unable to pay the amount due on the basis of the pronote in a lump sum, and that no instalments should be allowed, as the defendants were men of means and position and could easily, if they wished to do so, pay the entire amount due to the plaintiffs in a lump sum.

It was observed in 54 All 539 (6) that where the Court directs a decree to be paid by instalments, the amount of the instalments and the period for their payment is a matter for the discretion of the Court; but it is a discretion which is to be exercised within bounds and not in a manner so as to constitute a virtual denial of the plaintiff's rights. So, where the amount of instalment was fixed at such a sum that it would take the plaintiff more than seven years to recover the decreed amount, and no future interest was allowed to him, the High Court altered the decree by doubling the amount of instalment and allowing future interest. In the present case, if the defendants wanted instalments to be fixed, they ought to have placed some evidence on the record to show their inability to pay in a lump sum. In the absence of such evidence, the Court is not entitled to presume that the defendants are unable to pay the amount due to the plaintiffs in a lump sum. For the reasons given above, I would accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the lower Court, dated 31st August 1933, and in lieu thereof pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 17,792.10.6 against both the defendants, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit till realization. The respondents shall pay the costs of the appellants throughout.

(a) Maintenance—Attachment—Right of maintenance in the form of annuity and in lieu of share in estate is not exempt from attachment.

Where a right of maintenance is sought to be attached, the true test to lay down is whether such a right is purely personal, non-heritable and non-assignable, or it is an alienable and heritable right which takes the shapes of an annuity or has been granted in lieu of a share in an estate. If it is the former, it will be protected under the provisions of the Civil P. C., but if it is the latter, it will not be exempt from attachment. [P 58 C 2]

In a family governed by rule of primogeniture, a dispute between the two brothers K and J was decided by arbitration by which K was entitled to the whole of his father's property and J to a certain maintenance with a right of residence. On the award being challenged by J's son an agreement was entered into by the parties under which the monthly allowance of J was increased. J was given Rupees 20,000 and promised Rs. 3,000 on the occasion of marriage of each child and J and his son and descendants relinquished all rights to the property which they possessed and undertook to be bound by the agreement for all time to come. J was later on declared insolvent and the Official Receiver proceeded to attach the amount of maintenance recoverable by him (J) under the agreement:

Din Mohammad, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the order of Rangi Lal, J., dated 28th February 1935, accepting the appeal of Diwan Jai Gopal against a concurrent order of the Courts below holding the sums received by him as maintenance attachable in insolvency proceedings.

The facts bearing upon the point of law involved in this case may shortly be stated. Diwan Raj Kumar, a Rais of Lahore, died leaving two sons, Diwan Krishan Kishore and Diwan Jai Gopal. On the death of their father a dispute arose between the two brothers which was referred to the arbitration of Mr.

Atkins, Deputy Commissioner. He made an award on 9th March 1910 by which he held that the family was governed by the rule of primogeniture and that accordingly Diwan Krishan Kishore was entitled to the whole of the property left by Diwan Raj Kumar and that Diwan Jai Gopal was entitled to a maintenance of Rs. 120 per mensem and to some house property for residence, the allowance ceasing on the death of Diwan Jai Gopal's children. On 25th July 1910 the part of the award relating to Diwan Jai Gopal was modified by the consent of the parties to the extent of increasing the monthly allowance to Rs. 200 and extending the allowance to the male descendants of Diwan Jai Gopal from generation to generation. On the same day an application was made to the Court of the District Judge (old style), Lahore, for the award to be filed. This was done and the award was made a rule of Court. Sometime later the two minor sons of Diwan Jai Gopal brought a suit challenging the award, which was eventually decided against them by the High Court on 25th February 1921. In the meantime one of the minors died. The judgment in this case is reported as 2 Lah 114 (1) which may with advantage be referred to for the history of the family and the award. It appears that the surviving minor was not satisfied with this decision and consequently he applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. During the pendency of this application, a tripartite agreement was entered into on 17th December 1921 among the parties concerned. The minor, as one of the parties, was represented by his mother Shrimati Puran Devi and the other two parties concerned were Diwan Krishan Kishore and Diwan Jai Gopal respectively. It was agreed that the minor will withdraw his application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and in lieu thereof the monthly allowance will be raised to Rs. 600, and that in addition to this Diwan Jai Gopal will be paid Rs. 20,000 in cash and will further be entitled to receive Rs. 3,000 on the occasion of the marriage of each child. By this agreement Diwan Jai Gopal and his son and descendants relinquished all rights to the property left by Diwan

Raja Kumar which they possessed, and undertook to be bound by this agreement for all time to come. In pursuance of this agreement it appears that the minor presented an application to this Court to withdraw his application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council and he also produced the agreement mentioned above incorporating the terms of the compromise which was the consideration for the withdrawal. The learned Judges constituting the Division Bench scrutinised the terms and came to the conclusion that it was in the interests of the minor appellant that the said compromise be effected and on this ground they sanctioned the withdrawal of the application on 22nd December 1921. It may be remarked that this agreement has all along been acted upon by the parties.

On 16th October 1933, Diwan Jai Gopal was adjudicated an insolvent and the Official Receiver proceeded to attach the amount of maintenance recoverable by Diwan Jai Gopal under the above agreement. On behalf of the insolvent an objection was raised that this maintenance was exempt from attachment under S. 28 (5) of the Provincial Insolvency Act read with S. 60 (1) (n), Civil P. C. The Insolvency Judge and the District Judge found against him, but on further appeal their order was set aside by Rangi Lal, J. Hence this appeal. The sole question that falls to be determined in this case is whether the maintenance received by Diwan Jai Gopal is a right to future maintenance which is exempt under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code or whether this maintenance is in the form of an annuity and is not immune from attachment.

Counsel for the Official Receiver contends that this maintenance was earned by Diwan Jai Gopal in lieu of the share to which he was entitled in the property of his deceased father and is based on the agreement dated 17th December 1921. He urges that a future right of maintenance as contemplated by the Civil Procedure Code is confined to those cases only where the right terminates with the life of the person receiving the maintenance and is not intended to cover those cases where the maintenance is received in the shape of an annuity. Persons who are entitled to be maintained by the head of the family may receive an allowance which may be covered by the terms of the Civil Procedure Code, but in a case like the present, when a person surrenders his whole estate in lieu of a cash receipt and a fixed monthly allowance, the money thus received will be treated as a sort of commutation of his interest in the property. The insolvent, on the other hand, has urged that there is a clear indication on the record that this maintenance was allowed to him not in lieu of any share in the property to which he was found entitled but was merely a subsistence allowance to which any junior member of the family, found to be governed by the rule of primogeniture, would be ordinarily entitled. He bases his contention on the award pronounced by Mr. Atkins where, as stated above, it was remarked that Diwan Krishan Kishore alone will be entitled to the entire property left by his father and that the rule of succession in the family being that of primogeniture, Diwan Jai Gopal as a junior member of the family will be entitled to subsistence allowance only.

The authorities relied on by either side do not throw much light on the matter, yet it is possible to deduce certain principles of law which may govern the present case. It is no doubt true that originally this maintenance was treated as a mere subsistence allowance, but the subsequent litigation that took place has in our view changed the nature of the previous award. The minor sons of Diwan Jai Gopal were not prepared to admit that they themselves or their father had no interest in the family property, and for this purpose, they instituted a regular suit in a civil Court. The High Court came to the conclusion that the award was a sort of family settlement arrived at between the adult members of the family and so bound the minors also and on this ground dismissed their suit. The surviving minor did not accept this position and had actually presented an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council claiming that he and his father had a share in the property and it was this dispute that was settled by the agreement executed on 17th December 1921.

By that agreement, as remarked above, any right, title or interest that they possessed in the property was surrendered by Diwan Jai Gopal and his minor son, and it was in lieu of this surrender that he secured an increase in his allowance as well as other advantages which have been mentioned above. Had the matter rested with the award, the position may have been different, but as the affairs stand at present it is difficult to hold that the enhanced maintenance received by Diwan Jai Gopal was a mere subsistence allowance and did not represent the commuted value of his interest in the property. It is significant that the subsistence allowance originally granted under the award and subsequently modified by the consent of the parties before the award was made a rule of Court was only Rs. 120. Under the new agreement this allowance was increased to Rs. 600 and this excess of Rs. 480 cannot be accounted for otherwise than by the fact that Diwan Krishan Kishore wanted to secure a permanently good title in the property unassailable by Diwan Jai Gopal or any of his descendants. It further implies a sort of an admission on the part of Diwan Krishan Kishore that his brother had some interest in the property which he purchased in a way under the agreement. In this connexion the most important authority relied on by Rangi Lal, J., is 59 Cal 1399 (2) but it has no bearing on the case. The rule applicable here may be deducible from the principles of law enunciated there, but it does not help the insolvent in the least. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held as follows :

The right of survivorship is not inconsistent with the custom of impartibility and it applies to the devolution of an impartible estate in a Mitakshara joint family. In order to establish that the family has ceased to be joint, it is necessary to prove an intention, express or implied, on the part of the junior members to renounce their right of succession ; it is not sufficient to show a separation in food and worship merely.

It follows therefore that the right of survivorship will not be available if the family has disrupted and that where the junior members of the family have expressly renounced their right of succession, as in the present case the incident of joint family will not apply. It is not clear how the learned Judge of this Court came to the conclusion that this authority rendered any assistance to Diwan Jai Gopal. The estate did not retain its character of joint family property and even if Diwan Jai Gopal had any right, title or interest in the family property prior to the agreement of 17th December 1921, it no longer existed after the execution of that agreement. In 40 Mad 302 (3), the judgment debtor had been allowed an extra allowance payable in monthly instalments to enable him to maintain the dignity of his position as a retired karnavan of the tarwad. The learned Judges considered that the true test to be applied in such cases was whether the intention of the grantor was to create a purely personal right to receive certain sum of money in the grantee and consequently inalienable, or whether his intention was to create an interest in property, either a fund or an estate which should be treated as alienable property. It is obvious that the maintenance payable to Diwan Jai Gopal is heritable and as such it is assignable. This authority therefore will afford no help to the insolvent.

In 30 Mad 279 (4), the allowance sought to be attached was hereditary grant of paddy out of the melwaram of certain land and it was held that this being so, it was attachable. In 63 I C 851 (5), it was remarked that the right of maintenance contemplated by Cl. (1) (n) of S. 60 is the right of a particular individual to be maintained; it is a purely personal right and does not include an annuity conferred by a will, more especially where the allowance is not personal but heritable. In 10 Cal 521 (6), it was laid down that the heritable right to receive a certain monthly allowance originally assigned in lieu of a share of landed property is not a mere right to maintenance or anything else exempted by the proviso to S. 266, Civil P. C. [now S. 60 (1) (n)].

This appears to be very near to the present case.

In 7 I C 80 (7), the maintenance intended to be attached was the monthly allowance allowed to a daughter and it was held that her right to receive the monthly allowance was not liable to be attached, being a purely personal right to future maintenance.

In 43 All 617 (8), under a family arrangement between two brothers, the younger brother was given certain villages in lieu of maintenance. The grantee was to enjoy the income of the villages during his life, without power of transfer, and at the elder brother's death he was to become the full owner. It was held by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court that such property was not exempt from process in execution against the life-tenant. It will be obvious therefore that the true test to lay down in these cases is whether the right of maintenance intended to be attached is a purely personal right not heritable and not assignable, or it is an alienable and heritable right which takes the shape of an annuity or has been granted in lieu of a share in an estate. If it is the former, it will be protected under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, but if it is the latter, it will not be exempt from attachment. The terms of the agreement, dated 17th December 1921 make it abundantly clear that the allowance granted to Diwan Jai Gopal was to continue in his family from generation to generation. It is also clear, as discussed above, that it was granted to him at the time when his minor son was putting forward a claim to a share in the property and that in lieu of this maintenance and certain other advantages, both father and son renounced their right in the estate itself. On the proposition of law deducible from the authorities cited above, it cannot but be held that the maintenance allowance payable to Diwan Jai Gopal is not a mere right to future maintenance as contemplated by S. 60 and is therefore not immune from attachment.

In these circumstances we accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of Nand Lal and Pran Nath Mehta—for Appellant.

Ghulam Mohyuddin and L. M. Datta—for Respondents.

Hilton, J.—Ranmast Khan, an Awan of Lawa in the Tallaganj Tahsil of the Attock District, made a gift to the defendant Muhammad Nawaz Khan, his son by one wife, of both land and house property. The plaintiffs are four sons of Ranmast Khan by another wife and have been given a decree for possession of a $\frac{4}{5}$ th share of certain fields measuring 480 kanals 13 marlas out of the gifted land, on the ground that it was ancestral property of Ranmast Khan and could not be gifted by him to one son so as to make an unequal distribution of it between his sons. Their suit was dismissed in respect of the rest of the land and the house property on a finding that these were the self acquired property of Ranmast Khan.

Both sides have appealed, but the appeal of the plaintiffs has not been pressed and I would therefore dismiss it, but would make no order as to costs. In the appeal of the defendant, Dr. Nand Lal argued that an Awan proprietor can gift his ancestral land and he relied upon 100 P R 1912 (1) and 83 P R 1911 (2).

1. Nur Khan v. Sarfaraz, (1912) 100 P R 1912=16 I C 21.

2. Khuda Bakhsh v. Wahamali, (1911) 88 P R 1911=10 I C 86.

In the former authority no decision was given by the Court to the effect that an Awan proprietor who has sons can make an unequal distribution between them and the latter authority, which was that of a single Judge, was not followed in 114 P R 1913 (3) and 72 P R 1914 (4), both of which support the view that an unequal distribution amongst sons cannot be made by an Awan proprietor of Tallaganj. I see no reason for not accepting these decisions, particularly as they accord with the custom laid down in the riwaj-i-am of the Tallaganj Tahsil. Dr. Nand Lal also relied on one instance contained in the judgment Ex. D-3, but that does not help the appellant, as a perusal of the judgment in question shows that it was a case of self-acquired property.

It was also argued for the appellant that some of the land which has been held by the trial Judge to be ancestral is not proved to be so. An examination of the Special Qanungo's report on the revenue records, upon which the trial Judge relied, shows that fields numbered 89, 90, 91, 92, 93 and 94, the total area of which is 29 kanals 18 marlas, are not proved to have been owned by Muhammad Khan, father of Ranmast Khan, in the Settlement of 1880. The judgment of the trial Court on this particular point is incorrect. These fields should have been excluded from the plaintiffs' decree. I would accordingly accept the appeal of the defendant-appellant to this extent that the decree is modified and the suit of the plaintiffs is dismissed in respect of fields numbered 89, 90, 91, 92, 93 and 94, measuring 29 kanals 18 marlas. I would leave the parties to bear their own costs of the defendant's appeal in this Court.

First Appeal No. 101 of 1935, Decided on 18th July 1935, from preliminary decree of Sub.Judge, First Class, Jhang, D/- 13th August 1934.

(a) Mortgage—Recitals—Burden of proof—Mortgagor stating in mortgage deed that they have proprietary right in land mortgaged and that they are entitled to make the mortgage—Suit on basis of mortgage—Mortgagors denying proprietorship in land on date of mortgage and contending that they were not entitled to make it—Onus is on them to prove that their statements in mortgage deed were untrue.

A mortgage deed set forth that the land mortgaged was the property of the mortgagors on the date of the mortgage, it being recorded as such by an entry in a Dakhila, and that the mortgagors were not members of an agricultural tribe being members of the Teli Chohan Tribe. On a suit being brought on basis of the mortgage, the mortgagors contended that the mortgage was void and unenforceable as the mortgagors had no proprietary right in the land on the date of the mortgage and as it was in contravention of the Punjab Land Alienation Act which did not allow a mortgage to be made by member of an agricultural tribe in favour of a member of a non-agricultural tribe. The mortgagors claimed to be Chohans belonging to a got of Rajputs, an agricultural tribe :

Held : that the onus was on the mortgagors to show that their statements in the mortgage deed that the land had become their property on the date of the mortgage and that they were members of Teli Chohans, a non-agricultural tribe were untrue. [P 61 C 2; P 62 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Applicability—Telis are distinct tribe and are true caste—All Teli Chohans are not Rajputs.

The Telis are a distinct tribe in the Punjab and are a true caste and not merely followers of an occupation. All Teli Chohans are not necessarily Rajputs. [P 62 C 2]

Coldstream, J.—One Fatteh Muhammad was given as a tenant a grant of land in Chak No. 268 in Jhang Tahsil in 1907. On 15th December 1926 his sons Ali Muhammad, Haji Muhammad and Muhammad Aqil paid to Government the sum of Rs 348-5-9 necessary to obtain proprietary rights in the land. On 22nd December 1926 Ali Muhammad and his brother Muhammad Aqil executed and registered a deed of mortgage in respect of this land which measured 222 kanals 19 marlas in favour of Hari Chand of Maghiana for Rs. 3,920. The deed stated that the mortgagors were Chohan by caste, that they were previously owners of a two thirds share of the mortgaged property and had purchased the remaining third share from their brother Haji Ahmad who had been paid Rs. 3,500, as its price out of the consideration for the mortgage. It was also mentioned in the deed that the land had been recorded as the mortgagors' by an entry made in a dakhila (voucher or receipt form) No. 49 dated 15th December 1926. A postscript to the deed noted that the mortgagors were non-agriculturists, being members of the Teli Chohan tribe. On 18th March 1927 the sons of Fatteh Muhammad were recorded as owners of the land by mutation in the land revenue records.

By partition of family property the mortgage rights passed to Sant Lal and Ramaya Lal, uncle and father of Hari Chand in 1931. On 21st December 1933 Sant Lal, Ramaya Lal and Hari Chand instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jhang, the suit out of which this appeal arises against Ali Muhammad and Muhammad Aqil for recovery of Rs. 7,887-12-9, principal and interest, by sale of the mortgage property. The suit was resisted by Ali Muhammad alone on the grounds that the mortgage was a void and unenforceable transaction because the land mortgaged was at the date of this deed the property of Government which the defendants were not competent to alienate without the Commissioner's sanction and because the mortgage was in contravention of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the mortgagors being Chohans who belong to a got of Rajputs, an agricultural tribe of the district, and the mortgage being of a kind which the Act did not allow to be made by a member of an agricultural tribe in favour of a member of a non-agricultural tribe.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the mortgagors were not members of an agricultural tribe, being Teli Chohans and not Chohan Rajputs as they claimed to be, and that the mortgage was therefore not in contravention of the Alienation of Land Act. On the other main issue his finding was that although at the time of the execution of the deed the mortgagors had not "technically acquired proprietary rights" and the mortgage "would have been void without the consent of the Commissioner," the mortgage was nevertheless enforceable in accordance with the principle embodied in S. 43, T. P. Act, and S. 18, Specific Relief Act, as they subsequently became full proprietors of the land. He also held that the mortgagors were estopped from pleading that they had no title in the land conveyed. On these findings he granted the plaintiffs the decree they sought, the decree being ex parte against Muhammad Aqil.

Against this decree Ali Muhammad has appealed. It is contended before us that the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have held upon the evidence that the mortgage was void because the mortgagors had no proprietary title to convey and were forbidden by statute to alienate their tenancy without sanction and because it was in contravention of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. As already mentioned the sale deed set forth that the land had become the property of the mortgagors on the 15th December 1926 by virtue of an entry in a dakhila No. 49 dated 15th December 1926. The onus was therefore rightly placed upon them to show that this statement was incorrect. Their counsel argues that this onus has been discharged by the production of a copy of the mutation order of 18th March 1927 by which they were recorded as proprietors in place of the Crown. This document contains a note by the patwari reporting the matter for mutation orders as follows :

Proprietary rights were granted as per order dated 6th January 1927 passed by the Deputy Commissioner on the basis of dakhila No. 49 made on 15th December 1926 in lieu of Rupees 848-5-9.

The sanctioning order of the revenue officer runs:

with reference to the Deputy Commissioner's order dated 6th January 1927 mutation of names in respect of the grant of proprietary rights (in the) entire Khata No. 47 . . . is sanctioned in favour of Ali Muhammad, Haji Muhammad and Muhammad Ali all three in equal shares as shown in the new entry.

It is argued that this proves that it was not until 6th January 1927 that the proprietary rights vested in Fattah Muhammad's sons. But this is not the case. We do not know what the orders of 6th January 1927 were. The natural assumption is that before the price of the land was deposited orders were passed by the Deputy Commissioner sanctioning the purchase of the rights by Fattah Muhammad's sons and that the sale was complete when the price was deposited. The dakhila itself has not been produced. There is no justification for supposing that the mortgagors' statement, made in the deed a few weeks after the money had been deposited, that their proprietary title had been recorded was untrue. Appellant's counsel relies strongly on a statement made by the patwari as defendant's witness that the proprietary rights were conferred on 6th January 1927.

But it is obvious that the Patwari's statement was made simply on a reference to the mutation of 13th March 1927, for the original papers were not with the Patwari, nor is there any reason to suppose that the Patwari had any means of knowing at what precise time the defendants obtained title. We have been referred by appellants' counsel to the rules now in force which regulate the grant of land in the colony. These show that in the case of a tenant of a peasant grant, as the mortgagors' seems to have been, the mere fulfilment by the grantee of certain conditions will not result in the acquisition of proprietary rights, but that after certain necessary conditions have been fulfilled it is still open to the Deputy Commissioner to refuse to convey the land to the tenant in proprietary right if he has not conducted himself properly. From this we are asked to conclude that the payment of the purchase price by the appellants could not have conferred proprietary rights on them until the Deputy Commissioner passed a further order which order must be presumed to have been that of 6th January 1927. I see no force in this argument. In face of his solemn declaration in the deed it was for the appellant to prove positively that proprietary rights were not acquired by him and his brother on 15th December 1926 either because the Deputy Commissioner was making further enquiries or because some conditions still remained unfulfilled or for some other reason. This he has not done. That there may be cases in which peasant grantees of colony land can acquire valid proprietary rights by the mere deposit of the necessary amount in the Government Treasury is clear from a Division Bench judgment of this Court in [Case No. 891 of 1933 (1)]. See also 8 P R 1915 (2). The appellants' evidence was clearly in my opinion insufficient to show that his statement that he had acquired proprietary rights of the land before the mortgage was untrue.

It is unnecessary in view of this finding to discuss the question whether the principle to which S. 43, T. P. Act, gives effect is applicable to this case, as the respondents' counsel contends it is on the ground that the mortgage did not purport to create any charge upon the tenancy but clearly mortgaged the proprietary rights which did exist at the time but were not vested in the mortgagors.

We have considered carefully the whole of the evidence relating to the tribe or caste of the appellant. It has been dealt with fully by the learned Subordinate Judge. Here again the onus lay very heavily upon him to prove positively that the statement in his deed that his tribe was teli Chohan and was a non-agricultural tribe was untrue. For the appellant the principal argument urged is that the mortgagors were really Rajputs of the Chohan got, that the word Teli was used merely as a description of a class of artisans (oil pressers) recruited from other tribes and that Fattah Mahommed's family so described themselves because they themselves once worked as oil pressers or that their family had at one time worked as such. The suggestion that Fattah Mahomed and his sons worked as telis was based simply on the statement made by the plaintiff Sant Lal (P. W. 5) that "at first they worked as oil pressers" but an inspection of the vernacular record shows that what Sant Lal said was that their ancestors used to do this work, that is to say that at one time the mortgagors' predecessors did the ordinary work of their tribe. Fattah Mahomed was an orderly of the Deputy Commissioner, Ali Mahommed was Head Clerk in the District Board Office, and there is evidence that for generations the family has not worked as telis. Ali Mahomed himself in giving evidence did not state that his ancestors within recent times were oil pressers, and there is no evidence at all that any of his predecessors did so. On the other hand we find that in the deed selling his share of the suit land to his brothers (P. W. 5/1) Haji Ahmad not only stated that his caste was teli but also that by occupation he was a shop-keeper and described his brothers as by caste Chohan telis by occupation service.

The proposition that the term teli Chohan by which Fattah Mahomed and his relations have described themselves in older deeds was evidence only that the tribe had once done teli work, has no more force, for the teli are a distinct tribe in the Punjab as is made clear in Rose's Glossary of Punjab Tribes and Castes (Vol. 3, pp. 462-63). No doubt it is there stated (p. 464) that some of the got, for instance the Chohan got are of ostensibly Rajput origin and the caste is apparently recruited from time to time by the absorption of telis by occupation, but this statement does not mean that all Chohan telis are now Rajputs. According to Ibbetson's Punjab Castes (p. 647) the telis are a true caste and not merely followers of an occupation. From the evidence of the Sadr Patwari of Jhang (pp. 8 and 9 of the printed record) it would appear that there is no tribe called Rajput Chohan notified as an agricultural tribe in Jhang. The Jat Chohan are so notified. But the appellant never claimed to be a Jat. The fact that a person previously described as a Kamangar Chohan has had the entry of his caste altered into Rajput Chohan does not help the appellant. The oral evidence is not of a convincing kind and has rightly been rejected by the lower Court. Importance has been attached by appellant's counsel to three documents put in evidence by his client dating from before the execution of the mortgage. These are a certificate granted to Ali Mahommed on his passing the patwari's examination in 1904 (D-8) and two admission certificates (D-3) and (D-4) granted by the Head Master of the Islamia High School to Ali Mahommed's sons in 1924 and 1926. In these the caste of Ali Mahommed and his sons is put down as Chohan Rajput. The word Rajput in D-8 is as noted by the learned Subordinate Judge apparently an addition to the rest of the writing on the form in another ink by a different pen and in another hand, and its evidence is worthless. As regards the school admission certificates I have no doubt that Ali Mahommad reported his sons to be Rajputs with a view to social and official advancement.

To the pedigree table produced by the appellant's Mirasi witness Allah Ditta, D. W. 20, no evidentiary value can be attached. It is a most suspicious document. The plaintiffs did not rely only upon the statements made by Ali Mahommad and Mahommad Aqil in the mortgage deed. There is also the deed of sale in their favour executed by their brother Haji Mahommad (P. W. 5/1) to which I have already referred. In 1901 relations of the appellant described themselves as telis in a registered sale deed (P. W. 3/1). Before the Registrar they said they were telis known as Chohan. In 1905 Mohammad Aqil cousin of the appellant described himself as Chohan teli in a mortgage deed (P. W. 3/2). In 1917 Ali Mohammad and his two brothers stated that they were teli Chohans when registering a deed (P. W. 1/1). In the revenue records prior to the mutation following on the mortgage in dispute they were recorded as teli Chohan.

The Privy Council judgment in 6 Lah 269 (3) cited by appellant's counsel was upon a wholly different set of circumstances. The revenue records in that case supported the appellant's case which was that he was of the Mohal got, a sub-tribe of Rajputs. It was proved that there was no other tribe except that of Rajputs which contained a got of the name of Mohal. It was admitted that if the appellant was a Mohal his claim to be a Rajput would be established. This judgment has no application here. My conclusion is that the lower Court's decision on this part of the case was correct. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Nawal Kishore—for Opposite Parties.

Order.—Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1934 and Civil Revn. No. 8 of 1934 are connected and will be disposed of together. These arise out of execution proceedings relating to a decree passed on the basis of an award on an application under Para. 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. In the application, the value for the purpose of jurisdiction was given as Rs. 5,000. Execution proceedings were taken in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sialkot, and the learned Judge passed an order on the 4th of August 1932, holding that Mst. Basanti Devi could execute the decree in respect of an item of 1325 but not in respect of the ornaments or any share out of the sum of Rs. 4,500. From this decision, an appeal was presented to the District Judge, who was of opinion that the value of the property in dispute being more than Rs. 5,000 the appeal lay to this Court. The appeal was accordingly returned for presentation to this Court. The decree-holder has now come up to this Court, and has filed a petition for revision of the order of the learned District Judge along with the appeal.

It is contended on behalf of the decree-holder that the value for jurisdiction having been fixed in the original application at Rs. 5,000 the valuation cannot now be questioned in execution proceedings. This contention appears to me to be sound. According to S. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, the value of a suit cannot be questioned in appeal except when the objection is taken at the earliest stage and it is shown that the objector has been prejudiced. In the present instance, the objection was never taken in the proceedings under S. 20, Sch. 2 of the Civil P. C. or any appeal arising therefrom and it seems to me clear that the objection cannot now be raised in execution proceedings. A similar view was taken by a learned Judge of this Court in Civil Appeal 921 of 1933 (1).

I, therefore, accept the petition and set aside the order of the learned District Judge in which he has held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the decree-holder for presentation to the learned District Judge for disposal on merits. In view of all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their costs.

Second Appeal No. 861 of 1931, Decided on 11th July 1934.

Hindu Law — Debts — Father — Decree against—Creditor can proceed against joint family property—Right is not lost by subsequent partition.

A creditor has a right to proceed against the joint family property in execution of a decree against father before partition takes place and this right is not lost when a portion of the joint family property passes into the occupation of one member of the family under a partition: 1931 All 512 and 1929 All 726, Foll; 1928 Mad 657, Not foll. [P 64 C 2]

Judgment.—The facts of this case are simple. The plaintiff obtained a decree against Manohar Lal and had some family property attached in execution of the decree. Madan Lal, son of Manohar Lal, then raised an objection in the executing Court to the effect that the property under attachment has passed to him on partition. The objection was upheld and the property was released from attachment. The decree-holder has now brought the present suit for a declaration that the property is still liable to attachment in execution of his decree.

It has been found that there was a partition between Madan Lal and his father and that this partition was not the result of fraud or collusion; but the debt was incurred before the partition took place. The trial Court held that this was sufficient to render the property liable to attachment. On appeal to the District Judge it was held that the property which had passed to Madan Lal on partition might be liable for the satisfaction of his father's debts incurred before the partition took place, but that the creditor could only obtain this satisfaction in a suit to which Madan Lal was a party, and could not attach the property in execution of a decree passed against his father alone. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly dismissed, and he has come up in second appeal.

The decision of the lower appellate Court follows the view which has been consistently taken by the High Court of Madras, as will be seen from the judgment of the Full Bench in 51 Mad 361 (1). On the other hand, a different view has been taken by the High Court at Allahabad. The question now in issue came up for decision in 51 All 932 (2) which was followed by the Full Bench decision in 53 All 868 (3). The view taken therein is based on the principle that the creditor has a right to proceed against the joint family property in execution of a decree against the father before partition takes place, and that this right is not lost when a portion of the joint family property passes into the occupation of one member of the family under a partition. This view seems to be more in consonance with the view taken by this Court in analogous cases than the view taken in Madras.

I accept the appeal, and restore the decree of the trial Court, but leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court and the lower appellate Court, in view of the conflicting decisions on the subject.

First Appeal No. 618 of 1932, Decided on 14th February 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, D. 10th February 1932.

M. C. Mahajan and Tirath Ram—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal, Bishen Narain and J. G. Sethi—for Respondents.

Coldstream, J.—On 16th December 1927 the firm Jawahar Singh Harnam Das signed letter addressed to the Agent of the Central Bank of India, Ltd., at Lahore applying for a loan of Rupees 75,000. The letter stated that the applicant would execute a promissory note for the amount of the loan and deposit as security for the loan the deed by which they had purchased a cotton factory at Mian Channum in Multan District. On the same day the firm executed a promissory note for Rs. 75,000 payable on demand carrying interest at one per cent above the local Imperial Bank of India rate subject to a minimum rate of 9 per cent per annum. They also on the same day gave the Bank's Agent a letter assuring the Bank that the property, the title-deed of which had been deposited, was free from all incumbrances. The deed had been in the Bank's possession since before 16th December. On 13th September 1929 the firm mortgaged the factory to Arura Mal Durga Das and two other firms for Rs. 39,000. In the mortgage deed it was stated that the factory was already mortgaged to the Central Bank of India for Rs. 75,000 by means of deposit of title-deeds. On 23rd May 1930 the Bank instituted a suit in the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge of Multan to recover Rs. 84,862-2-0 from the firm by sale of the factory. The members of the firm were found to have been declared insolvents and the Court impleaded the Official Receiver. There were also impleaded for the trial the legal representatives of one Jawala Das to whom the firm of Khan Chand Sawaya Ram, one of the pusine mortgagees, had transferred their mortgage rights.

The suit was contested on many grounds but only two of the pleas concern us now—one that the amount due upon the promissory note was less than that claimed as a sum of Rs. 3,944-15-6 which had been repaid ought to have been credited against the principal debt, and other that "no lawful mortgage had been effected in favour of the plaintiffs by means of deposit of title-deeds" because the letter of 16th December 1927 which constituted the agreement between the parties, being unregistered and unstamped could not create a charge upon the factory and could not be received in evidence of the mortgage oral evidence of which was excluded by S. 91, Evidence Act. The learned Sub-Judge found force in these pleas. He found the amount due on the promissory note to be Rupees 71,055-0-6 and passed a simple money decree for this sum.

Against this decision the plaintiffs have appealed, the contention pressed on their behalf being that on the finding of the lower Court itself that the plaintiffs were entitled to credit the sum of Rupees 3,944-15-6 as interest, the decree should have been one for Rs. 80,917-2-6 and that the learned Sub-Judge erred in deciding that defendants' letter of 16th December 1927 was a document which required registration under the provisions of S. 17, Registration Act. That there is force in the first of these contentions is not disputed by respondents' counsel. The learned Sub-Judge's calculation of the amount due to the plaintiffs upon the promissory note is inconsistent with his finding that the payment of Rs. 3,944-15-6 was not shown to have been wrongly credited by the plaintiffs. Respondents' counsel admits that on this point the appeal must succeed. The letter signed by the plaintiffs on 16th December 1927 is the Exhibit P-20 at p. 65 of the printed record. It runs as follows :

"Dear Sir,

We beg to apply for a loan of Rupees 75,000 on the following terms :

1. The loan shall be repayable on demand and we shall pass a demand promissory note for the amount.

2. The rate of interest shall be 2 per cent over Bank rate with a minimum of 9 per cent per annum with half yearly rests.

3. The loan to be secured by equitable mortgage by way of deposit of title-deeds of our property and/or against other securities detailed below:

Details of title-deeds and/or other securities. Sale-deed dated 30th August 1923, by Janda Singh Dhana Singh, in favour of Harnam Das and Ram Lal in respect of 37 kanals 12½ marlas land together with 70 ginning machines, press, other machinery and buildings fixed and built thereon.

4. We are to make out a marketable title to the property before the loan is made.

5. We will pay all costs of investigation of title and all your costs of getting the properties offered as security valued by your Engineer and all your costs charges and expenses in the matter between Attorney and client on demand notwithstanding that for any reason other than your wilful default the loan might not be made.

6. The property, if you so desire, will be insured in your name in the sum of Rs. 1,52,000 and we will duly pay all insurance premia as they become due and will keep up the insurance. If the property is already insured in the above amount we will assign the policy to you.

7. As regards the property above offered as security we declare that we are the sole absolute owners of the property and no one else has any share or interest in the property and the property is free from all encumbrances and is not subject to any mortgage or charge of any sort or kind and there is no suit proceeding or litigation pending in any Court in respect of the same and I have not received any notice from the Municipality or any other authority for the repairs or otherwise in respect of the property or the use thereof.

Yours faithfully,

16-12-1927 Bhai Jawahar Singh Harnam Das."

It is admitted by counsel that the sole point for decision is whether this letter required registration and was therefore, inadmissible in evidence in the absence of registration, that is to say, whether this document constituted the bargain between the parties or is merely evidence of a transaction independently completed by the deposit of the deed. What has to be determined is whether the letter purported or operated to create, declare or assign a right, title or interest in the factory. The fact that it was signed on the day on which the deposit was made is immaterial [See 105 I C 765 (1)]. Read by itself it is obvious that it could not embody the bargain between the parties. The letter did not accompany the title-deed for the defendants' case was that the deed was already with the Bank, with whom the defendants had already been negotiating for the loan. The case is clearly distinguishable from that dealt with by the Privy Council in 1923 P C 50 (2). In that case the letter which was held by their Lordships to constitute the bargain between the parties expressly authorised the mortgagee to hold certain title-deeds accompanying the letter as security against the loans advanced. In the present case the letter by itself created no charge. It asked for a loan, offering a title-deed as security and left it open to the Bank to lend the money either with or without accepting the security offered. It could not therefore embody operative agreement or record the real transaction which effected not by the letter but by the deposit of the title-deed, the executing of the pro-note and the advance of the loan. The fact that the letter may be evidence of the transaction will not make it compulsorily registrable. Nor did the letter require registration even if the advance was conditional on its being written [See 1931 P C 36 (3)]. That the letter did not as a fact embody the agreement seems to me clear from the fact that while the proposal made therein was that the interest should be two per cent above the prevailing Bank rate, the loan advanced on the pro-note was to carry interest at one per cent above this rate.

Respondents' counsel has referred us to a number of rulings in which documents relating to the deposit of mortgage deed as security for loans have been held to require registration. None of these is of a nature similar to the document with which we are concerned. In 1920 Cal 312 (4) the document in question was a letter expressly putting it on record that title-deeds deposited were to be held as collateral security. The document alone created the charge and without it there would have been nothing to attach the debt to the deposit of the deeds. In the present case the connection between the loan and the deposit of the deed is proved by an entry in the Bank's register of 16th December 1927, recording the advance of Rs. 75,000 and the deposit of the title-deed. In 138 I C 247 (5) also the document held to be inadmissible because it was unregistered was a memorandum containing the words:

having placed in your hands the securities as per list mentioned on the reverse as security... I hereby agree that in default of payment on demandyou shall be at liberty to sell all or any of such securities as shall be sufficient to reimburse to the Bank, etc.

The distinction between such a document and the defendants' letter is obvious. The documents in the other cases cited by respondents' counsel were of a similar character. To me it seems clear that the letter neither purported nor operated to create or declare any right, title or interest in the factory and that the Sub-Judge's decision on this point cannot be sustained. It is not disputed that on this finding the Bank is entitled to a decree for recovery of the loan by sale of the factory. We are informed by counsel that the factory has already been sold and the proceeds are deposited with the Receiver. I would accordingly accept the appeal with costs throughout against the contesting defendants and grant the Bank a decree for Dalip Singh, J.—This appeal can be disposed of on a short point viz., that the appellant has entirely failed to prove that there is any custom of adoption among the Awans of Garhi Awanan. The evidence of the appellant is to the effect that their custom is the same as that of Awans of Jhelum and Shahpur. The witnesses admit that no instance of adoption is known among them in Garhi Awanan and the customary law of the District is against the power to adopt. The Riwaj-i-ams of Jhelum and Shahpur have not been produced by the appellant either in the Court below or here. We have looked at the customary law of these Districts and they do not support the appellant's contention. The appellant also contends that the suit is barred by time but there is no good evidence to show that the plaintiff had any previous knowledge of any claim to adopt or of an adoption having taken place. Hence the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2026 of 1931, Decided on 25th June 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Dalhousie, D/- 5th August 1931.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Riwaj-i-am of 1913 of Gurdaspur District—Answer to question 16 is not quite correct.

The reply to question 16 in the new riwaj-i-am of 1913 for Gurdaspur District, goes too far and has been made out of self interest inasmuch as it states that all collaterals, however remote exclude daughters: 60 P R 1889, Rel on.

(b) Custom (Punjab) — Succession — Randhawa Jats of Gurdaspur—Ancestral or self-acquired property — Collaterals within 4 degrees generally exclude daughters — Collaterals of 5th degree do not.

Among the Randhawa Jats of the Gurudaspur District, the daughters are generally excluded by collaterals within four degrees from inheriting the ancestral or self-acquired property of their father. The collaterals of the father belonging to the 5th degree are not however entitled to exclude the daughters: 1927 Lah 241, fol.; 1916 P C 129, not foll. [P 70 C 1]

*Har Dayal and Achhru Ram—*for Respondents.

Addison, Ag. C. J.—The land in dispute belonged to Attar Singh, a Randhawa Jat of village Ghanike Bangar in the Batala Tahsil of Gurudaspur District. He died some 40 years ago and was succeeded by his widow, Mt. Tabo. She gifted the land in April 1924 in favour of their two married daughters, Mt. Harkaur and Mt. Dai. After the death of Mt. Tabo, one set of reversioners sued the daughters for possession of their two thirds share of Attar Singh's land on the ground that they were entitled to succeed upon the death of the widow, who had no power to make a gift of it in favour of the daughters. Another set of reversioners brought a separate suit for their one-third share. During the pendency of the first suit, Mit. Singh, one of the plaintiffs died and that suit abated to the extent of his one-third share of the land in dispute. Thus, only one-third share of the land in dispute is now in suit in each case. The Courts below have concurred in finding that the land is not ancestral and that the daughters succeed to their father's self-acquired land in preference to collaterals of the fifth degree. On these findings the two suits were dismissed by the trial Court and the appeals were dismissed. Against these decisions these two second appeals have been admitted to a hearing on certificates granted by the District Judge under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act.

In the Customary Law of the Gurudaspur District, prepared in 1913, the Answers to Questions 16 and 17, as recorded at pp. 30 and 31, are in favour of the appellants. It is stated that the general rule is that daughters are excluded by the widow and male kindred of the deceased however remote, with certain exceptions which do not apply to the present case. It is also clearly stated that no distinction is made between immovable and moveable, ancestral and self-acquired, property of the father. In Appendix C, at p. 73, however a fairly large number of mutations are set out in which daughters inherited.

A customary law had been compiled in the 1893 Settlement. In it are the same questions 16 and 17 at pp. 18 and 19. The answer is still the same as regards question 17, namely, that there is no distinction between the immoveable and moveable, ancestral and self-acquired property of the father; and as this customary law was prepared at a time when the villagers were less sophisticated, there seems prima facie no reason to doubt the statement of custom contained in both of riwaj-i-ams in this respect. The answer to question 16, is however different. It was stated in 1933 that if there were near male kindred, daughters and their descendants did not inherit though they were entitled to maintenance until their marriage. A note was added that the exact limit of relationship within which near male kindred excluded daughters and their descendants was not fixed, though probably all male descendants of a common great-grandfather would, it was said, exclude daughters, as the latter's right of inheritance as such was very weak in this district. Reference was also made to 60 P R 1889 (1). The authority just referred to is an interesting one. In that case the collaterals were of the fifth degree and it was held that they were too remote to exclude daughters. An interesting paragraph from this judgment may be quoted :

No doubt it has been held that daughters are generally excluded by nephews (though there are exceptions even to this), but in all cases where the collateral was more distantly related the question of custom has had to be made the subject of a special inquiry, the result of which has been sometimes for, sometimes against, the exclusion of the daughter ; the number of cases where it has been against exclusion naturally increasing, as the relationship of the collateral became more remote. But in each case the custom has been decided by special inquiry and not on general assumptions.

With great respect we endorse these remarks. In view of 60 P R 1889 (1) and of the entries in the riwaj-i-am of 1893, which was compiled shortly after the decision in that case, we think that the reply to question 16 in the new riwaj-i-am of 1913 goes too far and that it was made out of self-interest, inasmuch as it states that all collaterals, however remote, exclude daughters. It may be the case that, in the Punjab, custom can be regarded as something which does slowly and imperceptibly change and that it need not be absolutely invariable, though the latter is the usual conception of what custom is. But such a change would have to be gradual and a new custom cannot be created by the mere assertion of the various tribes at a subsequent Settlement. With respect to this matter, it has always appeared to us that the earliest riwaj-i-am serves as a very useful check on subsequent riwaj-i-ams and may even be regarded as the most important document in which custom has been recorded. It may here be stated that this affords an explanation to the somewhat large number of instances given in Appendix 'C' in the 1913 document where daughters are shown as inheriting. No inquiry was made as to how remote the collaterals were in these instances. That was probably because in 1913 the various tribes stated that the general rule was that daughters were excluded by collaterals, however remote. The first statement in the 1893 document was not looked at. Had that been done and had the instances, in which daughters inherited, been investigated to see what was the degree of relationship of the collaterals in each case, the 1913 document would have been of much greater use.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 P R 1917 (2) held that the entry in the riwaj-i-am in favour of the succession of a daughter's son whose father was a khanadamad, in preference to collaterals, was a strong piece of evidence in support of such custom which it lay upon the plaintiff's collateral's to rebut, even assuming that there was a general custom of agnatic or collateral succession in default of male issue to the exclusion of female heirs among the agricultural tribes of the Punjab, about which the decisions of the Punjab Chief Court were by no means uniform. This means that the entries in the 1913 document must be considered in the first instance a strong piece of evidence which cannot be subtracted from by general consideration, such as statements to the effect that daughters could not have taken part in the inquiry and therefore any entry against them in the riwaj-i-am must be held to be of little value. That would be to go against the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and this has already been pointed out in 8 Lah 281 (3), and in many other rulings. Since that time such authorities as 5 Lah 364 (4) have lost all importance as they proceed on the assumption that a custom opposed to so-called general custom (whatever that may mean) was not sufficient to shift the onus of proof on to the other side. In the present cases the District Judge has practically returned to 5 Lah 364 (4) and given importance to the consideration that daughters usually succeed in the Province according to general custom (which term is clearly a misnomer) to the self-acquired property of their father.

In this respect we are not in agreement with him, though we are of opinion that these appeals must be dismissed. As early as 1889, the proper principle was laid down and this was incorporated in the riwaj-i-am of 1893. In the present cases, the collaterals are of the fifth degree and according to the 1893 document, the usual rule in this district was that daughters were only excluded from inheriting the ancestral and self-acquired property of their father by collaterals within four degrees, while within those degrees there were exceptions, each case demanding a special inquiry as to what the exact degree of relationship was. In the present cases, there is nothing to show apart from the document of 1913, which is in this respect discredited, that collaterals of the fifth degree are entitled to exclude daughters. The appellants have therefore not proved their case. It is for these reasons that we dismiss these appeals with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1589 of 1933, Decided on 15th January 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 8th May 1933.

Punjab Tenancy Act (1887), S. 59—Transfer by widow of one co-tenant to landlord himself—Death of widow—Assignee from other co-tenant cannot challenge alienation by widow.

A widow's transfer in contravention of the provisions contained in S. 59, is not void but merely voidable, and that too, at the instance of the landlords only. Hence where a widow of one of the co-tenants transfers her rights to the landlord himself and dies, an assignee from the other co-tenant cannot attack the alienation he being a stranger to the family: 1928 Lah 932, Ref.; 2 P R 1914 (Rev.) and 1930 Lah 515, Disting. and 1930 Lah 942, Rel. on. [P 70 C 2; P 71 C 1]

Achhru Ram—for Appellants.

Jagan Nath Agarwala—for Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—Kanshi Ram, Mt. Dhan Devi and Gobind Ram possessed occupancy rights in 19 kanals 11 marlas of land situated in Banga. They held the land in the following shares:—

Kanshi Ram—1/6th.

Mt. Dhan Devi—1/3rd.

Govind Ram— $\frac{1}{2}$.

Kanshi Ram was adjudicated an insolvent in 1919 and his share on being sold by the Official Receiver was purchased by Gurdas Mal. Gobind Ram died in 1920 and his share went to the landlords in 1928 after a hard contest in the Courts between all the parties concerned including Gurdas Mal. In the same year Mt. Dhan Devi surrendered her rights in favour of the landlords and two years after she died. On 5th July 1930, the present suit was instituted by Gurdas Mal for possession of 5/6ths share of the land mentioned above alleging that being a joint tenant he was entitled to succeed to the land left by his co-tenants, Gobind Ram and Mt. Dhan Devi. The landlords resisted this suit on various grounds and contended inter alia that so far as Gobind Ram's share was concerned, the plaintiff being a party to the former litigation that was started on Gobind Ram's death was debarred from re-agitating the matter in the present suit and as regards Mt. Dhan Devi's share, the surrender in their favour was valid and the plaintiff had no locus standi to challenge it. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit but on appeal the District Judge while reversing the decision of the trial Court in respect of Govind Ram's share maintained it as regards Mt. Dhan Devi's share. It is against this decision that the landlords have appealed. Counsel for the appellants contends that under S. 59, sub-S. (3) read with S. 60, Tenancy Act, the surrender even if assailable could be attacked by the landlords alone and by none else and that as the surrender in this case had taken place in favour of the landlords themselves, it was perfectly valid and unimpeachable. He further maintains that by S. 59, sub-S. (1), Cl. (c), on the termination of the widow's interest under S. 59, sub-S. 1, Cl. (b), it is only the male collateral relatives of the widow's deceased husband who are entitled to succeed to the occupancy rights and that an assignee from a co-tenant being a stranger to the family and not falling under that category has no right of succession and consequently no right of attack. He finally urges that even if it be conceded that the plaintiff was entitled to inherit the rights by virtue of the rule of survivorship among joint tenants, there was nothing left to be inherited at the time when the widow died.

We have given due consideration to these arguments and have come to the conclusion that this appeal should succeed. The law is quite clear on the point that a widow's transfer in contravention of the provisions contained in S. 59, is not void but merely voidable, and that too, at the instance of the landlords only.

(S. 60, Tenancy Act). Even therefore if the principle enunciated in 1928 Lah 932 (1), that a widow's surrender amounts to an alienation, be applicable here the plaintiff has no right to challenge the surrender in this case, 2 P R 1914 Rev (2), relied on by the respondent also does not advance his case any further. It does not lay down any law which is not already contained in the section itself and where it uses the words 'next claimant' it does so merely in reference to S. 59, sub-S. (1), Cl. (c) and not in any general sense so as to include even a person other than the 'male collateral relative of the deceased tenant.' Similarly nothing that is laid down in 1930 Lah 515 (3), militates against the view we have taken in this case. The surrender being complete two years before the widow's death, there was nothing left, as urged by Counsel for the appellants, which could have gone to the plaintiff and 1930 Lah 515 (3), applies only where the deceased tenant has a share in the holding which is to pass on his death. The law as to the right of challenging the widow's alienations in these circumstances has been laid down correctly in 1930 Lah 942 (4), and we are in entire agreement with that decision.

We hold therefore that the plaintiff had no locus standi to attack the surrender of her rights by Mt. Dhan Devi in favour of the landlords and accept this appeal. The suit is thus dismissed in toto. The parties will bear their own costs in the lower Appellate Court but the appellants will get their costs both here and in the trial Court.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 43 of 1935, Decided on 15th July 1935, from judgment of Agha Haidar, J., High Court, Lahore, D/- 26th February 1935.

(a) Appeal—Additional evidence—No party can as of right produce additional evidence—It is only when Court feels its necessity that it can be allowed to be produced.

No party is entitled as of right to fill up gaps in its evidence under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P.C. The mere negligence of a party in the trial Court is no excuse to let in evidence which it failed to produce at the proper time. O. 41, R. 27 confers a prerogative on the Court and not on the party and it is only when the Court feels the necessity of additional evidence that it can be allowed to be produced. [P 72 C 2]

Where therefore it is impossible for the appellate Court to pronounce judgment on the question at issue unless some additional evidence is brought on record and that evidence was not produced in the lower Court on account of the gross negligence and deliberate omission of party's agent who was conducting the case, the Court may allow the party further opportunity to produce the evidence. [P 72 C 1]

(b) Appeal—Additional evidence—Failure to produce evidence on vital issue in suit for some reason or other—Judgment pronounced on available record—Party aggrieved moving appellate Court for permission to produce evidence—Case is not governed by O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C.

The words additional evidence in O. 41, R. 27 connote that the party in default has applied its mind to the issues in the case and adduced some evidence on them which at a later stage he finds it insufficient. But if for some reason or other no evidence was produced in the trial Court on a vital issue and the judgment was pronounced on the record as it stood and the party aggrieved moves the appellate Court afterwards to allow him to produce evidence in the case, his case is not governed by O. 41, R. 27 and different considerations prevail in giving him the permission applied for. [P 72 C 2]

Shamiar Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Chiranjiva Lal Aggarwal and C. L. Vohra—for Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the order of Agha Haidar, J., dated 26th February 1935, refusing to allow the appellant to produce additional evidence consisting of certain copies from the revenue records showing the land to be ancestral and dismissing the appeal in the absence of those documents. The sole point for consideration is whether the appellant should be allowed to produce this additional evidence under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C. Counsel for the appellant contends that the most important question in the case was whether the land sought to be attached was ancestral and although an issue had been framed to that effect the appellant's agent, who was conducting the case on his behalf, colluded with the decree-holder and failed to produce copies from the revenue records which would have conclusively established the ancestral nature of the property. Counsel for the respondents on the other hand urges that in the first place the charge against the agent is unfounded and in the second place even if the agent were guilty of fraud or collusion, this is not a sufficient reason for admitting additional evidence at this stage. He had drawn our attention to 10 Pat 654 (1) in which at p. 668 their Lordships have observed that unless the Court feels an inherent lacuna or defect in the existing evidence and requires additional evidence to be produced to be able to dispose of the case, such evidence cannot be admitted. Even from the clear wording of R. 27 it is obvious that no party is entitled as of right to fill up the gaps in its evidence under this rule. We are also of opinion that the mere negligence of a party in the trial Court is no excuse to let in evidence which it failed to produce at the proper time. This rule confers a prerogative on the Court and not on the party and it is only when the Court feels the necessity of additional evidence that it can be allowed to be produced.

In this case, however, we feel the requirement ourselves as we think that it is not possible to pronounce our judgment on the question at issue unless the evidence intended to be produced is brought on the record. In our opinion the appellant's agent was guilty of gross negligence in not making any attempt to discharge the onus which lay on the appellant to prove the ancestral nature of the property and from the circumstances of the case we are inclined to think that this omission on his part was not innocent. He had to do nothing but to apply for the copies of the revenue records and although he had made a statement to the effect that he would produce the requisite copies, he failed to do so and thus betrayed the trust reposed in him by his principal. In the absence of this evidence it is impossible to decide the case and on this ground we allow the appellant further opportunity to produce these documents. There is another aspect also of looking at the matter. It is doubtful whether the prayer of the appellant does fall under O. 41, R. 27. It is not additional evidence that he wishes to produce but he seeks an opportunity to produce evidence on a vital issue in the case on which no evidence whatever has been led. The words 'additional evidence' connote that the party in default has applied its mind to the issues in the case and adduced some evidence on them which at a later stage he finds insufficient. But if for some reason or other no evidence was produced in the trial Court and the judgment was pronounced on the record as it stood and the party aggrieved moved the appellate Court afterwards to allow him to produce evidence in the case, different considerations would prevail in giving him the permission applied for and his case will not be governed by O. 41, R. 27. But we need not discuss this point any further as we have already held that the appellant should be allowed to produce fresh evidence in this case.

The result is that we accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court as well as that of the executing Court and remand the case to the executing Court for re-decision in the light of the evidence admitted by us. The documents produced before us will be entitled to prove which property out of the property attached is ancestral. It is conceded before us that any property proved to be ancestral will not be attachable and the property not proved to be ancestral will not be immune from attachment. In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case the respondent firm Shankar Das-Sadhu Ram, will get its costs before us and before Agha Haidar, J. from the appellant. The respondent Lalta Parshad will bear his own costs in both the Courts.

In a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., by the alienees from a judgment-debtor, whose properties have been attached by the decree-holder as properties belonging to the judgment-debtor it is not sufficient for the alienees to prove the deed of transfer. The property which was left in possession of the wakif after the disposition by way of wakf was of a very small value. The deed of wakf itself did not indicate any pious intention on the part of the wakif and clearly shows that it was meant for the maintenance of the family and the dependants. During his life time the wakif was to have full control over the income and use of the property comprised in wakf and above all there was no provision made for the payment of the debts of the wakif:

Mian Ghulam Rasul Khan and Bishan Narain—for Respondents.

Jai Lal, J.—In 1921 Mohammad Siddiq purchased a 2/3rd share in a property situated in Delhi for Rs. 48,000 from Dwarka Dish and Ram Singh and in order to pay the purchase price he raised Rs. 25,000 by mortgaging the property to Chuni Lal by means of a mortgage deed dated 27th February 1922. The amount borrowed by him was to carry interest at 12 per cent per annum which was to be increased to 15 per cent per annum in case of default in payment of interest for three months. Nothing having been paid by him on this mortgage, on 5th March 1926 Chuni Lal served him with a lawyer's notice demanding payment and in default threatening legal action. After receipt of this notice on 23rd March 1926 Mohammad Siddiq sold a house owned by him for Rs. 1,500 to Mt. Sughra Jan. Then on 29th April 1926 he made a gift of another house owned by him in favour of Mt. Malak-un-Nisa. This lady sold this house to Mt. Kulsum Bi for Rs. 15,000. On the same day he executed another deed of waqf-alal-aulad whereby he vested practically the whole of the remaining unencumbered property owned by him in himself as a mutwalli and in others after his death with directions to repair the property out of its income and to pay the balance for maintenance to his descendants and other beneficiaries from generation to generation and provided that

If God forbid, my line of descent becomes extinct and that of the beneficiaries also becomes extinct the income accruing from the entire wakf property after deducting all the expenses as stated above should be spent on mosques, schools and orphanages and on poor and needy persons, etc.

It appears that one house still remained in the ownership of Mohammad Siddiq on this date. This was mortgaged by him to Mohammad Yasin for Rupees 1,200 on 27th April 1927. Chuni Lal instituted a suit against Mohammad Siddiq for recovery of the amount due to him under the mortgage. This suit was decreed on 28th March 1927, a plea raised by Mohammad Siddiq that he had paid Rs. 18,000 to Chuni Lal in reduction of the loan was found not to be established. A final decree for sale of the mortgaged property having been passed the property was put up to sale and it appears that the highest bid on 16th July 1927, for Rs. 14,000 was of Chuni Lal decree-holder. This auction was held in the presence of several persons. A report was made by the Court auctioneers and the sale was continued on 21st July but there was an advance of only Rs. 200 and that also by the decree-holder. Some objections were raised to the confirmation of this sale and on 23rd April 1928 one Abdul Wasiq professed his readiness to pay Rs. 15,000 for the whole mortgaged property which had been sold. With the consent of the decree-holder, Mohammad Siddiq, Abdul Basit and one Mohammad Farruq the Court passed an order that the sale shall be effected in favour of Abdul Wasiq if he paid Rs. 15,000 in the manner provided in the order failing which the sale in favour of the decree-holder Chuni Lal shall be confirmed. Abdul Basit not having paid the money as undertaken by him the sale was confirmed in favour of Chuni Lal who thereupon obtained a personal decree against Mohammad Siddiq for the balance due to him under the mortgage and in execution of this decree he attached the houses which had been transferred by Mohammad Siddiq by means of the four documents described above. Objections were raised by the respective alienees to the liability to attachment and sale of these properties but they were disallowed by the executing Court. Consequently suits were instituted by the objectors to establish their respective titles to the properties. We are concerned with three of these suits in these appeals.

The suit by Mst. Kulsum Bi was dismissed and she has appealed to this Court (First Appeal 1117 of 1932). The suit by Mst. Sughra Jan was decreed by the trial Court but has been dismissed by the District Judge on appeal and she has presented Second Appeal No. 1128 of 1934. The suit by Mohammad Ismail and others claiming under the waqf-alal-aulad has been decreed and the decree-holder has presented Appeal No. 248 of 1931. Chuni Lal decree-holder having died during the pendency of these suits is represented by his son Hanuman Parshad in all these appeals. The same question is involved in all these appeals, that is whether the alienations by Mohammad Siddiq were fictitious and were made with the intention of defrauding his creditor Chuni Lal. A good deal of discussion before us in all the appeals centered round the question of burden of proof. The question, however, in my opinion, is not so very material in the circumstances of this case. But it is admitted that the initial burden of proof is on the plaintiffs who have been unsuccessful in their objections under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. It is however claimed on their behalf that the burden of proof must be deemed to have shifted to the defendant on their establishing that the documents, relied upon by them respectively and purporting to have been executed by Mohammad Siddiq, were executed by him. In other words it was contended that the plaintiffs had merely to prove their deeds and not necessarily the alienations in their favour, that is to say, they need not prove that the transactions were genuine or that they were for consideration where they purported to be for consideration but that the moment they produced a registered sale-deed or a registered deed of gift or a registered waqf-nama the burden was shifted to the defendant to prove want of consideration and an intention to defraud the creditors on the part of Mohammad Siddiq. There is some authority of the Allahabad High Court in support of this contention, but I must follow the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 35 C W N 324 (1). A perusal of the notes of arguments of counsel in that case shows that the question of burden of proof was argued before their Lordships and their Lordships held that a plaintiff in such cases must establish that the deed in his favour was bona fide and was intended to pass the initial interest in the property in his favour. In 12 Lah 763 (2), Harrison and Tek Chand, JJ., following the Privy Council case mentioned above observed:

It is settled law that in a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., onus lies upon the plaintiff, who had unsuccessfully objected before the executing Court, to establish both consideration and good faith for the transaction on which he relies.

In the present case, in my opinion, the plaintiffs have failed to establish the genuineness of the transactions in their favour. On the other hand the decree-holder has succeeded in establishing that they were not genuine and were effected to defeat him in recovering the money due to him under his mortgage and were therefore fraudulent. Kulsum Bi appellant claims to derive her title through Mst. Malak-un-Nisa. Mst. Malak-un-Nisa in her turn claims title through a deed of gift executed by Mahomad Siddiq on 29th April 1926. The trial Judge is of opinion that this deed of gift was fictitious and the sale deed in favour of Mt. Kulsum Bi also was a fictitious document, as no consideration was really paid though there was a show of passing of consideration on two occasions in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. Mt. Malak-un-Nisa is a daughter of Mahomad Siddiq's wife's sister and the deed of gift of property, which is alleged to have been sold soon after for Rs. 15,000, was made in her favour in lieu of past services and in order to enable her to maintain herself out of the income of the property. A condition was added in the deed that the donee was entitled to sell the property. The learned trial Judge is of opinion that this condition has been altered in the deed and that the alteration further strengthens the suspicious nature of the transaction. There is no doubt that the alteration is of a suspicious nature. Neither Mt. Kulsum Bi nor Mt. Malak-un-Nisa have gone into the witness box to prove the genuineness of the sale in favour of Mt. Kulsum Bi. It has not been shown from where Mt. Kulsum Bi got the money to pay for the purchase price. Mahomad Siddiq has not given evidence as to the circumstances and the reasons why he made a gift of such a valuable house to Mt. Malak-un-Nisa. The fact that the gift was made soon after a big creditor of Mahomad Siddiq had made a demand for money due to him further supports the conclusion of the learned trial Judge.

Great stress was however laid on behalf of the appellants—and this matter is common to all the appeals—that the value of the mortgaged property exceeded the amount due to Chuni Lal under the mortgage deed. This contention is based on a report of a Commissioner who was appointed by the Court when the mortgage suit was instituted by Chuni Lal against Mahomad Siddiq. On the institution of that suit the plaintiff alleged that the value of the mortgaged property was not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debt and that the defendant was attempting to alienate his other property; he therefore applied that the defendant be restrained from alienating it as otherwise he would not be able to realize the amount due to him. A Commissioner was appointed to ascertain the value of the mortgaged property and he reported that it was Rs. 53,000 in round figures. This included about Rs. 17,000 costs of the structures on the land. The land was valued by the Commissioner according to the sale deed in favour of Mahomad Siddiq in 1921. He made no independent enquiry as to the value of the land. The senior Sub-Judge on receipt of the report rejected the application for injunction. It is claimed that this report shows that the value of the mortgaged property was more than the amount due to the mortgagee and therefore there could be no intention to defraud the creditor-mortgagee when Mohammad Siddiq transferred his properties. It is also true that Mohammad Siddiq paid Rs. 48,000 in 1921 for this land but it is established on the record and it is a matter of common knowledge that in 1921 prices of property in Delhi and other towns were at the highest and that they began to fall in 1923 and continued to do so for many years subsequently. The best proof of this fact is that in two auction sales the highest bids were Rs. 14,000 and Rs. 14,200 respectively and those by the decree-holder and that in the beginning of 1928 the judgment-debtor was prepared to allow the property to be sold for Rs. 15,000 and the proposed purchaser did not pay even this amount. In my opinion therefore the value of the mortgaged property was not sufficient to pay the mortgage-debt and Mohammad Siddiq was aware of this fact; his subsequent conduct in transferring the whole of his property gratuitously and ostensibly otherwise also is an indication of the same fact. I have stated above that the alienations were effected by him soon after receipt of notice of demand from the mortgagee. The circumstances, in my opinion, leave no doubt that his motive was to save the property from his creditor.

The gift in favour of Mt. Malak-un-Nisa was a fraudulent transaction and the sale-deed by her to Mt. Kulsum Bi was a fictitious document. Out of Rs. 15,000 consideration for the sale, Rs. 6,000 was alleged to have been paid as earnest money in front of the Sub-Registrar when the receipt for the earnest money was registered, a transaction which in itself is an unusual one, and Rs. 9,000 is alleged to have been paid at the time of the registration of the sale-deed. It is true that there is no evidence that this money was actually returned to Mt. Malak-un-Nisa but the absence of the two ladies from the witness box makes the whole transaction a highly suspicious one. In my opinion the conclusion of the trial Judge is correct and I would dismiss the appeal of Mt. Kulsum Bi with costs. As to the sale in favour of Mt. Sughra Jan it would be observed that no consideration was paid in front of the Sub-Registrar. It was recited in the sale-deed that the consideration had already been received by the vendor Mohammad Siddiq. Mt. Sughra Jan is a relation of the vendor. The deed was executed soon after the notice and the District Judge finds that possession did not pass to the vendee. The fact that Mohammad Siddiq and Mt. Sughra Jan did not go into the witness box makes the transaction a suspicious one. There is, in my opinion, no force in this appeal either, and I would dismiss it with costs. As to the appeal by Hanuman Parshad against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge upholding the wakf-alal-aulad there is no contention that the wakf was invalid under the provisions of Mahomedan law. The only question before us is whether it was a bona fide transfer or whether the motive of Mohammad Siddiq was to protect the property from his creditor Chuni Lal. As held by Sulaiman and Kendall, JJ., in 1929 All 277 (3) under the Mahomedan law itself no person can make a wakf of his entire property without making arrangement for the payment of his debts. The provisions of S. 53 do not in any way infringe any rule of the substantive Mahomedan law. The same opinion was expressed by Sulaiman, C. J., and Sen, J., in 52 All 710 (4). In the present case, it is true, Mohammad Siddiq did not make a wakf-alal-aulad in respect of the entire property owned by him but the property which was left in his possession was of very small value as it was mortgaged for Rs. 1,200 in 1928, therefore it may be assumed that the wakf comprised practically the whole of the property then owned by him and the same principle would apply to such a case as was applied by the Allahabad High Court to the transfer of the entire property by a person who owes money to other people. Mohammad Siddiq did not give any evidence in support of his case that he had made a bona fide wakf-alal-aulad. The terms of the wakf can legitimately be considered in deciding the question of his motive in making the wakf. There is no condition such as is usually found in such documents showing any pious intention of the wakif except the maintenance of his family and dependents. The entire profits are to be divided among his heirs according to their shares under the Mahomedan law. During his lifetime Mohammad Siddiq has full control over the income and its use. No provision is made for the payment of his debts. The other considerations mentioned above in respect of the two alienations apply to this transaction also. In my opinion there can be no doubt that the deed of wakf was executed by Mohammad Siddiq not with any pious object but with the object of saving the property from sale at the instance of his creditor and consequently the wakf not being a bona fide one but effected to defraud his creditor is invalid and must be set aside.

It, however, appears that in para. 12 of the deed he set aside a vacant plot of land measuring one hundred standard yards for the construction of a mosque and it appears that a mosque has been constructed on it and there is evidence on the record that it is used by the public for prayers. In my opinion this land measuring one hundred yards with structures thereon should be deemed to be wakf property not necessarily under the wakf-alal-aulad but otherwise by virtue of actual dedication thereof to a religious purpose. I would therefore accept the appeal of Hanuman Parshad and dismiss the suit of Mohammad Ismail etc., with costs throughout except with regard to the land measuring one hundred yards and structures thereon as described above.

Piara Mal and others — Defendants—Appellants.

Sham Das — Plaintiff and another — Defendant—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 2233 of 1928, Decided on 10th April 1934, from preliminary decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, D/- 6th June 1928.

(a) Costs—Assignee of equity of redemption not paying mortgagee but putting off payment on flimsy excuses but making pretence of readiness to pay money—No sufficient funds to pay at time of making so-called offers—Held he was liable to pay costs incurred by mortgagee in suit to enforce mortgage.

Where an assignee of the equity of redemption tried to put off payment on all kinds of flimsy excuses, taking care on each occasion to make a pretence of his readiness to pay the mortgage money and as a matter of fact he did not at the time of making these so-called offers, have sufficient funds at his disposal to make the payment as a result of which the mortgagee had to file a suit: [P 77 C 2]

Held: that the assignee was liable to pay costs of the mortgagee.

(b) Civil P. C., (1908), O. 24, R. 3—Defendant depositing money in Court but stipulating impossible conditions cannot escape payment of interest from date of deposit.

3. Ahmad Husain v. Kallu Mian Sajhi firm, 1929 All 277=117 I C 97=1929 A L J 460.

4. Bismilla Begum v. Tahsin Ali Khan, 1930 All 462=124 I C 722=52 All 710=1930 A L J 616.

Where the defendant deposits the amount in Court but stipulates such conditions as will make plaintiff unable to get payment and is thus himself responsible for non-payment to plaintiff, he cannot escape payment of interest from date of such deposit. And O. 24, R. 3, has no application to such a case. [P 78 C 1]

M. C. Mahajan and Charanjiva Lal Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by a mortgagee against the assignee of the equity of redemption for recovery of the amount due on foot of the mortgage. The only points raised are whether the lower Court was right in ordering the defendant-appellant to pay the costs of the plaintiff-respondent in that Court and in making the plaintiff pay interest on the principal mortgage-money for the period during which the suit remained pending. The relevant facts are that on 11th July 1921 Mehr Chand, defendant 1, mortgaged a certain shop situate in the city of Amritsar to Sham Das plaintiff for Rs. 6,000, bearing interest at eleven annas per cent per mensem. The mortgage was with possession, and it is common ground between the parties that on the date of the mortgage the mortgagee entered into possession and let the property to certain tenants, who executed rent-deeds in his favour. About six years later, on 8th February 1927, the mortgaged property was sold in execution of a decree, which had been obtained by a third party against the mortgagor Mehr Chand, and was purchased by Piara Mal (defendant 2) appellant, subject to the plaintiff's mortgage charge. As already stated, the possession of the property was with the mortgagee, but the auction-purchaser Piara Mal, without paying off the plaintiff or obtaining his permission managed to take possession in his absence and got rent-deeds executed in his own favour by the tenants. Having thus obtained this position of advantage, he began to write letters to the mortgagee, expressing his readiness to pay the mortgage money, but never in fact paid or tendered a single pie. The mortgagee, who is a resident of a village in the Gurdaspur district, came to Amritsar more than once to receive payment, but the defendant put him off on frivolous excuses. The plaintiff then engaged a pleader, who made demands from the defendant, but without success. Nothing having been paid, he brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 6,645 on 8th November 1927. The trial Court decreed the suit on 6th June 1928 for Rs. 6,330 with future interest at the contract rate, and allowed proportionate costs.

On appeal it has been urged by Mr. Sethi that the plaintiff should not have been allowed costs of the suit. Counsel has urged that the defendant was all along ready and willing to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, provided the latter delivered to him all the "papers" relating to the mortgage and that as the plaintiff failed to do so, the amount due was not paid to him. In my opinion this contention is not supported by the correspondence between the parties or the evidence produced at the trial, which we have carefully examined with the help of counsel. I agree with the lower Court that the defendant-appellant having unlawfully dispossessed the plaintiff from the property, which had been in his possession since 1921 in accordance with the terms of his mortgage, tried to put off payment on all kinds of flimsy excuses, taking care on each occasion to make a pretence of his readiness to pay the mortgage money. As a matter of fact, as is clear from his account with the Punjab National Bank as well as his own bahis, he did not, at the time of making these so-called "offers", have sufficient funds at his disposal to make the payment. It is also clear that the duration of the trial was prolonged unnecessarily by the defendant raising numerous pleas, which he was unable to substantiate. I hold that the defendant was rightly ordered to pay to the plaintiff his costs of the suit.

The second question relates to the small sum of Rs. 283-4, which has been decreed on account of interest on the mortgage money for the period during which the suit remained pending in the trial Court. Mr. Sethi points out that on 20th December 1927, the defendant actually deposited in Court Rs. 6,351-8 for payment to the plaintiff, and urges that interest should not have been allowed to the plaintiff after that date, as laid down in O. 24, R. 3. At the time of making the deposit however the defendant clearly made it a condition, that the amount should not be paid to the plaintiff until he produced the mortgage deed and "other papers" relating to the mortgage transaction, which were with him. The plaintiff had maintained in the course of the correspondence, which had preceded the suit, that the only documents in his possession were the mortgage deed and some rent-deeds executed by tenants during the currency of the mortgage. All these documents he had filed with the plaint, when he had stated once again that he had no other documents with him. In spite of all this, the defendant insisted that there were "other papers" with the plaintiff and stated that the amount deposited by him should not be paid to the defendant until these papers had been produced.

An issue was accordingly framed on this point, but at the trial it was not shown what other papers the plaintiff had with him, which he should have produced. Indeed when the defendant was questioned about this point, in the course of his examination as a witness, he admitted that he had no knowledge of any such documents. It follows therefore that it was the defendant himself, who was responsible for the non-payment of the amount deposited by him in Court to the plaintiff, and he has himself to thank if his money remained without interest pending the decision of his pleas. Under the general law, as well as in accordance with the terms of the mortgage deed, the plaintiff was entitled to interest till the date of actual payment to him, and in the circumstances there seems to be no reason why it should have ceased to run from the date of the deposit, when the plaintiff was anxious to receive it and had in fact applied for its payment, but it was the defendant who insisted that it should not be paid until the termination of the trial. The rule laid down in O. 24, R. 3 has no application to these facts, and I have no doubt that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is quite correct. The appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

dissolution—Declaration of partners made—Suit can proceed though originally plaintiff described themselves as firm.

A firm is not a legal entity or a 'person' capable of becoming, as a firm, a partner in another firm, but once a declaration of partners has been made under O. 30, R. 2, Civil P. C. a suit for dissolution can proceed although the plaintiffs had, in the first instance, described themselves as a firm: Case law discussed. [P 79 C 2]

(b) Partnership—Partnership suit in name of firm can lie—Shares of partners can be determined in such suit.

A firm is nothing but an association of individuals; therefore a partnership suit instituted in the name of a firm can lie. There is no reason why in such a suit two or more individuals should not be allowed to have their shares separated in one lump if they so desire. [P 80 C 1]

(c) Partnership—Suit for accounts—Preliminary decree—Court may determine accounting party—Court may instruct to facilitate and regularise account.

It is no doubt desirable that the Court passing a preliminary decree for taking of accounts should decide who is to be the accounting party. But it is open to a Court to give instructions at any time to facilitate and regularise the taking of accounts. [P 80 C 1]

Badri Das and D. R. Sawhney—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Ram Singh, defendant 1 in the suit, from which this appeal arises, contracted with the military authorities on 19th September 1928, for the building of a fort at Thall in the North-West Frontier Province. He was joined in partnership by defendants 2 and 3 Gobind Ram and Banka Mal and the three worked together as "Ram Singh contractor." On 27th May 1930, the firm Tirath Ram-Ram Chand joined with "Ram Singh contractor" for the purpose of the contract. A formal deed of partnership was executed by Ram Singh, Gurditta Mal (as manager of the firm Ram Chand) Tirath Ram, Gobind Ram and Banka Mal. On 29th March 1932, a suit was instituted by the firm Tirath Ram-Ram Chand against Ram Singh, Banka Mal, Gobind Ram and one Makhan Singh (against whom the claim was dropped during the course of the proceedings) for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Rawalpindi. The suit was contested by the defendants other than Makhan Singh on numerous grounds of which it is only necessary, for the purposes of this judgment, to mention only one, namely, that the suit as framed could not proceed because a firm, as such, could not be a partner in a firm and therefore could not sue for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. The Subordinate Judge overruled this plea and granted the plaintiffs a preliminary decree directing that the partnership stood dissolved as from 31st March 1932, and specifying the share of the plaintiff firm to be 6-16th. It may here be mentioned that in response to a demand made under O. 30, R. 2, Civil P. C., the plaintiffs firm Ram Chand-Tirath Ram, had declared the name of the persons constituting their firm to be Tirath Ram-Gurditta Mal, Mani Ram, Jamna Das and Jetha Nand.

Against this decree the defendants have filed the appeal which is pressed on the grounds that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law in holding that a firm is competent to sue as a partner of a firm, that his judgment is improper because he has not decided who was the accounting party, and that he was wrong in fixing 31st March as the date of the dissolution of the partnership. In support of his first contention that a firm cannot maintain a suit for dissolution of partnership appellant's counsel has cited 50 Cal 549 (1) and 55 Cal 551 (2) 124 I C 19 (3) and 140 I C 750 (4). The first of these judgments was in a case where the plaintiff had sued for a dissolution of partnership, one of the defendants being Johar Mal and Man Mull who were sued as a firm. In defence it was pleaded that these persons were not a firm and that as Johar Mull and Man Mull had not been joined individually, the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as all the members of the firm had not been impleaded. It was found as a fact that Johar Mull and Man Mull were not a firm but that Johar Mull and Man Mull had been sufficiently described in the plaint and were parties to the suit. In the course of his judgment Page, J., remarked that :

"A firm as such cannot be a member of a partnership—it is merely a collective name for the individuals who are members of the partnership. It is neither a legal entity nor a person —A firm name in truth is merely a description of the individuals who compose the firm."

These observations were quoted with approval by a Division Bench of the Calcutta Court in 55 Cal 551 (2). That was not a partnership suit, but one brought in the name of a firm to recover money on the basis of a promissory note executed in favour of one member of the firm. It was held that although a firm is not a person or entity, the suit could not be thrown out on the mere ground that the holder of the promissory note was not the plaintiff firm, having regard to the fact that O. 30, R. 1, sub-R. (i), Civil P. C., provided a short method of describing the several partners if they wished to sue and therefore, all the partners might be taken to have been specifically stated in the plaint. In 124 I C 19 (3) the plaintiff was the daughter of a Hindu, who, along with other members of his family, owned a five anna share in the factory. She sued for a declaration of her ownership in the factory and for profits. Dealing with a proposition that the father's family was a partnership within a partnership, the learned Judges of the Allahabad Court remarked that this was a very peculiar view of law and held that the owners of the five anna share could not be regarded as forming a separate partnership and that there was only one partnership owning the whole factory. That a firm cannot be a partner of another firm and that participation in another firm by a firm is participation by its partners in its individual capacity was again noticed by Sulaiman, C. J., and Mukerji, J., in 54 All 846 (5) and by a Division Bench of this Court (Addison and Din Mohammad, JJ.) in C. R. No. 34 of 1934 (6).

In view of these pronouncements it must be held to be settled law that a firm is not a legal entity or a "person" capable of becoming, as a firm, a partner in another firm. There is at the same time equally good authority for holding that once a declaration of partners has been made under O. 30, R. 2, Civil P. C., a suit for dissolution can proceed although the plaintiffs had, in the first instance, described themselves as a firm. It is not disputed that the persons declared were partners at the time the cause of action accrued and that in partnership with each other they claimed a share in the firm Ram Chand-Tirath Ram. They could, therefore, come forward together under the provisions of O. 30 and describe themselves by their firm name. As their names had been disclosed, the suit proceeded in accordance with the provisions of R. 2 (3) of that Order both in form and substance as if they had come into Court as plaintiffs individually. The question whether a suit for partnership accounts can be maintained by a firm came before the Calcutta Court in 140 I C 750 (4) and from the judgment of Ameer Ali, J., it would appear that objections were raised similar to those taken by appellants' counsel here. The learned Judge, while conceding that a firm is nothing but an association of individuals, found in this principle no obstacle to a partnership suit instituted in the name of a firm. In his view, the only question that arose from the fact that the suit was so instituted was what were the shares of each partner individually. We can see no difficulty here, for there is no reason why two or more individuals should not be allowed to have their shares separated in one lump if they so desire. Applying this reasoning to the present case, we find no force in the first contention urged.

It is no doubt desirable that the Court passing a preliminary decree for the taking of accounts should decide who is to be the accounting party. But it is open to a Court to give instructions at any time to facilitate and regularise the taking of accounts and in this case we are informed that the Subordinate Judge has struck an issue on the point and is deciding the matter. There is, therefore, no necessity for interference at this stage because the lower Court omitted in the first instance to conclude the dispute on this point. As regards the date of dissolution counsel agree that all transactions found to have been taken in good faith for the purpose of the partnership now dissolved up to the time the work was completed should be taken into account for a final settlement of the claims of all the parties. A direction to this effect will be added to the decree. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Second Appeal No. 2133 of 1930, Decided on 29th March 1935, from order of Dist. Judge, Sialkot, D/- 25th August 1930.

Custom (Punjab)—Adoption—Sayads.

Among the Sayads of village Kotli Khadam Shah in Tahsil Pasrur of the Sialkot district the adoption of daughter's son is not valid by custom in the presence of collaterals of the third degree. [P 81 C 2]

Barkat Ali—for Appellants.Malik Mohammad Amin—for Respondents.

Rangi Lal, J. — This judgment will dispose of Second Appeal Nos. 2133 and 2160 of 1930. The only point for decision is whether among the Sayads of village Kotli Khadam Shah in Tahsil Pasrur of the Sialkot district the adoption of daughter's son is not valid by custom in the presence of collaterals of the third degree. The initial onus of proving the alleged custom was undoubtedly on the adopted son. The entry in the riwaj-i-am of 1865 is "that a man could adopt his brother's son and in his absence a daughter's son or sister's son or a collateral's." In the riwaj-i-am of 1892 the relevant entry is as follows :

Varying answers were given by the different tribes but they all agree that an adoption must be within the clan from the near collaterals. Failing them in the third degree, a daughter's son can be adopted, and in his absence one of the agnates up to the third degree in the descending line. The Jats of the Raya Tahsil say that when there is none fit for adoption from among the agnates in the third degree the adoptor can adopt a daughter's son or a person of different tribe. The residents of Zafarwal Tahsil say that the adopted should be one of the agnates of the adoptor, those within the third degree having the first claim; and that a daughter's son can in no case be adopted; and that if there is no collateral the adopted should be of the same clan as the adoptor. All tribes of the Daska Tahsil say that in default of collaterals a daughter's son can also be adopted without any regard being had to the clan.

The village of the parties to this case was then in the Zafarwal Tahsil and therefore according to the above entry a daughter's son could in no case be adopted. The preface to the Riwaj-i-am however, shows that the Sayads were not consulted at all during the inquiry. The entry is therefore of no value as a record of the customs of that tribe. In the latest Riwaj-i-am (1916) the relevant entry is as follows :

An agnate or a daughter's son or daughter's grandson or sister's son or sister's grandson may be adopted but near agnates have preferential claim as compared with the descendants of daughters or sisters. A great many Jats and Rajputs deny that a sister's or daughter's son can be adopted in the presence of any collateral. Among Arains, Awans and Kakkezais a daughter's son can be adopted even in the presence of a brother's son. The adopted son need not necessarily be of the same tribe or got.

It is clear that this entry divides collaterals into three categories. 1, a brother's son or sons 2, near agnates; and 3, all others. In the entry of 1865, the word 'bradarzada' has been used and its literal meaning is brother's son. There is no force in the contention that brother might also mean cousin. It is true that the word 'bhai' has been loosely used for a first cousin in some places, in the later Riwaj-i-am, but there are no grounds for holding that the word 'bradarzada' in the entry in question was intended to include a cousin's son. It would thus appear that there is a conflict between the entries of 1865 and 1916. According to the earlier entry, a daughter's son could not be adopted in the presence of a brother's son, but according to the later entry, a daughter's son could not be adopted even in the presence of near agnates. There is no doubt that collaterals of the third degree must be regarded as near agnates, because they are only one degree removed from a brother's son. The authority of this entry, is however considerably weakened by the following remarks made by the author in the preface :

The following statement gives the population of the various tribes whom it was proposed to consult with regard to this compilation, but Aroras, Bhatias and Chuhras did not attend in any Tahsil in sufficient numbers, while the attendance of Brahmans, Gujars, Kambohs, Kalals, Khattris, Lohars and Tarkhans, Mughals, Pathans and Sayads was also very meagre. Jats, Rajputs, Arains and Awans were present in large numbers and it might safely be said that as regards the dominant agricultural tribes of the Sialkot District this statement of tribal custom is based on a full enquiry. With regard to tribes who are not essentially agricultural I am not prepared to say that the answers to the questions in this volume correctly represent their customs.

Then follow a statement which shows that Sayads form only 1.4 per cent of the population of the district. They are certainly not an "essentially agricultural" tribe. It would appear that the only entry in favour of defendant is that of 1865, but the value of that entry has, been considerably lessened by the subsequent entries. Apart from this entry, there is no evidence in support of the custom relied on by the defendant. The witnesses who appeared on his behalf were not able to cite a single instance in which a daughter's son had been adopted in the presence of collaterals in the third degree. The judgments, of which copies have been placed on the record, all relate to Jats and are strictly speaking not in point. So far as Jats are concerned, there are numerous published cases in which it has been held that the adoption of a daughter's son is not valid. According to the Riwaj-i-am of 1865, the custom of the Jats and the Sayads was the same on this point. If those entries correctly represented the then prevailing custom, it is clear that the Jats have since then modified their custom and there are no particular reasons why the Sayads who live in the same locality should not have made a similar modification. Anyhow, the defendant on whom the onus lay failed to prove that his adoption was valid by custom. There was no other point argued before us, I would therefore dismiss both the appeals with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 69 of 1935, Decided on 19th July 1935, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 28th June 1934.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Wakf—Will dedicating property for benefit of community—Unequivocal intention of testator clear—Object held definite and charitable hence valid wakf was created.

A will disclosed an unequivocal intention on the part of the testator to dedicate the property in suit for the benefit of the Muslim community on the occasions of their rejoicing and mournings.

Held: that the object of the waqf was not only definite and philanthropic but also charitable. Hence a valid waqf was created by the will: 1924 All 223, Rel on; 75 P R 1907; 78 P R 1912; 23 Bom 725 (P C); 1929 Bom 127 and 1931 Sind 75, Disting. [P 82 C 2, P 83 C 1]

(b) Evidence—Admissibility—Document in two parts—One admissible and other not—Document cannot be rejected as a whole.

Where a document consists of two separate parts, one of which is admissible and the other inadmissible, the document cannot be rejected as a whole. [P 83 C 1]

(c) Will—Revocation—Property dedicated to wakf by will—Subsequent gift of his property by testator—Wakf property not included in gift—Gift cancels only part of will dealing with non-wakf property—Untouched part comes in operation on testator's death—Hence will could not be left out of consideration.

A waqif by, means of his will created a waqf in respect of a certain property belonging to him. Later on he executed a deed of gift in favour of his nephew in respect of his property but therein he did not mention the property which was dedicated to the waqf.

Held: that the deed of gift did not cancel the will in toto but merely revoked that part of it which dealt with property other than wakf and that the testator's death at once brought that part of the will into operation which had been left untouched in the gift and therefore the will could not be left out of consideration in deciding the extent of the waqf property. Barkat Ali—for Appellants.

Mohd. Monir—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the Judgment of Agha Haider, J., dated 18th March 1935, reversing that of the District Judge dismissing the defendant respondents' appeal.

The sole question is, wheather a certain property left by one Fazal Hussain is waqf as claimed by the Muslim community of Amritsar whose representatives were the plaintiffs in the original suit and are now the appellants before us. The learned Judge has decided against the appellants on two grounds: (1) if the rely on the will of Fazal Hussain dated 27th June 1920, the waqf is void on account of uncertainty; and (2) if they seek assistance from the rent deed dated 28th April 1923, the document is inadmissible for want of registration.

We may say at once that the decision of the learned Judge cannot be maintained.

Taking the will first, we find that there is an unequivocal intention on the part of the testator to dedicate the property in suit, to 'rafah-i-am ahl-i-Islam shadi wa ghami' which literally translated means for the benefit of the Muslim community on the occasions of their rejoicings and mournings. This is neither indefinite nor vague. Not only the community to be benefited is specified by this phrase but the object of the dedication is also well-defined. Any one who is acquainted with the social life of the Punjab Muslims knows full well what the words in the will import and to what occasions they refer. Among the class of people to which the founder of the waqf belonged, on the occasion of every funeral, members of the brotherhood assemble for some days after the obsequies are over and friendly visitors pour in all these days for condolence. Similarly, on the occasion of every marriage especially that of a female relation, marriage processions have to be feasted and entertained. In a town like Amritsar, where the population is congested and the people can hardly find room enough for themselves in their small houses, funeral or marriage parties cannot be lodged there. It is a real need to have a place reserved for such occasions where the residents of a Mohalla or a town belonging to a certain community may find accommodation and this want is felt by the rich and poor alike. Any public-minded man, therefore, who provides such a place does a real service to the community. The object of the waqf is not only definite and philanthropic but also charitable. "Charity" as popularly defined means 'any act of kindness and benevolence' especially 'that which is given in benevolence to the poor' and where rich and poor are benefited alike, it cannot be argued that the object is not charitable. 'Love towards our fellow beings' is considered to be the basic principle of charity and that feeling is displayed in abundance in the case of the gift before us.

We do not consider that the authorities relied on by the respondent render him any assistance, as they proceeded on their own facts and the objects of the waqf there had been described in different terms. In 75 P R 1907 (1), the bequest was for such charitable objects as the trustees should think proper or for such purposes as may bring eternal bliss for the testator. In 78 P R 1912 (2), the object of the trust was 'dharamarth.' Similarly in 23 Bom 725 (3), the bequest was for 'dharam'. In 116 I C 242 (4), the bequest was for 'khairat'. In 130 I C 556 (5), the bequest was for 'khairati' works. These terms were no doubt vague and uncertain, and the 'waqfs' were rightly disallowed; but, the object of the trust before us is as definite and certain as it could be. In a much weaker case than this where a dedication of a portion of a man's property had been made for the reading of fatiha and for 'amur-i-khair' (charitable purposes) including the maintenance of poor relations and dependants, it was held by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the waqf was valid according to Mahomedan Law: 45 All 152 (6). We hold, therefore, that the will created a valid waqf in the case before us. Coming now to the rent deed (Ex. P-2), the learned Judge has obviously missed the point that the document in question consisted of two parts, one executed by the lessees which was complete in itself and the other executed by the lessor himself in the form of a memorandum appended to the deed. It is no doubt true, that the latter offended against the law of registration but it is equally clear that the former did not. It is well-settled, that where a document consists of two separate parts, one of which is admissible and the other inadmissible, the document cannot be rejected as a whole. In the earlier part of the document, which is not inadmissible for want of registration, the property in suit is clearly described as waqf and the founder as its 'previous owner'. Even, therefore, if we ignore the latter part of the document, its earlier recitals lend a good deal of support to the plaintiffs' case.

Further, the learned Judge has not discussed another document which was relied on by the plaintiffs and which admittedly did not require registration. This is Ex. P-3 a rent deed dated 16th

January 1926. This again is a valuable piece of evidence in support of the waqf and leaves no doubt about the intention of the founder. There is yet another circumstance which conclusively establishes the nature of the property in suit. On 8th April 1929, i. e., about a year and a half before the testator's death, he made a gift of his property in favour of his nephew, Ghulam Sarwar and therein he did not mention the property now in dispute. There was some misconception in the mind of the District Judge about the proper effect of this document on the earlier will. This misconception has not been removed in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court. It did not cancel the will in toto as remarked by the District Judge but merely revoked that part of it, which dealt with the property other than waqf. The testator's death in December 1930 at once brought that part of the will into operation which had been left untouched in the gift, and the will, therefore, could not be left out of consideration in the decision of this case. Before we close, we may remark that it is only one brother of Fazal Hussain who is contesting this suit, his other brother, Subhan Ali, who even attested the will, is still siding with the plaintiffs. His sister, Rahmat Bibi, also attested the will and is indifferent in this case. In the result, being satisfied that the property in dispute is waqf, we accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the District Judge. The plaintiffs' suit will be decreed against the respondent with costs throughout.

Appeal No. 319 of 1935, and No. 2135 of 1934, Decided on 30th April 1935, from order of Dist. Judge, Hissar, D/- 11th August 1934.

Revision — Competency — Mortgagee becoming insolvent during pendency of suit — Unauthorised person applying to bring himself on record as assignee of Official Receiver, who did not choose to take steps to that extent — Application dismissed under O. 22, R. 8, Civil P. C.—Appeal allowed—Appeal held incompetent under S. 104, Civil P. C., read with O. 43—Arming unauthorised person with authority to harass another amounted to miscarriage of justice, revision held competent.

K as a mortgagee brought a suit against H for an injunction to restrain him from interfering with his rights. During its pendency K was adjudicated insolvent. Notice was given to Official Receiver to continue the suit but he took no steps to bring himself on record. However R as assignee of receiver applied to be brought on record and wanted to continue the suit for his own benefit only. His application was rejected under O. 22, R. 8, and on appeal an objection was raised that no appeal was provided for under S. 104, Civil P. C., read with O. 43 against such an order. The lower appellate Court accepted the appeal treating the suit as one under O. 22, R. 10:

Held: that the receiver, not having been brought on record as the representative of the insolvent, was no party to suit and that having no interest in it, could not validly transfer it under O. 22, R. 10. Hence the suit being governed by O. 22, R. 8, was not appealable as no appeal had been provided against this order by S. 104 read with O. 43, Civil P. C.;

Held further: that to arm an authorised person with an authority to harass one to whom valuable right had been secured on account of the contumacious disregard of the law by the Official Receiver did clearly amount to a miscarriage of justice entitling the High Court to exercise revisional powers in such a matter.

Judgment.—Kishen Lal brought a suit against Har Sukh and others for a declaration that he was the mortgagee of certain land from them and for an injunction to restrain them from interfering with his rights. During the pendency of this suit Kishen Lal was adjudicated an insolvent. Thereupon notice was issued to the Official Receiver asking him whether he would continue the suit on behalf of the insolvent, but he took no steps whatever to bring himself on the record. One Kanshi Ram however claiming to be an assignee from the Official Receiver applied to be brought on the record in place of Kishen Lal and wanted to maintain the suit not for the benefit of Kishen Lal's creditors but for his own benefit only. The Subordinate Judge rejected his application dismissed the suit, presumably under O. 22, R. 8, Civil P. C. Kanshi Ram appealed to the District Judge against the order of the Subordinate Judge rejecting his application.

A preliminary objection was taken by the defendants before the District Judge that no appeal lay as the order of the Subordinate Judge was passed under O. 22, R. 8, and no appeal was provided for under S. 104, Civil P. C., read with O. 43, Civil P. C., against such an order. The District Judge however overruled the preliminary objection, held the assignment as one under O. 22, R. 10, entertained the appeal and accepted it, thereby allowing Kanshi Ram to continue the suit. From this order the defendant has preferred an appeal. A preliminary objection has been taken before me that no appeal lies against the order of the District Judge. The objection is based on two grounds. In the first place it is urged that a second appeal is barred by S. 104 (2) from an order passed in appeal under this section. Secondly it is argued that the appeal purports to have been filed under O. 43, R. 1 (u), and as that sub-rule contemplates an appeal from an order remanding a case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., and as the order of the District Judge does not fall under that rule, no appeal is competent. In my opinion both these grounds are valid and the preliminary objection must prevail. Counsel for the appellant, realising the force of these objections, has urged that this appeal may be treated as a petition for revision and the order of the District Judge be set aside inasmuch as in entertaining the appeal he has exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in him by law. This is no doubt so and I entertain this appeal as a petition for revision accordingly.

Order 22, R. 8, lays down that the insolvency of a plaintiff shall not cause the suit to abate unless the receiver declines to continue the suit, and further provides that if the receiver neglects or refuses to continue the suit, the Court may make an order dismissing the suit. In the case before me the receiver, in spite of notice and appearance in Court, did not choose to continue the suit and the Court had no option but to dismiss it. The receiver not having been brought on the record as the representatives of the insolvent plaintiff he was no party to the suit, and had therefore no interest in the suit which he could validly transfer under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C. Moreover, the word 'other' in R. 10 is significant and makes the rule applicable to those cases only which are not specifically dealt with before. In these circumstances the order of the Subordinate Judge evidently fell within the ambit of O. 22, R. 8, and not that of R. 10 and was consequently not appealable as no appeal has been provided for against this order by S. 104, Civil P. C., read with O. 43, Civil P. C.

Counsel for the respondents has urged that as no miscarriage of justice has taken place, I should refuse to interfere on revision with the order of the District Judge, but I do not agree with him there. To arm an unauthorised person with an authority to harass the defendant to whom valuable right has been secured on account of the contumacious disregard of the law by the Official Receiver does, in my view, clearly amount to a miscarriage of justice entitling me to exercise my revisional jurisdiction in this matter. I hold therefore that no appeal lay to the District Judge and that his order setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained. I therefore accept the appeal, treating it as a petition for revision, with costs, and disallow the application of Kanshi Ram to be brought on the record of the original suit.

(a) Master and servant—Temporary employees—Extension of privileges regarding pension, leave, etc., does not raise their status to permanent ones—One month's notice is sufficient to dispense with their services.

The mere extension to the employees in a temporary establishment of certain privileges regarding pension and leave does not raise their position to that of employees in permanent service; nor does the fact that such an employee was given 8 months' notice instead of the usual one month provided for a temporary employee raise him to the status of a permanent employee: 1934 Rang 881 and 1934 Mad 516, Disting. [P 86 C 2]

Achhru Ram and Vishnu Datta—for Appellant.

Ram Lal and Suraj Narain—for Respondent.

Currie, J. — The appellant Pandit Udho Ram was employed for some 18 years as an upper subordinate in the Central Public Works Department, Delhi. He latterly acted as a Sub-Divisional Officer. While on leave his post was brought under reduction and his services were terminated with effect from 21st July 1929, the date on which his leave expired. On 10th July 1931, he instituted a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council claiming Rs. 80,000. This amount was made up as follows: Rs. 48,000 as damages on account of the pay that he estimated he would have drawn had he been allowed to serve up to the age of 55; Rs. 22,000 as commutation value of the pension he would have got had he been allowed to serve up to the age of 55 and Rs. 10,000 as damages on account of loss of reputation and honour. It was urged also that he was entitled to a pension of Rs. 97-12-0 per mensem but this has been reduced by the Chief Engineer to Rs. 92-1-0 per mensem. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that he was a temporary employee on a monthly basis. As regards the question of his pension it was held that any suit as regards this would be barred under the provisions of S. 4, Pensions Act. The plaintiff has appealed against this decision. For the Secretary of State it has been urged that the Crown can dispense with the services of its servants at pleasure. In this connection the learned counsel cited 57 Mad 857 (1), and an unreported ruling of this Court given in C. A. 1813 of 1933 (2). For the appellant two unreported rulings delivered by a Bench of this Court in C. As 628 and 692 of 1931 were cited. There is a clear conflict of authority on this question but in view of the conclusion which I have reached regarding the nature of the plaintiff's employment it is unnecessary to discuss this point further. The question in the present case is whether the plaintiff was a temporary employee or no. Admittedly when first employed he was employed as a temporary upper subordinate. From the classification list which has been filed it appears that the whole of the establishment of upper subordinates employed in the Central Public Works Department, Delhi, were classed as temporary servants. It was only on 19th October 1933, according to the evidence of D. W. 1 that the department was made permanent. The appellant's service book shows that throughout he was classed as a temporary upper subordinate. According to the evidence of P. W. 1 Nanak Chand, Superintendent of Chief Engineer's Office, and D. W. 1 Labhu Ram, Assistant in the Chief Engineer's Office, every temporary employee has to sign the form D/1 which is printed at p. 89. This is a declaration to the effect that he has been made acquainted with the conditions prescribed for temporary employees in the Buildings and Roads Branch, Punjab Public Works Department, as laid down in D/2 printed at p. 88 and is willing to accept employment under them. These conditions appear in the Public Works Department Manual and were certainly in force as early as 1907 as they appear in the edition of that work issued in that year. The plaintiff denied that he had ever signed such declaration and his declaration form was not forthcoming though Nanak Chand, P. W. 1, deposes to having seen a form which purported to have been signed by Udho Ram and search was made for this form in the office records. In my opinion there is no reason to doubt that the plaintiff did sign such a form when he entered service as the Public Works Department Manual very definitely lays down that such a form is to be signed by every one who is engaged as a temporary employee. In any case there is not the least doubt that the plaintiff was fully aware of the fact that he was a temporary employee and was not ignorant of the terms of service governing such employees.

1. Rangachari v. Secy. of State, 1934 Mad 516=154 I C 884=57 Mad 857.

2. Jammu v. Secy. of State, since reported in 1935 Lah 669=155 I C 895=37 P L R 370.

It is however argued on his behalf that though originally his service was temporary the conditions of the contract were abrogated subsequently and his status was raised to that of a permanent employee by the fact that the Government of India in November 1931 by letter No. 1390-E. B. dated 30th November 1921 (Ex. P-1) allowed temporary upper subordinates to count their temporary service for pension and also granted concessions regarding leave waiving the restrictions imposed in Art. 242 (a), Civil Service Regulations. It is argued that as the concessions regarding leave and pension, thus granted to the upper subordinates were the same as those enjoyed by the permanent establishment, therefore the provisions of S. 96-B, Government of India Act and the rules made thereunder govern their service. Reference is made to R. 55 which prescribes that no order of dismissal, removal or reduction shall be passed on a member of a Service unless he has been informed in writing of the ground on which it is proposed to take action, and has been afforded an adequate opportunity of defending himself. This procedure admittedly was not followed in the present case. It is urged that the upper subordinates have been treated on the same footing as permanent employees. Reference has been made to 12 Rang 556 (3) in which it was held in the case of a Head Clerk employed in the Port Office that as such employees have always been treated by Government as subject to the Fundamental Rules they were entitled to the protection afforded by S. 96-B, Government of India Act and the rules framed thereunder. That case however proceeded on its own facts which were very different to those of the present case. Further, in that case there is nothing to show that the establishment employed in the Port Office was temporary. Here there is not the least doubt that the upper subordinates in the Central Public Works Department, Delhi, have throughout been classed as temporary establishment.

The mere extension to them of certain privileges regarding pension and leave would not, in my opinion, raise their position to that of employees in permanent service. It is argued that the plaintiff was given three months notice instead of the usual one month provided for temporary employees. Actually however the notice given to him (printed at p. 63) was to the effect that his services would not be required after the expiration of his leave. This was dated 25th April 1929, and his leave expired on 21st July 1929 so that it actually was not three months' notice. It appears however from the letter of the Chief Engineer (Ex. P/12-P/13) that the Chief Engineer adopted the course that he did for the purpose of obtaining a pension for the plaintiff. He remarks at p. 56 :

If therefore I had merely given Pandit Udho Ram a month's notice without reducing his post of temporary upper subordinate, he could not have hoped to have obtained a pension to which he would otherwise be entitled under the Article quoted above (426).

From this it is argued that he should have been considered to have been a member of the permanent service to which ordinarily that Article applies. There is however in my opinion, no force in that contention as the provisions relating to pensions have been extended by the Government of India letter to temporary subordinates and it is clearly laid down in that letter that the service was temporary. I am therefore of opinion that there is no doubt that Pandit Udho Ram was throughout merely a temporary employee and as such his services could have been dispensed with at one month's notice. The mere fact that he was given more than a month's notice and was allowed a pension does not in itself alter his status. The suit therefore as far as it relates to damages for loss of future emoluments on account of wrongful dismissal must fail. As regards the claim with respect to his pension it appears that if his average salary had been reckoned at Rs. 345 per mensem he would have been entitled to Rupees 97-12-0. This sum of Rs. 345 was made up of Rs. 270 substantive pay and Rs. 75 charge allowance. Apparently while on leave he was not allowed to draw Rs. 75 and thus his average salary was reduced and consequently the amount of his pension was fixed at Rs. 92-1-0. It is clear however that under the provisions of S. 4, Pensions Act no Civil Court can entertain any suit relating to any pension . . . whatever may have been the consideration for any such pension or grant.

It has been urged that Pensions Act refers only to political pensions, but it is clear from S. 11 which mentions pension granted on account of past services or present infirmities, or as a compassionate allowance that it relates to all pensions. This is further made clear by the fact that among the Acts which were repealed by that Act is given in Sch. 4, Act 4 of 1849 an Act for securing military and naval pension and super-annuation allowances. It is clear therefore that under the provisions of S. 4, Pensions Act no claim could be entertained regarding his pension. In these circumstances the plaintiff's suit was, in my opinion, rightly dismissed and his appeal must fail. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—The claim in this suit is for a declaration that certain land is waqf property and there are grave-yards there and that the plaintiffs and other Muhammadans have the right to say prayers and offer funeral prayers there and that the defendants have no rights to use the land as their personal property and that the defendants considering it their own exclusive property cannot use it for their own purposes. The claim originally extended to several khasra numbers but this appeal is confined to one number only, namely No. 2338, which was held by the trial Judge to be waqf property; the other numbers were held by the trial Judge not to be waqf and no appeal was taken against this decision: on appeal to the District Judge No. 2338 was held not to be waqf property. The argument for the appellant before me is sweeping: it is that the plaintiffs as Mahomedans are interested in the plot because it once was a grave-yard and have a right to the declaration sought. The learned District Judge has found that the plaintiffs have no right peculiar to themselves; their allegation that they had in conjunction with other Mahomedans the right to say prayers on this land appears to be without foundation; it has not been found that any such right has ever been exercised. The learned Judge has also found, in my opinion correctly, that when used as a graveyard, the graveyard was a private one and no one had any right of burial in it: the owners chose to use it for themselves: it has ceased to be used as a burial ground for 30 years. The learned Judge has also found that the plaintiffs have no special interest in the graves which are on the spot now in question. I may add that I have found nothing on the record to show that this suit was brought by the plaintiffs on behalf of the Mahomedans generally: they claimed that their ancestors were buried in this land and this claim they have not established.

The learned counsel for the appellants cited many cases in support of the plaintiffs' claim to show that a waqf may in the absence of direct evidence of dedication be established by evidence of user and that if land has once been dedicated as a cemetery it must always be regarded as a cemetery, unless it becomes unfit for such a use. These propositions are well supported by the cases cited, of which I need only mention 1921 Lah 303 (1), 1930 Oudh 245 (2), and I accept them as settled law: but the user from which dedication can be implied must be clearly established and must be of such a character as to be consistent only with dedication. The present case seems to me to be indistinguishable in principle from 83 I C 536 (3). In that case the propositions set out about were accepted by the learned Chief Justice of the High Court at Madras who held that the user of land as a Mahomedan burial ground for a long time would itself make the land waqf though there was no public dedication but the mere fact that the land was entered in the Municipal registers as a burial ground in the name of a private owner who had no representative capacity was insufficient proof of user or dedication, and in the learned Chief Justice's opinion such user or dedication was required to be public user or public dedication. In the present case the evidence shows no more than that certain persons were many years ago buried in the plot: there is no evidence of public user. Accordingly, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

(a) Custom (Punjab) — Succession — Randhawa Jats of Amritsar District — Non-ancestral property—Daughters oust collaterals beyond 5th degree.

Among Randhawa Jats of Amritsar District daughters oust collaterals beyond the fifth degree in succession to non-ancestral property: 1935 Lah 419 and 1935 Lah 408, Rel. on; 1922 Lah 392 and 1933 Lah 898, Dissent.; 1928 Lah 305, Foll. [P 92 C 1]

(b) Riwaj-i-am — Evidentiary value of — Entry as to special custom—Admissibility of — Onus of rebuttal.

An entry in the Riwaj-i-am recording a special custom is admissible to prove the statement alleged therein even if the statement be unsupported by instances and the onus of rebuttal is upon the party disputing the correctness of the entry: 1927 Lah 241 and 1928 P C 294, Rel. on. [P 90 C 1]

(c) Riwaj-i-am — Evidentiary value of — Settlement Officer's opinion is entitled to consideration.

In discussing the Riwaj-i-am entry the opinion of the Settlement Officer must be deemed to qualify the nature of the answers recorded in the Riwaj-i-am itself. For his opinion is entitled to due weight and has the effect of lessening the burden cast on the parties: 1930 Lah 761 and 1935 Lah 419, Foll. [P 90 C 2].

Sale, J.—This is an appeal against a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, granting to the plaintiffs a declaration of title with the possession of an area of 1,021 kanals of land situated in the village of Pandori Hassan in the Tarn Taran tahsil of the Amritsar dis-strict. The suit arises out of a disputed claim to succession which opened out on the death of the widow of the last male-holder Ala Singh. The parties are Randhawa Jats and the contest is between the daughter's sons of the last male-holder whose claim has been decreed by the lower Court and the collaterals in the eighth degree. The material findings of the lower Court which have been contested in appeal are (1) that the land in suit is ancestral and (2) that the daughter's sons of the last male-holder have a preferential right to succeed as against the defendants who are his collaterals in the eighth degree. In arguing the appeal, Mr. Aggarwal has treated as a matter of secondary importance the first point regarding the ancestral nature of the land. Although attacking the decision of the lower Court that the land is ancestral, his main contention is that whether the land is ancestral or not, the daughters (and therefore admittedly the daughter's sons) are by the special custom embodied in the Riwaj-i-am of the Amritsar district excluded by collaterals, however, remote. It is necessary, however, first to decide the nature of the land in suit, whether ancestral or not ancestral. The onus of this issue (No. 3 on the lower Court's record) is printed as being laid on the plaintiffs, i. e., daughters's sons. Admittedly, however, this is an error or a misprint. It is conceded in appeal that the onus of establishing that the land is ancestral lies on the defendant-collaterals.

To discharge this onus, the appellants' counsel relies solely on a presumption sought to be drawn from the fact that the parties whose common ancestor appears in the pedigree table, belong to different pattis holding approximately equal shares. But the facts do not admit of any such presumption. It appears from the kaifiyat shajra nasab of the 1865 settlement (Ex. D/5) that the village after a long period of desertion was re-founded by three persons—Hasan, Vik and Kirtu. It may be that these three persons were the descendants of the original founders, but the point is immaterial. The parties to this suit are descended from only one of the persons who re-founded the village, viz., from the Hassan. Ala Singh the last male-holder belongs to one of the two pattis into which this Hassan divided his share, while the collaterals belong to the second patti. It is true that each of these pattis hold about equal shares. But none of the khatahs are joint of the parties; nor is it proved that the parties or their predecessors-in-interest have throughout held the same land. From the revenue extract Ex. D. W. 2/1, it seems that the name of Ala Singh, the last male-holder, through whom the plaintiffs' claim, appears for the first time as an owner in 1892 under circumstances that are obscure. It is not known how Ala Singh acquired the land and it is manifestly impossible to presume that he inherited the land in unbroken succession from the common ancestor Hassan. The rulings cited by the lower Court as quoted on behalf of the collaterals to establish the presumption that the land is ancestral, have been rightly distinguished by the trial Judge and it is unnecessary to discuss them here. No other authorities have been cited in appeal. We are of opinion that the trial Judge was right in holding that the land in suit is not ancestral.

The next question for consideration is the claim made on behalf of the collaterals that even in the case of non-ancestral land, collaterals as remote as the eighth degree exclude daughters. It is admitted that this claim is contrary, not only to Hindu law, which recognises the rights of daughters, but also to the generally accepted customary law of the Province embodied in para 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary law which gives a preferential claim over daughters to collaterals only up to the fifth degree. Mr. Aggarwal has, however urged that there can be no question of any general custom in this case. The basis of his claim is the special custom embodied in Answers to Questions 60 and 61 of the most recent riwaj-i-am of the Amritsar district compiled by the Settlement Officer, Mr. Craik (now Sir Henry) in 1914. The finding of the lower Court is that while this riwaj-i-am entry is undoubtedly in favour of the defendant-collaterals (with the consequence that the onus of proving their claim lies on the daughter's sons), the presumption in favour of the collaterals has been rebutted by the evidence produced in this case which establishes, in the opinion of the Senior Subordinate Judge, that among the Jats of the Amritsar district daughters oust collaterals beyond the fifth degree. It is settled by Privy Council decision in 45 P R 1917 (1), as interpreted in 8 Lah 281 (2) and 10 Lah 86 (3), that an entry in the riwaj-i-am recording a special custom is admissible to prove the statement alleged therein, even if the statement be unsupported (as in the present case) by instances, and places the onus of rebuttal upon the party disputing the correctness of the entry. But a discussion of the material riwaj-i-am entries is necessary in order to determine the weight of the onus which is thus cast on the daughter's sons. In reply to Question 60, it is said that:

nearly all tribes state that daughters are excluded by male lineal descendants . . . similarly nearly all of them say that agnates, however remote, exclude daughters.

Certain exceptions are given, but the case of Randahwa Jats (the parties now in suit) is not amongst those exceptions. Again it is mentioned in a note to Answer 60 that the exclusion of a daughter is so strict that even in those cases where there is no agnate at all, she is deprived of succession. At the same time no instances of this exclusion are quoted. On the contrary it is mentioned that the riwaj-i-am of 1865 (the previous settlement) is silent as to the exclusion of daughters by agnates, and in the English copy of the present riwaj-i-am the Settlement Officer goes on to express his opinion that the feeling against daughters which is the basis of the replies given, is "rather a prejudice than a true statement of custom." In reality, he adds in his reply to Question 61, which relates to the distinction between the rights of inheritance of daughters to ancestral and non-ancestral property, that, daughters have a right to exclude agnates with respect to non-ancestral property, though the right is seldom asserted.

Further in the introduction to the Riwaj-i-am, it is stated that :

As regards daughters the custom is anything but uniform; the general trend of opinion is that daughters succeed to the non-ancestral property to the exclusion of agnates.

These entries in the Riwaj-i-am together with the opinions expressed by the Settlement Officer thereon were considered in the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court cited as

1. Beg v. Allah Ditta, 1916 P C 129=38 I C 354=44 I A 89=44 Cal 749=45 P R 1917 (P C).

3. Vaishno Ditti v. Rameshri, 1928 P C 294=113 I C 1=55 I A 407=10 Lah 86 (P C).

1933 Lah 898 (4), (Addison and Bhide, JJ.) in which Addison, J., following the trend of the discussion of Campbell, J., at p. 301 of 8 Lah 281 (2), made observations to the effect that the private opinion of the Settlement Officer in this matter is of no importance and should not be held to vary or affect the replies of the tribes themselves. This view of the Settlement Officer's opinion was not however accepted by Tek Chand, J., in 1930 Lah 761 (5), who in discussing this same Riwaj-i-am entry considered that the opinion expressed by the Settlement Officer must be deemed to qualify the nature of the answers recorded in the Riwaj-i-am itself. More recently in 1935 Lah 419 (6), Skemp, J., also referring to this Riwaj-i-am entry pointed out that it was the part of the Settlement Officer's official duty to express his opinion. Para 565 of Douie's Punjab Settlement Manual lays down :

Wherever it appears to a Settlement Officer that any answer embodies rather a vague popular sentiment, or a feeling of what ought to be, than what is actually customary, he should not fail to note the fact.

This is precisely what the Settlement Officer has done in the present case and in agreement with the views expressed in 1930 Lah 761 (5) and 1935 Lah 419 (6), we consider that in the absence of any instances quoted in the Riwaj-i-am, the Settlement Officer's opinion is entitled to due weight and has the effect of lessening the burden cast on the daughter's sons in the present case. While therefore the material replies in the Riwaj-i-am constitute some presumptive proof in favour of the collaterals, the presumption is weakened by the contrary opinion of the Settlement Officer himself. With these observations, we pass to consider the instances quoted in the present case. There are no instances of any evidential value pointing to the exclusion of daughters by agnates in the case of non-ancestral property, whereas there are undoubtedly well authenticated instances, which tend to confirm the view of the Settlement Officer, that daughters have been preferred to collaterals in succession to non-ancestral property. We would ignore the instances quoted by witnesses on both sides which are unsupported by documentary evidence, though we would in passing refer to the evidence of one of the collaterals' own witnesses, D. W. 22. Jagat Singh, a lambardar of a village of Randhawa Jats, who expressed the view that daughters have preference over collaterals in the case of succession to self-acquired property. On behalf of the collaterals, reliance was placed on three judicial instances.

4. Santa Singh v. Mt. Santi, 1933 Lah 898=144 I C 483.
5. Dhara Singh v. Armi, 1930 Lah 761=126 I C 434.

(1) Exhibit D/3, a judgment relating to the Randhawa Jats of Kairowal in the Tarn Taran tahsil by a Subordinate Judge 2nd Class, dated 2nd December 1919. This was the case of a gift and the appointment of an heir; it was held that the land in suit was ancestral and that the appointment of a daughter's son as heir is not recognized in the presence of collaterals of the fourth degree. This is certainly not a good instance in a contest between daughter's sons and collaterals of the eighth degree in succession to non-ancestral property.

(2) The same observations apply to the second judicial instance (Ex. D-6), (a previous judgment of the Subordinate Judge who decided the present case) in a contest relating to Man Jats between daughters and collaterals in the fifth degree. The trial Judge has given good reasons for distinguishing this judgment. Lastly there is one High Court judgment by Addison and Bhide, JJ., printed on p. 72 of the record which has already been noticed in another connexion as 1933 Lah 898 (4). It was herein held following the Riwaj-i-am of the district that daughters or their sons are not entitled to inherit even the self-acquired property of their father amongst Jats of the Amritsar district.

It is necessary however to point out that this decision was not based on any instances, but followed merely from a consideration of the onus of proof arising from the entries in the Riwaj-i-am (excluding the Settlement Officer's opinion). We have already given reasons for differing from the view taken in this judgment regarding the presumptive value of the Riwaj-i-am. In the present case numerous instances have been quoted on behalf of the daughter's sons to show that daughters do sometimes exclude collaterals. We do not therefore consider that this judgment provides a satisfactory precedent in support of the collaterals' contention. Other judgments have been cited, but they all relate to Kambohs; and since it has not been shown that Randhawa Jats follow the same custom as Kambohs, we do not consider it necessary to examine these decisions.

On behalf of the daughter's sons, counsel cites four judicial instances. We would ignore the first case 3 Lah 257 (7), since the judgment is open to the criticism of not having been decided in accordance with the views of the Privy Council on the value of the Riwaj-i-am given in 45 P R 1917 (1). But in 1935 Lah 408 (8), a Division Bench (Hilton and Din Mohammad, JJ.), held that Khaira Jats of the Amritsar district are governed by the general custom of the Punjab as recorded in para 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, whereby daughters were given preference over collaterals in matters of succession. It is not clear in this case, whether the land in suit was ancestral, or non-ancestral. Again, in 1935 Lah 419 (6), a Division Bench of this Court held that among Sarai Jats of the Amritsar District daughters exclude collaterals from succession to the self-acquired property of their father. Again, in 9 Lah 352 (9), a Division Bench of this Court held, following Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, para 23, that the rule in the Amritsar district is that daughters exclude collaterals in succession to self-acquired property. It has thus been held on three recent occasions by different Division Benches of this Court that in the Amritsar district, amongst Jats, daughters exclude collaterals in succession on to the self-acquired property. In addition, counsel Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan for the daughter's sons, has referred to a number of mutations showing that daughters have succeeded in preference to the collaterals. Some of these instances are quoted in the extract prepared by the Girdawar printed on p. 1 of the supplementary paper book covering a period between 1893 and 1913, though it must be noted that the evidential value of this extract is not great, since out of the nineteen instances quoted, only three refer to Jats and none of these are Randhawa Jats. But there is no instance to the contrary.

7. Gurdit Singh v. Ishar Kaur, 1922 Lah 392=68 I C 551=3 Lah 257.
8. Thakar Singh v. Mt. Dhankaur, 1935 Lah 403=157 I C 114=37 P L R 225.
9. Pir Bakhsh v. Ghulam Bibi, 1928 Lah 305=107 I C 280=9 Lah 352=29 P L R 475.

But amongst Jats we have the following additional instances: (1) Wasawa Singh's case, mutation Ex. P/18, proved on p. 16 of the printed record in which a daughter succeeded in preference to the collaterals. (2) Khemi's instance, 1919, mutation Ex. P/12, in which a daughter succeeded in preference to collaterals of the seventh degree. In this case an inquiry was ordered into custom by the revenue authorities and it was found that the collaterals only exclude daughters up to the fifth degree. (3) Ghasita Singh's case, mutation Ex. P/14, in which a daughter succeeded in preference to the collaterals of the eighth degree. (4) The next is Bhag Singh's case, mutation Ex. P/26, proved by P. W. 6, in which the adoption of a daughter as heir in preference to the collaterals was admitted. (5) Mt. Premi's case, mutation Ex. P/10 relating to 1918 by which a daughter succeeded in preference to collaterals in the seventh degree. The collaterals appealed to the Collector, but the appeal was dismissed. (6) Nandan's instance, 1917, mutation Ex. P/13. This relates to self-acquired property amongst Randhawa Jats in which a daughter was preferred to collaterals of the eighth degree. (7) Mutation Ex. P/25 of 15th June 1919 by which a daughter succeeded in preference to the collaterals of the ninth degree. (8) Mutation Ex. P/27 relating to 1931 is a similar instance. Finally, there are Exs. P/4, P/5 and P/6 which are judgments by the District Judge, Amritsar, dated 1920, 1919 and 1917, respectively, in which daughters were preferred to collaterals of the sixth degree. From this discussion, it appears that whereas the collaterals have not been able to produce a single well authenticated case to justify their claim that collaterals of the eighth degree should exclude daughters, numerous instances have been proved in which daughters have been given preference over collaterals less remote than the collaterals in the present case.

We agree therefore with the lower Court in holding that the daughter's sons have succeeded in rebutting such presumption as may be considered to arise against them by reason of the riwaj-i-am of the Amritsar district; and we hold that their claim has therefore been rightly decreed. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

ADDISON AND DIN MOHAMMAD, JJ.

Nazir Din and another — Plaintiffs — Appellants.

Mohammad Shah and others — Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 2380 of 1926, Decided on 22nd October 1934, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 16th April 1926.

(a) Mahomedan Law — Gift — Undivided shares of agricultural estate can form subject of gift — Donor and donee related as grandfather and grandson — Donor need not physically part with possession — Mere intention on his part to treat property as that of donee and to divest himself of his own ownership is sufficient.

In case the donor and the donee are related to each other as grandfather and grandson, it is unnecessary that the donor should physically part with the possession of the property. A mere intention on his part to treat the property as that of donee and to divest himself of his own ownership, is enough to constitute a valid gift. An undivided share of agricultural estates can be made the subject of gift and in such cases, if mutations take place subsequently on the basis of the shares defined in the gift, even if no actual partition takes place between the various owners of the said property, the gift cannot be impugned on that score. Hence if in a registered deed, which is solemnly executed after undergoing all the formalities of law, there is a clear declaration made that the donor parts with his dominion over the property and transfers it to the donee and accepts the position of an agent of the donee in the management of the property, the delivery as required by law is complete: Case law discussed. [P 94 C 1, 2]

(b) Mahomedan Law—Mushaa—Rigidity of rule has been considerably relaxed in British India.

The original rigidity of the rule of Mushaa has been considerably relaxed in its application to British India and in almost all cases, which have come up before the Courts, an effort has been made to adopt the rule to its new environments and so to interpret it as to make it consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. [P 95 C 2; P 96 C 1]

(c) Mahomedan Law — Gift — Gift of Mushaa is valid if donor has done all that law requires him to do to separate himself from property—Tests indicated.

The only test that should be applied in cases of gifts under Mahomedan law is to see whether intention on the part of the donor has been expressed in most unequivocal terms and has been attended by honest efforts on his part to complete the gift by divesting himself of the control over the property in such a manner as would clearly imply his divestiture in the eye of the law of the land or in other words whether the donor has still reserved to himself a loop-hole of escape or not. If this is not so and if the donor has done all that the law of the land requires to be done to separate himself from the property, a gift of Mushaa will be as valid as that of property which can be physically handed over to the donee.

(d) Mahomedan Law—Gift — Delivery of possession of any part of property makes whole gift operative.

A gift being indivisible, the delivery of possession of any part of the property would make the whole gift operative: 1922 P C 281, Foll.; 1927 Pat 20 and 1927 Mad 572, Rel. on.

S. N. Bali, J. N. Khosla and Mohsin Shah—for Appellants.

Malik Barkat Ali—for Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—The dispute, in this case, relates to the property of one Aziz Din of Dina Nagar. He had married two wives. By one of his wives, he had a son, Feroz Din, and two daughters, Mt. Jannat Bibi and Mt. Ghulam Fatma. By his second wife, he had a son, Nasir Din and three daughters, Mt. Sughra, Aisha and Mt. Batul. Feroz Din died in 1912, leaving him surviving his three sons, Mohammad Shah, Mohammad Yusuf and Mohammad Ibrahim. Aziz Din had a brother named Mohammad Bakhsh who left a grandson, Mohammad Sharif. He had also a sister whose son is Abdul Ghani. It appears that, in 1913, which was admittedly before the birth of Nasir Din, he made a gift of a part of his property in favour of his three grandsons, mentioned above, his daughter Mt. Jannat Bibi, his sister's son Abdul Ghani, and his brother's grandson Mohammad Sharif, whose gift however, is not the subject-matter of the present suit. To Mohammad Shah, Mohammad Yusuf and Mohammad Ibrahim, he gave, among other properties, "one half share out of 576 acres of land situated at Chak 270 (Sind)," and "3/4ths share out of a house situated at Dina Nagar town." To Mt. Jannat Bibi, he gave, among other properties, "1/8th share of the Sind land" and "a vacant site at Dina Nagar town." To Abdul Ghani, he gave "1/8th share of the Sind lands" together with some other property with which we are not concerned. Aziz Din died in 1922, leaving him surviving a widow, a son, five daughters and three grandsons. The present suit was instituted, on 21st August 1922, by Nazir

Din and his two minor sisters, Mt. Aisha Begam and Mt. Batul Begam, along with their mother Mt. Taj Bibi, against Abdul Ghani and the three grandsons of Aziz Din named above, and his three married daughters Mt. Jannat Bibi, Mt. Sughra Begam and Mt. Ghulam Fatima. It was for possession of the property alleged to have been owned by Aziz Din, including the property that was the subject of gift in 1913, as well as some other property which was alleged to have been purchased by him benami in the name of his son Feroz Din in 1889. The plaintiffs based their claim on Mahomedan law and contended that the three grandsons of Aziz Din were not entitled to inherit his estate, being the sons of a predeceased son; that the gift, if any, was illegal and void, as it came within the mischief of the doctrine of Mushaa; that the property purchased in the name of Feroz Din could not be treated as an advancement to him and should, therefore, be thrown into the hotchpot; and that the married daughters were not entitled to any share in the estate of their father as they had received their share in the shape of jewellery and dowry that were presented to them at the time of their marriage.

The three grandsons resisted the suit on the ground that they were governed by customary law and hence included among the heirs of Aziz Din; and added that, even if they were not, the gift in their favour was valid and the previous purchase in the name of their father was not benami. Mt. Jannat Bibi claimed inheritance on the basis of Mahomedan law and denied having received her share on the occasion of her marriage. Mt. Ghulam Fatma challenged the gift, based her claim on Mahomedan law and put in pleas similar to those of Mt. Jannat Bibi. Abdul Ghani's share was struck off as he had parted with his share of the gifted property in favour of some of the other defendants, and Mt. Sughra Begam supported the plaintiffs' claim. On these pleadings, necessary issues were framed by the Senior Subordinate Judge who came to the conclusion that the gift was valid, that the purchase in the name of Feroz Din in 1889 was not proved to be benami, and that barring the property which was the subject of the gift and the property purchased by Feroz Din, the plaintiffs were entitled to share the rest of the estate left by Sheikh Aziz Din, along with all the female defendants, according to the shares prescribed by the Mahomedan law. Dissatisfied with this decision, they have preferred this appeal. The learned counsel who has appeared on their behalf, has attacked the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge merely on two grounds, namely: (1) that the gift is invalid under Mahomedan law, and (2) that the purchase of the property in the name of Feroz Din in 1889 was benami. I will take up the question of the gift first. It was contended by the learned counsel that the doctrine of Mushaa was applicable to the present case and as it was not permissible under the Mahomedan law to take a gift of an undivided share in any property, the gift in suit could not be maintained. He mainly based his argument on the fact that the subject of the gift was an undivided share of lands situated at Sind and of the house at Dina Nagar, and urged that as no delivery of possession had taken place, which was a sine qua non for validity of a gift under the Mahomedan law, the gift could not be operative.

I consider however that the Mahomedan law neither contemplates the actual delivery of possession for the validity of gift in cases like the present, nor does it prohibit gifts of such properties as are covered by the present deed. It is no doubt true that according to strict Hanafi law, the general proposition, as laid down by some of its exponents, is to the effect that an undivided part of a thing, that is capable of division, cannot be the subject of gift. But, to my mind, it means something else than what is imported into it by the learned counsel for the appellants. The Mahomedan law of gift has been interpreted on several occasions by their Lordships of the Privy Council as well as by the High Courts in India, and the general principle deducible from those authorities is that, in case the donor and the donee are related to each other in the manner in which they are related in the present case, it is unnecessary that the donor should physically part with the possession of the property and that a mere intention on his part to treat the property as that of the donee and to divest himself of his own ownership, is enough to constitute a valid gift. It is also clear from these authorities that an undivided share of agricultural estates can be made the subject of gift, and that in such cases, if mutations take place subsequently on the basis of the shares defined in the gift, even if no actual partition takes place between the various owners of the said property, the gift cannot be impugned on that score. So far as the delivery of possession is concerned the consensus of opinion now-a-days is that if in a registered deed, which is solemnly executed after undergoing all the formalities of law, there is a clear declaration made that the donor parts with his dominion over the property and transfers it to the donee and accepts the position of an agent of the donee in the management of the property, the delivery as required by law is complete.

The earliest judgment to which reference may with advantage be made is 11 All 460 (1). Their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the law relating to the invalidity of gifts of Mushaa, i. e., the prohibition of gift of an undivided part in property capable of partition, ought to be confined within the strictest rules, and the authorities on the Mahomedan law show that possession taken under a gift, even although that gift might with reference to Mushaa be invalid without it, transfers effectively the property given according to the doctrine of both the Shia and Sunni Schools. Possession once taken under a gift is not invalidated as regards its effect in supporting the gift by any subsequent change of possession.

The subject of the gift in that case also was shares in revenue-paying villages, with land, houses and moveables. At p. 475, their Lordships further observed that the doctrine relating to the invalidity of the gift of Mushaa was wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society, and considered that when the donor had declared in the deed of gift that she had made the donee possessor of all properties given by the deed, that she had abandoned all connexion with them and that the donee was to have complete control of every kind in respect thereof, sufficient possession was taken on behalf of the donee to render the gift effectual.

In 35 Cal 1 (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council followed 11 All 460 (1), and held that assuming the law of Mushaa applied to the succession of Mahomedans.

1. Mohammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubeida Jan., (1889) 11 All 460=16 I A 205=5 Sar 483 (P C).
2. Ibrahim Goolam Arif v. Saiboo, (1903) 35 Cal 1=34 I A 167=4 L B R 154 (P C).

residing in Rangoon, that doctrine was not applicable to shares in companies nor to shares in free-hold property in a large commercial town. In that case, the subject of gift was certain undivided shares in property consisting of 18 parcels of free-hold land along with shares in six companies. The donor notionally divided the property to be dealt with into two thousand shares, kept to himself 1150 shares and distributed the remaining 850 among the persons to be benefited, and it was consequently contended in that case that the gift was void as being contrary to the doctrine of Mushaa. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that even if the duty of the Courts were to construct a prohibition of gifts of undivided shares of what was divisible, which should be applicable to the conditions of modern life, it would seem impossible in the case of the shares and extremely difficult in the case of free-hold property in a town, to carry it out, but the attitude of law towards this doctrine of Mushaa did not involve any such constructive application of the doctrine. Their Lordships further considered that it would be inconsistent with the decision in 11 All 460 (1), to apply a doctrine which in its origin applied to very different subjects of property, to shares in companies and free-hold property in a great commercial town.

In 38 Cal 518 (3), a Bench of the Calcutta High Court laid down in a case where the subject of the gift was a four-annas share in a kaimi rayati holding, that as the donor had admitted the donee to joint possession with him and recognized him as being in such possession for 14 years, he could not be allowed to say that there had been no valid gift. A similar question came up before a Bench of this Court constituted by my brother Addison, J., and Tek Chand, J., in 10 Lah 761 (4), and it was remarked therein that the rules against the gift of Mushaa laid down by Abu Hanifa were of a highly technical nature and were considerably relaxed even in the days of his disciples and also by the later doctors of the Hanafi School. In that case also the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 11 All 460 (1) were quoted and followed. Even on the question of the transfer of possession, as remarked above, the Courts in British India as well as the Privy Council have enunciated certain principles which relax the rigours of the strict Mahomedan law as sometimes construed by certain orthodox doctors, and bring the law into consonance with modern civilisation and mode of life. In 1925 Lah 501 (5), Jai Lal, J., observed as follows :

Actual transfer of physical possession is not necessary to complete a gift in cases where donor and donee live in the gifted house. The fact that the donor continued to live in the same house for about a month after the date of the gift, which he had made by means of a registered deed, does not show that possession was not given to the donee, where it is so expressly stated in the deed.

In 5 Rang 7 (6), a Mohamedan had conveyed immovable property to his wife by a registered deed and had effected mutation in her name, but had continued to manage the property himself. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the acts of the husband after the mutation in reference to the property, must be regarded as being on his wife's behalf and that there had been delivery of possession within the rule and consequently the gift was valid under Mohamedan law. In a recent case reported in 6 Luck 556 (7), this question again came up before their Lordships of the Privy Council. In that case a Mohamedan had executed in favour of his wife a deed of gift of immovable property, which declared that he had delivered possession over it to her as an absolute owner. The deed was handed over to and retained by her, but there was no mutation of names. She did not take actual possession until after her husband's death, but during his lifetime she frequently resided with him on the premises. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that having regard to the declaration in the deed and the handing over of it to the donee, the gift was valid.

It will be manifest from the above that the original rigidity of the rule of Mushaa has been considerably relaxed in its application to British India and in almost all cases, which have come up before the Courts here as well as before the Privy Council, an effort has been made to adapt the rule to its new environments and so to interpret it as to make it consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. The Courts in this country have given effect rather to the spirit of the rule than to its letter and have upheld gifts in all cases in which the intention to give on the part of the donor had been expressed in most unequivocal terms, and had further been attended by all honest efforts on his part to complete the gift by divesting himself of the control over the property in such a manner as would clearly imply his divestiture in the eye of the law of the land.

The raison d'être of this rule was the avoidance of gifts that were vague, indefinite or incomplete, and the only test that should be applied in such cases is whether the gift in question is open to any of these objections; or in other words, whether the donor has still reserved to himself a loop-hole of escape or not. If this is not so and if the donor has done all that the law of the land requires to be done to separate himself from the property, a gift of Mushaa will be as valid as that of property which can be physically handed over to the donee. Transfer of possession is no doubt the main thing in the whole affair, and in every case this is the only thing to be seen. But, in different countries there are different methods by which this can be effected; and what acts amount to such a transfer in our own country, have been clearly indicated in the authorities cited above.

Applying these tests therefore to the gift before us, it is abundantly clear that all the requirements of the law have been completely fulfilled. Not only was the document registered in all its solemnity, but there was further a clear indication in the deed that the donor ceased to have any control over the property on his own behalf, and undertook to manage it as an agent of the donees only so long as they were labouring under a disability. He also made it clear that he would at once sever his connexion, whenever any one of the donees was fit to take charge of the property on his own account. In addition to this, in the case of agricultural lands, he had the names of the donees entered in the record of rights in place of his own name, and had thus given to the world a clear indication of the change of ownership; and in the case of properties other than land, he handed over physical possession to the donees and one of them, Mt. Janant Bibi, actually constructed a house on the site gifted to her. A gift being indivisible, the delivery of possession of any part of the property would make the whole gift operative. If any authority is needed for this proposition, reference may with advantage be made to 1922 P. C. 281 (8). At p. 288, their Lordships observed that the whole zemindari property mentioned in the deed, and not parts of it only, must be regarded as one property, the taking possession of any part of it being constructively the taking possession of the whole. The same principle was enunciated in 1927 Pat 20 (9). It was laid down in that case that where there was evidence to show that some of the properties in a gift had been delivered, delivery of possession of all properties could be inferred. In 1927 Mad 572 (10), Devadoss, J., held that where a person made a gift of certain items, some of which he could not at once deliver into the hands of the donee, it would not be right to hold that the whole gift was invalid.

I have therefore no hesitation in holding that the gift in this case was not a mere paper transaction, but a complete act in all respects and cannot now be impugned on the basis of the highly technical doctrine of Mushaa or on the ground of non-delivery of possession. The question of benami need not detain us long. There is not an iota of evidence worth consideration on the record to prove that the funds were supplied by Aziz Din when the purchase of the property was made by Feroz Din in 1889, nor is there any evidence to show that Aziz Din ever claimed that property to be his. Rather, all the documents executed by Aziz Din subsequent to 1889 clearly prove the contrary. He gave an inventory of his property in the deed of gift in dispute and also in the alleged will executed by him immediately before his death, and in neither of these did he ever lay claim to the property that had been in possession of Feroz Din since 1889. In these circumstances, I am quite satisfied that this point was also rightly decided against the plaintiffs. For the reasons given above, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Tek Chand, J. — The following pedigree-table will be helpful in understanding the facts of this case :

Ibrahim was the last occupancy tenant of the agricultural land in dispute. He died without leaving any male lineal descendant or widow, and on his death the occupancy holding was taken possession of by Ismail and Fazla, defendants 1 and 2. The plaintiffs, who are the proprietors of the land, brought a suit for possession of the land also of a house in the abadi. The suit was decreed by the trial Court and the decree has been affirmed by the District Judge. On second appeal, the first contention raised by Mr. Bali on behalf of the defendants is that the suit was triable by a Revenue Court only under the provisions of S. 77 (3) (d), read with the proviso to sub-S. (3) of that section. The point however is concluded by authority, the latest decision of this Court being 12 Lah 111 (1), in which after a review of previous rulings it was held that such a suit is not excluded from the jurisdiction of civil Courts by S. 77, Punjab Tenancy Act, or any other provision of the law. After hearing Mr. Bali at length I see no reason to dissent from the view taken in the ruling above-mentioned.

On the merits, it will be convenient to deal separately with the case relating to the occupancy land and the house. So far as the land is concerned, it is not denied that succession to the tenancy is governed by S. 59, Punjab Tenancy Act, under which on an occupancy tenant dying without leaving any male lineal descendants or a widow, the tenancy is extinguished, unless there are in existence any male collateral relatives in the male line of descent from the common ancestor of the deceased tenant and those relatives, and such ancestor had occupied the land. Obviously the appellants are not such collaterals for they claim descent from Khairoo through a female Mt. Jindo. Mr. Bali contends that in this case Mt. Jindo should be treated as a "son" of Jia, as succeeded Jia because her doli had not left the house of Jia at the time of her marriage, and she had succeeded in accordance with the rule of custom mentioned in Answer to Question 43 of Dunnett's Riwaji-i-am of the Ludhiana district. There is no clear finding that Mt. Jindo's doli did not leave Jia's house on her marriage, but assuming that this was so and it was for this reason that the landlords allowed Mt. Jindo to continue in possession of the occupancy tenancy after Jia's death, the defendants cannot be treated to be the male collateral relatives of Ibrahim in the male line of descent from Khairoo for the purposes of S. 59, Tenancy Act [cf. 113 P R 1913 (2).] I have no doubt that the appellants have no right to succeed to this land and that on Ibrahim's death the occupancy tenancy was extinguished, and that the land reverted to the plaintiffs-proprietors.

The case relating to the house however stands on a different footing. The house is situate in the village abadi and not in the occupancy holding. The finding is that Baghela, father of Khairoo, the common ancestor of Jia and the defendants had settled in this village with the original founders and had the status of a malik qabza. In 1852 both Jia and Ranga owned two houses in the abadi, adjacent to each other. On Jia dying sonless the house was taken possession of by his daughter Mt. Jindo, and on her death it devolved on her son, Hassan and then on Ibrahim. On Ibrahim's death his daughter Mt. Saidi, who is married to Umra, son of Ismail (defendant 1) entered into possession. The house has nothing to do with the occupancy holding in the agricultural land, and I do not see how the plaintiffs (proprietors) can lay claim to it. On Ibrahim's death, either his daughter and her issue, or the collaterals of his father's maternal grandfather Jia, from whom the house had devolved on him, would be entitled to succeed. The learned District Judge has relied on an entry in the Wazib-ul-arz of 1882 but that entry, assuming that it is still in force, has no application to the facts as found to exist in connexion with the house in question. I hold that the plaintiffs' suit for possession of the house was wrongly decreed. I would accordingly accept this appeal partially, and in modification of the decree of the learned District Judge dismiss the suit in respect of the house but affirm the decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of the agricultural land. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Judgment.—The only question for decision in this case is whether a mortgage and sale by a widow were justified under the Hindu law. The trial Judge held that consideration was proved only to the extent of Rs. 1,300 and that no legal necessity was established. The alienations were therefore set aside. On appeal the learned District Judge was satisfied that the alienations were made in order to raise money for certain litigation in which the widow was engaged. He therefore accepted the appeal and upheld the alienations. A further appeal has been filed to this Court by the Official Receiver of the estate of one Bhagwan Chand a reversioner of the widow.

The learned District Judge has not dealt with the evidence on the record and has not come to any clear findings that the whole sum raised by the widow was required for the expenses of litigation and that the income from her husband's estate in her hands was insufficient for that purpose. It appears that the learned Judge was of opinion that it was for those objecting to the alienations to show that the widow had no ready money with her at the time when the litigation commenced. It has been held in 38 Cal 721 (1), that in a case of this kind it is not sufficient to establish that there was litigation and expenses must have been incurred on it but it must be shown that the expenses could not have been met from the income of the estate, that they were reasonable and what they were. In 60 IC 486 (2) it was held that where a widow purports to alienate a portion of her husband's property in order to meet the expenses of litigation incurred for the protection of the estate necessity is not established unless it is proved by the alienee that at the time the money was actually advanced there was no money in the hands of the widow sufficient for the protection of the estate.

In the case of an alienation by a widow the onus is always on the alienee to show that the alienor's income was insufficient to provide money required for the purpose for which the alienation was said to have been made. In 46 IC 627 (3)

1. Ravaneswar Prasad Singh v. Chandi Prasad Singh, (1911) 38 Cal 721=12 IC 931.
2. Narain Singh v. Sarjung Singh, (1921) 60 IC 486.
3. Radha Kishan v. Nauratan Lal, 1918 Pat 548=46 IC 627=8 Pat LJ 522.

it was held that an alienee from a limited owner must show not merely that the object for which the money was required was a legitimate one but also that the funds available to the limited owner were insufficient to meet the necessary requirements. It was further held that costs of litigation are a recognised head of necessity but the power to borrow for that purpose is not unlimited. In the present case there is nothing to show when the litigation which is said to have necessitated the alienations began and what expenses were incurred on it. There is some evidence on the record to show what the funds in the hands of the widow were when her husband died but the learned District Judge has not given a clear finding that the funds left with her when the litigation started were insufficient to meet the necessary expenses to be incurred on it. It cannot therefore be said that the finding is one of fact and cannot be attacked in second appeal. I also find that no finding has been given as to the passing of the consideration for the alienations. The first alienation was a mortgage dated 6th October 1926 for a sum of Rs. 2,500. According to the mortgage deed a sum of Rs. 150 had been received previously and the remaining sum of Rupees 2,350 was to be received before the Sub-Registrar. The Sub-Registrar's endorsement however shows that a sum of Rs. 350 only was paid in his presence. No necessity for the loan is mentioned in the deed at all. The second alienation was a sale dated 7th May 1927. According to the sale deed the consideration was Rs. 7,000 and was made up thus:

1. Due to the vendee on account of the previous mortgage ... Rs. 2,500.
2. Due on account of a promissory note dated 12th December 1926... Rs. 1,200.
3. Due on account of a promissory note dated 17th February 1926... Rs. 800.
4. Due on account of a promissory note dated 20th April 1927 ... Rs. 500.
5. Paid in cash on account of expenses of stamp and registration Rs. 300.
6. Due to the vendee on account of a book debt... Rs. 400.
7. Paid before the Sub-Registrar ... Rs. 1,300.

The sale deed does not mention any necessity for the sale. The Sub-Registrar's endorsement shows that a sum of Rs. 1,300 was paid in his presence. The promissory notes and the book account referred to above were not produced. The mortgage deed as well as the sale deed were executed on behalf of the widow by her son-in-law Shankar Lal. He stated that she had borrowed Rupees 1,000 from one Raj Narain and the latter's debt was paid off out of the mortgage money mentioned above. There is no evidence on the record to show what the nature of the debt said to have been due to Raj Narain was and when it was borrowed. Shankar Lal made a vague statement to the effect that when the widow was in need of money for the purpose of litigation she sold her property. He admitted that he had no account of the expenses of litigation and no account of the income of her property. He also admitted that her husband who died in 1920 or thereabout left moveable property worth Rs. 5,000 or 6,000 and also shop goods worth Rs. 5,000 or 10,000. This evidence does not seem to establish that the widow received full consideration for the alienations, that the full amount was required for the expenses of litigation and that she had no other source for meeting those expenses. I therefore accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and remand the case to him for a fresh decision in the light of the above remarks. The parties have been directed to appear before him on 1st August 1935. Costs to follow the event.

Misc. Appeal No. 479 of 1935, Decided on 25th June 1935, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Gurgaon, D/- 17th December 1934.

(a) Jurisdiction—Small Cause—Hissedars of village common entitled to share offerings in temple—Offerings at temple with many claimants farmed to highest bidder by Government—Thekedar was to give surety—Mortgage by co-sharer of his share—Thekedar refusing to pay amount of share to mortgagee—Suit by mortgagee against thekedar held cognizable by Small Cause Court—Art. 13 or Art. 11, Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, held did not apply.

The hissedars of a village common were entitled to a share in the offerings of a temple. The Government in order to avoid disputes among them had been farming the offerings to the highest bidder each year, with the consent of the co-sharers. The thekedar had to provide a surety. One of the co-sharers mortgaged his share. On refusal by the thekedar to pay the mortgagee the amount of the share mortgaged, the mortgagee brought a suit claiming a decree against the thekedar and his surety for the amount of the share:

Held: that the real contest was between the mortgagor and the mortgagee and the thekedar would get a valid discharge by making the payment to whichever person (whether mortgagor or mortgagee) was held by the Courts to be entitled to receive the offerings and that the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and did not fall within the purview of Art. 13 of Sch. 2 and therefore no second appeal lay: 1922 Lah 451; 84 P R 1892; 81 P R 1889 and 20 P R 1911, Rel. on; 74 P R 1886 and 28 Mad 202, Disting. [P 100 C 2; P 101 C 2]

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by Dhumi Mal and Zaharia Mal against Ganga Sahai, Jawahar Lal and Rughnath for recovery of Rs. 55 on account of the share of the plaintiffs in the offerings made to the Hindu temple of Mata Sitla. The material facts of the case for the purposes of this appeal may be shortly stated. There is a Hindu temple in village Gurgaon. The temple is situated on shamilat deh, and all hissedars of the village common are entitled to a share in the offerings. As there are a very large number of claimants to the offerings, the Government, in order to avoid disputes, has been farming the offerings to the highest bidder in each year with the consent of the co-sharers. The thekedar has to provide a surety. The allegations of the plaintiffs are that they as mortgagees of the share of Rughnath, defendant 3 are entitled to receive his share, that Ganga Sahai thekedar defendant 1 refuses to pay them this share and that, therefore, they are entitled to a decree against Ganga Sahai and his surety Jawahar Lal, defendant 2, for a sum of Rs. 55. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs had no right to receive the share of the mortgagor Rughnath, that in any case, their claim to receive the share of the mortgagor has been previously disallowed by a competent Court and that this decision operated as res judicata. The trial Court held that the finding in the previous suit was binding on both the parties and that this finding operated as res judicata, and on that basis dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge, who held that neither S. 11, Civil P. C., nor the principle of res judicata applied to the present case, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the present suit. He accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the trial Court for decision of the other issues. Against this order of remand, the defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court. A preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the respondents that no second appeal is competent in the present case. S. 102, Civil P. C., lays down that no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject matter of the original suit does not exceed Rs. 500. Under S. 15 (2), Small Cause Courts Act, all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs. 500 are cognizable by a Court of Small Causes subject to the exceptions specified in Sch. 2, to that Act. We have therefore to see whether the present suit falls within any of the exceptions contained in Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The learned counsel for the appellants submits that his case falls within Arts. 11 and 13 of Sch. 2, and that the present suit is a suit to enforce payment of other dues payable to a person by reason of his interest in immovable property or in a shrine or other religious institution.

Reliance is placed in this connexion on 74 P R 1886 (1) and 28 Mad 202 (2). These cases however appear to me to be distinguishable. In 74 P R 1886 (1), some of the co-sharers sued for their share of the profits on the ground that they were proprietors of certain land in the village and that the offerings of the temple were divisible amongst all the proprietors. That was a case between persons who were primarily entitled to a share in the offerings against a person who was primarily responsible to pay the cesses or dues. In 28 Mad 202 (2) the suit was brought by a member of a religious association to recover his share of the voluntary payments made to the association and it was held that the suit fell within the purview of Art. 13, Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. In neither of these cases was there a dispute between a mortgagor and a mortgagee. In the present suit it is admitted by defendants 1 and 2 that the mortgagor, Rughnath, defendant 3 is entitled to a share in the offerings, and they merely contest the position taken up by the plaintiffs to the effect that they as mortgagees are entitled to receive the share, and not the mortgagor. The real contest in the present case is therefore between a mortgagor and a mortgagee, and defendants 1 and 2 would get a valid discharge by making the payment to whichever person (whether the mortgagor or the mortgagee) is held by the Courts to be entitled to receive the offerings. As mentioned above therefore the real contest is between the mortgagor on one side and the mortgagee on the other. The present suit, in my opinion, does not fall within the purview of Art. 13, Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Reference may be made in this connexion to a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported as 3 Lah 369 (3). Where it was held that a suit by a person as manager of a temple for a share of the offerings and the produce of the temple land and for the price of a mare presented to the temple in the absence of any allegation in the plaint that the defendant acted dishonestly is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and does not fall under either Art. 13 or Art. 32, Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. Art. 13 of the Act only relates to plaints made against a person who is primarily liable to pay cesses or dues. To the same effect are 81 P R 1889 (4), 84 P R 1892 (5) and 20 P R 1911 (6). Art. 11, Sch. II of the Act was also referred to by the learned counsel for the appellants but that article has no applicability to the facts of the present case. I therefore hold that no second appeal lay in the present case.

1. Ude Ram v. Sanda, (1886) 74 P R 1886.

2. Bavadasan v. Narayana, (1905) 28 Mad 202.

It was next contended by the learned counsel for the appellants that this appeal may be treated as petition for revision. It was held by their Lordships of

Misc. First Appeal No. 1180 of 1934, Decided on 19th July 1934, from orders of Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, D/- 4th
April 1934.

(a) Appeal—Competency — Order appointing receiver ad interim is appealable.

The mere fact that an appointment of a receiver is made ad interim does not mean that the order is not an order under O. 40, R. 1, Civil P.C., and an appeal lies from it under O. 43, R. 1 (a) in the same manner as if the appointment had not been ad interim but final. [P 103 C 1]

(b) Receiver—Appointment of — Mere apprehension that defendant would wrongfully dispose of property does not justify order without further inquiry.

Mere existence of apprehension in the mind of the plaintiff that the defendant would wrongfully dispose of his property is not alone sufficient to justify an order for receivership without further inquiry as to the basis of these apprehensions and the appointment of a receiver merely by reason of such apprehension cannot be rendered just and convenient. [P 103 C 2]

(c) Receiver — Appointment of — Creditor having right against specific fund or estate is entitled to receiver on ground that he has special charge on debtor's property.

There is a distinction between the practice of appointing a receiver in the case of a general creditor and in the case of a creditor who has a right against a specific fund or estate. The latter class of creditors is entitled to a receiver on the ground that they have a special or equitable charge or lien upon the debtor's property, unless other circumstances exist which make the appointment unjust or inconvenient: 1922 Pat 318, Rel. on. [P 104 C 1]

(d) Receiver—Appointment of—Application for appointment of receiver—Suit not so patently framed in wrong manner as to make its success so problematical as to justify refusal to appoint receiver—Court should not refuse to make appointment.

Where the plaint itself shows that the suit is not likely to succeed or even the plaintiff has not excellent chance to succeed, it is a circumstance which would render it unjust and inconvenient to appoint a receiver. It is however one thing to argue that a suit is wrongly framed and quite another to say that it is wrongly valued. A wrong valuation is not so vital that it can never be remedied. Where therefore the suit is not so patently framed in a wrong manner as to make its success so problematical as to justify refusing a receivership order to a creditor whose case is that he is secured, the Court should not refuse to pass such an order. Kishen Dial and Badri Das (for Bharat Insurance Co.)—Respondent.

Judgment. — The Peoples Bank of Northern India Limited, has instituted a suit against Messrs. Harikishan Lal and Sons, Timber Merchants in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Lahore on 3rd April 1934. The suit was based upon an agreement alleged to have been made between the parties on 16th March 1931. This agreement sets forth that in consideration for advance made by the Bank to the defendant company, the latter pledged with the Bank the timber mentioned in certain lists annexed to the agreement as security and undertook to act as trustees for the Bank in respect of the said timber and that they are liable to account for it to the Bank: the document also recites that the borrowers undertook responsibility for the safety of the timber against theft, loss and destruction. Further, Cl. 8 of the document relied upon was as follows:

That at the end of 16th March 1934 the borrowers shall pay forthwith to the Bank the balance then outstanding and owing to the Bank on their account inclusive of interest , and in case of default the Bank shall have the right to take possession of the security after notice to the borrowers or demand the repayment of the loan. In case of taking possession the Bank shall be entitled to sell the security , and to apply the proceeds in the realization of loan, interest, costs etc. . . .

Suing on the basis of this document the Bank alleged that default had occurred after notice was given, and that they were entitled to pursue the remedy provided for in the foregoing clause. They asked by way of relief for (a), a decree for rendition of accounts in respect of the timber pledged with the Bank (b) a decree for the delivery of the timber and for the money for which the defendant firm may be held liable as a result of accounting and (c) in case possession of the timber be not delivered, a decree for the value thereof. On the same date on which the plaint was presented the plaintiff Bank moved the Court by application to appoint a receiver of the timber that was alleged to have been pledged to them and also for temporary injunction forbidding the defendant firm to alienate or intermeddle with the timber.

The Senior Subordinate Judge has passed an order on 4th April 1934 without issuing any notice to the defendant firm making an appointment of an ad interim receiver to take possession of the timber and nominating Lala Prakash Chander Mahajan as one receiver. A temporary injunction as prayed for was also issued. At the same time it was ordered that a notice should issue to the defendant firm on the question of a final decision of the matter. Against this order appointing an ad interim receiver the defendant firm has appealed to this Court. The appeal also complains against the appointment as receiver of Lala Guranditta Mal, which appointment was made by a subsequent order of the Senior Subordinate Judge dated 5th April 1924 in place of Lala Prakash Chander Mahajan, who had not consented to act.

For the plaintiff Bank Mr. Kishen Dyal urged here that an appeal does not lie, but I am of opinion that the mere fact that the appointment was made ad interim does not mean that the order was not an order under O. 40, R. 1 and an appeal will therefore lie under O. 43, R. 1 (s) in the same manner as if the appointment had been not ad interim, but final. The first ground upon which Mr. Nawal Kishore for the appellant firm has attacked the order under appeal is that the timber in question or at any rate a considerable quantity of it is and was at the time of the order in the possession of the Bharat Insurance Company and that the defendant firm has no present right to remove the Bharat Insurance Company from the possession or custody of the timber: see O. 40, R. 1, sub-R. (2). It is argued that before appointing a receiver further inquiry was necessary, as stringent action of this character is to be adopted with caution. Now the order under appeal does not purport to remove the Bharat Insurance Company from possession or custody of the timber and I understand that no such distinct order has been passed. I am of opinion that the order under appeal would not justify the removal of the Bharat Insurance Company from the possession of the timber, not because the said Company is a person whom the defendant firm has no present right to remove (this may or may not be the case and is a matter to be inquired into if the question arises) but because the Company can only be removed by a definite order of the Court made under O. 40, R. 1, sub-R. (b) and no such order is included in the order under appeal, nor, so I was informed at the Bar, has any such order been subsequently made. The question of the Bharat Insurance Company's right to possession or their removal from possession has not yet therefore been decided and the question whether an ad interim receiver should have been appointed must be decided without reference to the Bharat Insurance Company's alleged possession of some of the timber. If the receiver's appointment is confirmed, he will still have to get another order from the Court before he can remove the Bharat Insurance Company from possession.

It was next alleged that the plaintiff Bank were not justified in obtaining an order for receivership by stating that they apprehended a wrongful disposal of the timber on the part of the defendant firm. In dealing with this point I think that I should exclude from consideration events which are said to have occurred subsequent to the order under appeal and that I should merely pay regard to the material which the Judge had before him when he passed that order. On this point I think that the mere existence of such apprehensions in the minds of the Bank's representatives was not alone sufficient to justify the order for a receivership without further inquiry as to the basis of these apprehensions and if there were no other considerations in the case I would be disinclined to hold that the appointment of a receiver was rendered just and convenient merely by the existence of such apprehensions.

There was however before the Senior Subordinate Judge when he passed the order under appeal the agreement on which the plaintiff Bank was suing and prima facie this agreement read together with the averments in the plaint, supported the contention that the plaintiff Bank was not merely a general creditor of the defendant firm, but a creditor having a right against a specific security consisting of timber. The distinction between the practice of appointing a receiver in the case of a general creditor and in the case of a creditor who has a right against a specific fund or estate is well understood (see Woodroffe's Law Relating to Receivers, Edn. 4, pp. 138 to 140 and 61 I C 849 (1)). The latter class of creditor is entitled to a receiver on the ground that he has a special or equitable charge or lien upon the debtor's property.

Clause 8 of the agreement (quoted in extenso earlier in this judgment) was prima facie a good ground therefore upon which the Senior Subordinate Judge could order the appointment of a receiver and unless there were other circumstances before him which pointed to such a Court being unjust or inconvenient, I think that his discretion was rightly exercised.

It is contended that such a circumstance exists in the plaint itself and that the suit as framed is not likely to succeed owing to the character of the reliefs sought and the manner in which they have been valued for Court-fee. No doubt if the plaint itself were to show that the suit is not likely to succeed, or even that the plaintiff Bank had not an excellent chance to succeed, this would be a circumstance which would render it unjust and inconvenient to appoint a receiver. It is suggested that the plaintiff Bank cannot succeed on a suit for rendition of accounts, and that they have not sued or paid Court-fee upon a suit for recovery of the money alleged to have been loaned by them to the defendant firm. I do not want to prejudge any matter which may be disputed in the suit itself, but it seems an open question at least whether the plaintiff Bank could not refrain from suing for recovery of the money loaned and sue merely for delivery of the timber alleged to have been pledged to them, which they have certainly done. How far they can sue for rendition of accounts of the timber I will not decide, but one relief which they have sought is the delivery of the timber and if they should succeed in obtaining that relief the receivership would not have been in vain. It is of course one thing to argue that a suit is wrongly framed and quite another to say that it is wrongly valued. A wrong valuation is not so vital that it can never be remedied, and I do not think it can be said that the suit is so patently framed in a wrong manner that its success must be so problematical as to justify refusing a receivership order to a creditor whose case is that he is secured.

Similar considerations apply to the injunction order as to the order appointing a receiver and it is not necessary to cover the same ground twice.

The grievance of the defendant firm against the appointment of Lala Guranditta Mal is based inter-alia on the allegation that he is inimical to the defendant firm and that he carries on a rival timber business at Jhelum. A representation to this effect has also been made to the senior Subordinate Judge and is still awaiting decision. This matter calls for an early decision, but it is better that it should be decided by the senior Subordinate Judge, as the receiver is an officer of that Court and the matter is properly before that Court.

To sum up, my decisions are: (1) The order under appeal does not direct the removal of the Bharat Insurance Company from the possession or the custody of the timber, and unless or until a distinct order to that effect is made by the lower Court such removal is unjustified. (2) The appointment of a receiver was in the circumstances prima facie just and convenient and the order is upheld. This is without prejudice to the decision regarding a permanent appointment which decision must be expedited. (3) The question whether Lala Guranditta Mal should be replaced by another person as receiver is under the consideration of the lower Court, and it is directed that the decision on this matter be taken up without delay.

The costs of the hearing in this Court should be borne by the parties incurring them.

Second Appeal No. 1570 of 1932, Decided on 25th June 1935 from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 11th July 1932.

1. Pirthi Chand Lal v. Kalikanand Singh, 1922 Pat 318=61 I C 849=6 Pat L J 366.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100—Legal effect of proved or admitted facts is question of law.

Where the lower appellate Court has failed to properly appreciate the legal effect of certain proved or admitted facts, the question is one of law and therefore it is a good ground for a second appeal: 1930 P C 91, Foll. [P 106 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 90—Entry in school register—Register over 30 years old produced from proper custody—Genuineness is presumed—Person making entries not produced as witness is immaterial.

A school register was produced in evidence and reliance was placed on certain entries in the register. The person making the entries could not however be produced as a witness. The register was over 30 years old and was produced from proper custody:

Held: that a presumption of genuineness attaches to the register and the fact that the person responsible for the entries was not produced as a witness was immaterial. [P 107 C 1]

Achhru Ram—for Appellant.

Yashpal Gandhi and Iqbal Singh for Faqir Chand—for Respondents.

Sale, J.—The following pedigree-table will illustrate the facts in dispute in this second appeal.

SHER JANG

The parties in so far as they belong to the line of Sher Jang, the common ancestor, are Narial Rajputs of Amb in the Hoshiarpur district, but it is denied by the defendant-appellant that Shiv Ram and Parmeshari Das are the legitimate sons of Partap Singh. The suit was brought to challenge two alienations of landed property, both to Parmodh Chand, defendant 1. The first alienation was a bequest by Mt. Ganesh Devi widow of Parmeshri Das, the property in question being mutated in favour of Parmodh Chand in 1925 after Mt. Ganesh Devi's death. The second alienation is a gift by Mt. Sunder Devi, widow of Shiv Ram, in 1928. The plaintiffs claimed to be the collaterals of Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das, their case being that these two persons were the legitimate sons of Partap Singh by a second wife Mt. Jai Devi. The suit was contested by the alienee mainly on the ground that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das are not Rajputs, but the sons of Mt. Jai Devi, (admittedly a Sud woman) by her real husband Genda Sud, and thus not the legitimate sons of Partap Singh.

The trial Court found for the collaterals and decreed the claim and this decree was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge, Hoshiarpur. The sole question for determination is whether Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das are, as found by the lower Courts, the legitimate sons of Partap Singh. The evidence in this case is the same as that recited and discussed in the judgment by this Bench in Civil First Appeal No. 968 of 1933 of to-day's date, in which we have held, reversing the decision of the Senior Subordinate Judge, that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das are not the legitimate sons of Partap Singh. The parties to this second appeal are different, but it is unnecessary to deal with the evidence discussed in the other judgment except in so far as it is material for the decision of this second appeal. On behalf of the respondent, it is urged that the finding of the lower appellate Court, viz., that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das are the legitimate sons of Partap Singh, is a question of fact binding on this Court and that this second appeal is not therefore competent.

Briefly Mr. Achhru Ram for the appellant contends that a second appeal lies for three reasons: (1) that the District Judge has misconceived the legal effect of the entries in the School register dated 2nd January 1873, (2) that the District Judge has omitted to consider the oral evidence relating to the alleged death of Genda in 1879 and (3) that the District Judge has misunderstood and drawn wrong inference from the admission of Narain Singh plaintiff No. 1 and of Narindar Singh, father of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, in the plaint of the suit which they brought in 1893. There is in my opinion force in Mr. Achhru Ram's contention. I would hold that as will appear from a discussion of the material evidence a second appeal lies on the ground that the District Judge has not properly appreciated the legal effect of certain proved or admitted facts. This, as was pointed out in 11 Lah 199 (1), is a question of law and therefore a good ground for a second appeal.

In considering the evidence, the District Judge was largely influenced by two admissions stated to have been made before him in the course of arguments: (1) that there was no obstacle to the marriage of a Sud woman (Mt. Jai Devi) to a Rajput (Partap Singh) and (2) that a marriage between them must be presumed from long cohabitation. No such admissions have been made before us. Indeed Mr. Achhru Ram for the appellant has repudiated these admissions and no attempt has been made to rely on them in this Court. It may be, (though the point is not before us) that there is no obstacle to the marriage of a Sud woman to a Rajput in these enlightened days, but the marriage in question, if it occurred at all, must have occurred about the year 1860, and there can be little doubt that in those days such a marriage would not have been approved. Indeed, the District Judge in another place in this judgment has observed that:

It is not surprising that Mt. Ganesh Devi (widow of Parmeshri Das) and Mt. Jai Devi (the Sud companion of Partap Singh) were both cremated in the cremation ground intended for Suds (instead of in the place where Rajputs would be cremated) in view of the well-known orthodoxy of Rajputs.

Again, he has observed that:

Orthodox Rajputs would not wish to recognize as full Rajputs the status of Parmeshri Das and Shiv Ram, because they were borne of a Sud woman.

It is apparent therefore that the District Judge himself felt doubts on the point whether the Rajput brotherhood in 1860 would have approved of the marriage of Pratap Singh to a Sud woman.

The question of the alleged presumption of marriage said to arise from admitted cohabitation between Pratap Singh and Mt. Jai Devi has been fully discussed in our judgment in Civil Appeal No. 968 of 1933 in which it has been pointed out that in the circumstances of the present case, no such presumption can arise. It is common ground that Mt. Jai Devi, the mother of Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das was a Sud woman. Pratap Singh had an admitted Rajput wife, who was the mother of Udham Singh. There is un rebutted evidence on the record which has been accepted by the District Judge himself that Shiv Ram was born in 1861 and Parmeshri Das in 1863. There is also un rebutted evidence that Genda, said by the respondents to be the Sud husband of Mt. Jai Devi, died in 1879. Consequently, any marriage between Partap Singh and Mt. Jai Devi before 1879 would be out of the question. There seems no reason to reject the oral evidence that Genda died in 1879, corroborated as it is by the evidence of the Pandas from Hardwar, which shows that up to 1879 Partap Singh had only one recognized son Udham Singh and that it was only after Genda's death in 1879 that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das were recognized as his sons. There is similar evidence that prior to this date, Parmeshri Das and Shiv Ram were reported as the sons of Genda Sud.

1. Wali Mahomed v. Mahomed Bakhsh, 1930 P C 91=122 I C 316=11 Lah 199=57 I A 86 (P O).

But the conclusive evidence, in my opinion, which the District Judge has failed to appreciate, is provided by the school register of 1873 and the family agreements of 1878 and 1880. The District Judge has rejected entries in the school register on the ground that the person responsible for these entries was not produced as a witness. It was however obviously impossible to produce the person responsible for these entries. The document is more than 30 years old and was produced from proper custody by D. W. 9, a teacher in the Government College at Hoshiarpur, the successor of the old Municipal Board School, which has as such, ceased to exist. A presumption of genuineness attaches to this register and the fact, that the District Judge has accepted as an undisputed fact that Shiv Ram was born in 1861 and Parmeshri Das was born in 1863, itself indicates that the entries in the register are genuine. These entries describe Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das as the sons of Genda Mal Sud and are therefore good contemporary evidence that they were not the sons of Partap Singh. Again, the District Judge has failed to appreciate the proper effect of the agreements of 1878 and 1880 which recite that though Parmeshri Das and Shiv Ram were the sons of a Sud woman, they were to be held entitled to succeed as if they were the sons of Partap Singh's legitimate wife. The District Judge has rejected these documents "as of no help" to the defendant on the ground of the presumption (accepted throughout his judgment) of a marriage between Partap Singh and Mt. Jai Devi. I have shown however that no such presumption of marriage exists. Further, the District Judge says in his judgment that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das were admitted in these agreements to be the sons of Partap Singh. This is a misdescription. They were described as the sons of Mt. Jai Devi, who is the keep of Partap Singh, but in order to enable them to succeed to the family property on the death of Partap Singh, their mother was to be deemed to be the wife of Partap Singh, so that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das should succeed equally with Udham Singh. This is very different from admission that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das were the sons of Partap Singh.

Again the District Judge has failed, in my opinion, to draw proper inferences from the plaint of the suit instituted by Narain Singh plaintiff in 1893. This suit was brought by Narain Singh plaintiff 1 and Narindar Singh, father of plaintiffs 2 and 3, to challenge the act of Udham Singh in allowing one-half of the property of Partap Singh to be mutated in favour of Shiv Ram and on his death, in the name of his widow. The mutation was obviously the result of the agreements of 1878 and 1880 to which reference has already been made. The District Judge comes to the conclusion that because the suit was dropped and because it was not clearly alleged in the plaint that Shiv Ram was not the son of Partap Singh, Shiv Ram was by implication admitted to be the son of Partap Singh. Actually however it is specifically stated that Partap Singh left only one son Udham Singh and though it is not definitely alleged that Shiv Ram was not the son of Partap Singh, the allegations made in the plaint are consistent only with the hypothesis that the plaintiffs then considered that Shiv Ram was not the son of Partap Singh. The reason why the suit was dropped was because the suspected pregnancy of Shiv Ram's widow did not materialize with the result that there would be no issue and the suit would have been infructuous. This plaint, in my opinion, fully confirms the other contemporary documentary evidence in showing that whatever may be the view of Narain Singh and the other plaintiffs now, they did not regard Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das as the sons of Partap Singh 30 years ago.

For these reasons, I would hold that it is not proved that Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das were the sons of Partap Singh. It follows therefore that the plaintiffs are not the collaterals of Shiv Ram and Parmeshri Das and have therefore no right to impugn the alienations made by their widows. I would therefore accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1288 of 1932, Decided on 23rd July 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 5th July 1932.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Ancestral Property—Historical note showing village founded by P—P's sons dividing village—People leaving village because of famine—Returning years afterwards—Dividing lands into hals, one being land in suit—Inference that original proprietors returned and not descendants held not legitimate—Hence land not established as ancestral.

A historical note indicated that the village in which the disputed land was situate was founded by B. After him his sons divided the village. The proprietors and the people of the village were, however, forced to leave it on account of famine but some of them returned to the village many years afterwards. They divided the land in the village into hals and one of the divisions was the land in dispute:

Held: that it could not be legitimately inferred that it was the original proprietors who returned, and not their descendants. Hence it had not been established that the land was ancestral: 1930 Lah 633, Ref. P 108 C 2 Custom (Punjab)—Ludhiana District—Hindu Jats—Gift to daughters—Collaterals beyond 4th degree cannot challenge gift.

Among the Hindu Jats of Ludhiana District a gift by the father, of any part of his property, to his daughters cannot be challenged by collaterals beyond the 4th degree. [P 109 C 1]

Jhanda Singh—for Appellants.Addison, J.—The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the gift by defendant 1, Naraina, to his daughters, defendants 2 and 3, was null and void as against them and should not affect their reversionary rights after the donor's death. The trial Court held the land not to be ancestral and dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge held the land to be ancestral and found that the plaintiffs, who were reversioners within five degrees, could contest the alienation. He accordingly accepted the appeal and decreed the suit. He however granted the defendants a certificate under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, to the effect that a question of custom was involved as to whether a gift of ancestral property by a sonless proprietor to his married daughters in the presence of collaterals of the 5th degree was valid or not; and the defendants on this certificate have preferred this second appeal.

It was first argued that the finding, that the land was ancestral was not supported by evidence and that the conclusion was merely a conjecture of the District Judge and not a proper inference from the facts established. The District Judge has relied upon the historical note at the bottom of the pedigree table of the village. According to it, the village was founded three hundred years before the first settlement by Phirna in the time of the Moghals when the Rajputs of Raikot ruled over that territory. Phirna came to graze cattle in these parts and settled there. His two sons, Sawla and Rukkan, divided the land into two villages. Maharaja Ranjit Singh granted a Jagir of the land to Bhai Kaithalwala, but many people were famine-stricken and left the village. The few, who remained, cultivated what they could. This was before Bhai Kaithalwala got the jagir. In his time many of the proprietors returned and divided the land into fifteen hals irrespective of ancestral shares, five patties being formed, one of them being patti Bhola. On this the District Judge held that it was established that the original proprietors returned and on the authority of 1930 Lah 633 (1) found that the land did not lose its ancestral character when the original proprietors returned and re-occupied it. On this historical note, however, it cannot be legitimately inferred that it was the original proprietors who returned, and not their descendants. The finding of the District Judge on this question, therefore, is not, in our opinion, based on evidence but on conjecture, and we hold that it has not been established that the land is ancestral. We might add that the land at the first settlement was held by Arjan, who was three degrees removed from the common ancestor of the parties. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but we shall also proceed to dispose of the question of custom.

According to question 87 of Mr. Dunnett's Customary Law prepared in 1911, all Hindu Jats said that to enable a father to make a gift of any part of his property to his daughters, he must obtain the consent of the heirs, but only collaterals related through the great-grand-father could object to such a gift. In the present case, the plaintiffs are related through the great-great-grand-father, that is, in the 5th degree instead of the 4th degree. They are not, therefore, entitled, according to this reply, to object to the gift.

A similar reply was given in Mr. Gordon Walker's Customary Law of the District published in 1885. The question number is the same, namely, 87. It is there stated that as to immovable property (or rather land), most tribes say that to enable the proprietor to make a gift of any part of it to the relations mentioned in the question, he must obtain the consent of the heirs—the lineal male descendants, or, in default of them the collaterals related through the great-grandfather.

The two Customary Laws of the District, therefore, are against the plaintiffs. But the District Judge has relied upon a riwaj-i-am prepared for pargana Ghungrana in Mr. Gordon Walker's settlement operations. This village is in that pargana. A pargana was in those days a sub-division of a tahsil. According to the reply to question 87 in it, the consent of all collaterals was said to be necessary in the case of such a gift. There is no other evidence of importance except that there is a judicial decision against the plaintiffs, but it was not in this locality though the land was situated in the same district. The District Judge has been impressed by the fact that married daughters have no right of succession, and he argues from this that collaterals being heirs, however distant, should logically have the right to contest a gift to married daughters. Custom is, however, not logical, and as the two Customary Laws of the district are against the plaintiffs and there is no instance in favour of the plaintiffs, we must hold that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they have the right to challenge the gift as they are only related in the fifth and not the fourth degree.

For both the reasons given, we accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

(a) Release—Admissibility—Property relinquished valued at more than Rs. 100—Deed unless properly stamped and registered is inadmissible in evidence.

Where a document is produced not for any collateral purpose but for the purpose of proving the actual transfer or relinquishment of certain rights, and the property which is the subject-matter of relinquishment is valued at more than Rs. 100 the document ought to be properly stamped and registered, otherwise it is inadmissible in evidence : 1919 P C 44, Disting.

(b) Easement—One party executing deed of relinquishment of certain rights over property—Parties not concerned with any right of easement that may accrue in future.

In a partition between G and N, N executed a document which allowed G to build his house in any way he liked. Many years later, successor of N claimed a right of easement against G. It was contended that the deed executed by N was a bar to such claim :

Held : that the document merely empowers G to build his house in any manner he thought fit. It certainly did not amount to a relinquishment of the right of easement which would accrue to N or his successors-in-title after the prescribed period of 20 years had expired. The parties were not dealing with hypothetical rights which were to materialise in future, if at all, and the document executed by N was no bar to a right acquired later.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal which arises out of a suit for a permanent injunction asking the Court to restrain the defendants from obstructing the plaintiff's door A and the windows B and C in the southern wall of her house and also for a mandatory injunction directing the defendants to remove such structures as they have already put up and which have closed the plaintiff's door and windows. Both the Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

Rahim Bakhsh was the common ancestor of the parties. He died some time in May 1906 leaving him surviving three sons, Sher Mohammad (defendant 1), Ghulam Mohammad (defendant 2) and Nazar Mohammad, the husband of Mt. Mahbub Begum, plaintiff. On the death of Rahim Bakhsh a partition was effected between his three sons. As a result of the partition Nazar Mohammad got a certain share towards the north of the house in question. The rest of the house fell to the shares of his two brothers, Ghulam Mohammad and Sher Mohammad, in this way that Ghulam Mohammad received an open site to the south of the plaintiff's share and Sher Mohammad got the rest of the house. Nazar Mohammad died some time in 1921. The relations between Ghulam Mohammad, Sher Mohammad and Mt. Mahbub Begum, the widow of Nazar Mohammad, who had died childless, remained cordial for some time after the death of Nazar Mohammad and in fact on 20th January 1922 Sher Mohammad and Ghulam Mohammad combined in releasing their share under the Mahomedan law in the property of their deceased brother, Nazar Mohammad, in favour of Mt. Mahbub Begum. These relations somehow became strained afterwards and in 1927 a suit was brought by Mt. Hayat Bibi, the widow of Rahim Bakhsh, and the mother of Sher Mohammad, Ghulam Mohammad and Nazar Mohammad against Mt. Mahbub Begum in which Mt. Hayat Bibi claimed her share under the Mahomedan law in the property of her deceased husband Rahim Bakhsh. This suit was dismissed. This suit has no direct bearing upon the present controversy. I have mentioned it merely to show that the relations about this time between Mt. Mahbub Begum and the rest of the family were not friendly and the suit brought by Mt. Hayat Bibi was the outcome of the differences which arose between the parties.

In the northern wall of the portion of the house which fell to the share of the plaintiff, there are two windows and a door. Ghulam Mohammad and Sher Mohammad put up wooden planks on the open space which had been allotted to Ghulam Mohammad in the partition of 1907 with the result that the light and air which the plaintiff had been receiving through the door and the two windows were obstructed. The plaintiff then brought the present suit claiming a right of easement of light and air through the two windows and the door and asking for the injunction already mentioned. A number of defences were raised, but substantially the plea was taken that the partition took place in 1919 between the parties and therefore the period of 20 years had not yet been completed, and therefore no prescriptive right of easement had been acquired by the plaintiff. It was also pleaded that the door and windows always remained closed and, therefore, the plaintiff never enjoyed any light and air through them. The right of privacy was also asserted and it was also said that the plaintiff had sufficient light and air in spite of the alleged obstruction. Both the Courts below held unanimously that there was a partition, as alleged by the plaintiff, in the year 1907, and that the door and windows did not remain closed as pleaded by the defendants, but had been in use, and light and air had been passing into the plaintiff's house through them. The trial Court, however, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the finding that, although the passage of light and air was interfered with, the comfort of the house had not materially diminished and that the door and windows in the plaintiff's house interfered with the defendants' right of privacy. The plaintiff went up in appeal. The lower appellate Court has held that obstruction had been caused by the defendants recently and that, if it were to continue the house would be rendered uninhabitable. After recording these findings the lower appellate Court, however, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that, in view of the stipulations contained in Ex. D-1, which was accepted by Nazar Mohammed, the husband and predecessor-in-title of Mt. Mahbub Begum, Ghulam Mohammad was entitled to build a house in any way he liked and no one had any concern with it.

The plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal and the decision of the lower appellate Court being in favour of the plaintiff on the major questions of the obstructions being recent and the house of the plaintiff having been rendered unfit for habitancy on account of these obstructions, the only points which were pressed in argument by the counsel for the plaintiff-appellant were that Ex. D-1 was not admissible in evidence for the want of registration and that, on a proper interpretation of this document, the plea raised by the defendants on the strength of Ex. D-1 was not entertain-able and the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The deed of partition (Ex. D-1) is engrossed on a one rupee stamp paper and is not registered. The executant of this document is Nazar Mohammad only and it does not purport to have been executed by the other two brothers. Nazar Mohammad, however, acknowledges the shares which had been allotted to himself and his two brothers and refers to certain money compensation, etc. which had to be paid by some of the parties for the purpose of equalizing their shares. This part of the document was executed on 27th January 1907 and bears the signatures of Nazar Mohammad. The document is a very crude one on the face of it. A further writing appears on this very document which bears date 10th March 1907. After referring to the shares which had been allotted to Ghulam Mohammad in the house in question and to certain other matters, with which we are not concerned, the writing concludes with the words: "Ghulam Mohammad jis tareh se chahe apna makan bana le ve. Is se kisi ka taalug nahin hoga". (Ghulam Mohammad may build his house in any way he likes. No one will have any concern with it).

In the prolix and rambling written statement, which was filed in the trial Court by the defendants, there is a reference to the admissions made by Nazar Mohammad and reliance is placed upon them in order to meet the case set up by the plaintiff for an injunction. No issue however was framed and the Judge of the trial Court does not seem to have looked at this aspect of the case. The learned District Judge however for the first time referred to this document, and relying upon it decided the case against the plaintiff. Counsel for the respondents has admitted that the value of the property covered by this deed of relinquishment is more than Rs. 100. Mr. Barkat Ali, counsel for the appellant, has argued that the document was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and that, in any event, the language of the document, as it stands, does not help the plaintiff-appellant. The learned Judge, with 43 Mad 244 (1) apparently in his mind, has tried to get over the difficulty as regards stamp and registration by observing that Ex. D-1 is admissible to show that the plaintiff's husband gave up all his rights in the house, vacant space, passage etc., and also stipulated that Ghulam Mohammad could build the house in three-fourths of the sehn which fell to his share in any way he desired. Reliance is thus placed upon the addendum dated 10th March 1907, to the document in order to show that Nazar Mohammad had relinquished all his claim.

This line of reasoning does not appeal to me. In 43 Mad 244 (1) it was held that though a gift was invalid for want of registration and the recitals in certain petitions could not be used as evidence of gift, such recitals may be referred to as explaining the nature and character of possession of the alleged donee, the owner of the land. The ruling therefore does not help the defendants. In the present case reliance is not placed on the addendum, dated 10th March 1907 for any collateral purpose, but for the purpose of proving the actual transfer or relinquishment of certain rights on the part of Nazar Mohammad. In my opinion therefore, in view of the admission of the respondents' counsel that the property which was the subject-matter of relinquishment was valued at more than Rs. 100, the document ought to have been properly stamped and registered and, as it stands, it is inadmissible in evidence.

But assuming for the sake of argument that the document did not require the requisite fee of a deed of relinquishment and registration, the language of the document does not lend support to the defendants' contention. At that time the partition had very recently taken place. No right of easement had been acquired by anybody. Therefore the parties could not possibly have been thinking of any such right. It merely empowers Ghulam Mohammad to build his house in any manner he thought fit. It certainly did not amount to a relinquishment of the right of easement which would accrue to Nazar Mohammad or his successors-in-title after the prescribed period of twenty years had expired. The parties were not dealing with hypothetical rights which were to materialize in future, if at all. If certain rights of future easement were intended to be restricted or cancelled by the parties nothing would have been easier than to make it clear by a specific reference to them. The construction that the Court below has put on this document is, in my judgment, too far-fetched and is not borne out by the plain meaning of the text. I therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the two Courts below and grant the plaintiff a mandatory injunction in the terms laid down at the conclusion of the judgment delivered by Tek Chand, J., in 13 Lah 806 (2) at p. (816), namely that the defendants are directed to so construct their building as to leave forty-five degrees of unobstructed light to enter through the door and the two windows on the ground floor in the plaintiff's house. Mr. Barkat Ali who himself cited this case in support of his contention has agreed to this form of the injunction.

Some cross-objections were filed by the respondents. They have not been pressed and are therefore dismissed. The plaintiff shall have her costs throughout.

Pritam Singh—Defendant—Appellant.

Sarjit Singh—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 1517 of 1931, Decided on 7th November 1934.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation of ancestral property to pay off mortgage effected to pay previous old creditors is for necessity.

An alienation of ancestral property effected to pay a mortgage effected to pay off a previous old creditor is one for necessity. [P 113 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Small sum of Rs. 50 raised to purchase cow held for necessity and no enquiry by alienee held needed.

Where a small sum of Rs. 50 was raised by mortgage for the purpose of purchasing a cow and the alienor was not in good health and required milk:

Held: that the sum raised was so small and the purpose for which it was acquired was so ordinary that no enquiry was required by the alienee and hence it was for necessity.

(c) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation for discharging decretal debt—Outsider alienee is not bound to make further enquiry, unless his suspicions are likely to be aroused or he has actual knowledge of bad faith of decretal transaction.

Where an alienee, who is an outsider, finds that the alienor's debt is a decretal debt, he need not make any further enquiry, and the reversioners will not be allowed to go behind the decree. This rule, is not applicable where it is clear that the alienee's suspicions should have been aroused by the surrounding circumstances,

(d) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Suit filed by alienor dismissed with costs—Alienation to pay such costs is one for necessity.

Where a suit by the alienor is dismissed with costs, he is legally liable to pay the costs and as such an alienation to pay such costs is one for necessity.

(e) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Antecedent debts—Alienor man of loose character—Initial onus lies on alienee to show that debts are due—If he discharges this, onus shifts to opposite party to show that alienee made no proper enquiries—Enquiry should be with regard to existence of debt and also as to their nature.

If the alienor is a man of loose character, the initial onus lies on the outsider alienee to show that the debts were due, and when he has discharged that onus, the turn of the opposite parties then comes to show that the alienee made no proper enquiry or that if he made one, he must have learnt of the real nature of the debts. The enquiry which should be made by alienee should refer not only to the existence of the debts but include also an enquiry as to their nature if those who challenge the alienation can show that the result of the first enquiry should have raised doubts in the mind of an ordinarily prudent man as to the morality of reasonableness of the debts: 1920 Lah 279, Poll.

(f) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Alienor merely keeping mistress but not guilty of reckless extravagance or wanton waste—If alienee pays off debts which are due to third parties, persons challenging alienation should prove that those debts are tainted with immorality.

Where the alienor is living with a mistress, and careless of his own and other people's money but is not guilty of reckless extravagance or wanton waste or trying to injure the estate out of spite, it is not enough for the person challenging the alienation in such a case to show that the alienor is generally a man of bad character. If the alienee pays off debts which are really due to third parties it is for such person to prove that those debts are in each case tainted with immorality.

Asa Ram for J. N. Aggarwal and J. N. Aggarwal—for Appellant.

Tek Chand—for Respondent.

Skemp, J.—One Sarjit Singh, a minor, sued through his mother for possession of land which had been alienated by his deceased uncle Nathu on the ground that the alienations were made without consideration and necessity. There were eight alienations in all and the Senior Subordinate Judge disposed of the suit as far as concerned four of the alienations on a finding that the land alienated was not ancestral. He found that three other alienations were for necessity and that the last and most important in favour of Sodhi Pritam Singh was mainly for necessity. One-seventh of the purchase price was not for necessity, but he upheld this sale also on the ground that it was only a small fraction of the whole. He therefore dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge concurred with the findings as to the non-ancestral character of the land alienated in four cases. He also dismissed the appeal qua the other three minor alienations finding that they were for necessity. As to the alienation in favour of Pritam Singh he found that only two items of the consideration for Rs. 500 and Rs. 120 respectively were for consideration and granted the plaintiff a decree for possession of the land sold to Pritam Singh on payment of Rs. 620. Both parties lodged second appeals in this Court. The plaintiff sought an unqualified declaration that the eight alienations were void; Pritam Singh desires that his sale be upheld in toto.

The plaintiff's appeal is entirely devoid of force or merits. It was given up in respect of the four alienations of land held to be non-ancestral. As to the other three items the first is a mortgage for Rs. 610 effected in 1923 to pay off a previous old creditor whose bonds for debts reciting necessary purposes were taken in the year 1919 and 1920. These were old debts in favour of previous creditors and I agree with the learned District Judge that they must be held to be for necessity.

The next alienation impeached is a mortgage for Rs. 760 effected in 1927. Rs. 436 were utilised to pay off previous mortgages of 1922 and 1923 which had been effected in favour of outsiders. The balance of Rs. 288-3-0 was required to meet the claims of Jagirdars. Nathu was lambardar of his village and he had spent land revenue including the Jagir money due to these persons. It was clearly a necessity that he should pay them off otherwise he would have been liable to imprisonment. Item 3 is a mortgage of Rs. 50 to buy a cow in 1927. I agree with both the lower Courts, who held that the sum raised was so small and the purpose for which it was acquired was so ordinary that no enquiry was required especially as Nathu was not in good health and required milk. The plaintiff Sarjit Singh also attacked the two items found for necessity in the principal transaction.

These are Rs. 500 for payment to the present plaintiff himself and Rs. 120 due on a bond for money raised for the present plaintiff's marriage. Both these items have been rightly held to be for necessity. The plaintiff's appeal is dismissed with costs. I turn now to the appeal of the vendee Pritam Singh. The consideration for the sale in his favour, which is dated 25th August 1927, consisted of the following items:

1. Rs. 600 left with the vendee for payment to Sarwan Singh, mortgagee on a mortgage of 1920.
2. „ 500 left with the vendee for payment to Sarjit Singh, plaintiff, nephew of Nathu deceased.
3. „ 820 left with the vendee for payment to Maghi.
4. „ 1,000 paid by vendee to Munshi Ram creditor on account of two bonds, dated 24th March 1925 and 18th February 1925.
5. „ 120 set off against a bond, dated 17th June 1926 executed by Nathu in favour of the vendee.
6. „ 460 to be received before Sub-Registrar for payment to creditors.
7. „ 200 left with the vendee for payment to Baggu, a decree-holder.

Rs. 3,700

I have already dealt with items 2 and 5. Pritam Singh's counsel gave up the appeal about item 6, concerning which there is only oral evidence. As to item 7, the learned District Judge wrote:

The last item is one of Rs. 157 paid to one Baggu, who held a decree for the costs of a suit brought against him by Nathu, which was dismissed. The general rule that ancestral land may be charged in order to discharge an outstanding decree must be read subject to the proviso that the decree was for a necessary or at least unobjectionable debt (see the explanation to para. 63 (e), of Rattigan's Digest). In this case it appears that Nathu brought a suit against Baggu for defamation which was dismissed. The costs which he was required to pay in consequence of having brought this suit can hardly be called a necessary or unobjectionable debt.

This view of the law is erroneous. Rattigan's Digest, para. 63 (e) lays down the discharge of outstanding decrees as a necessary purpose. The Explanation states:

Decrees obtained on razinamas are not prima facie proof that they were obtained for money advanced for family purposes. This must be read subject to the proviso that the decrees were for necessary or unobjectionable debts. Where an alienee, who is an outsider, finds that the alienor's debt is a decretal debt, he need not make any further enquiry, and the reversioners will not be allowed to go behind the decree. This rule is however not applicable where it is clear that the alienee's suspicions should have been aroused by the surrounding circumstances, or where it is proved that he actually had knowledge of the bad faith of the decretal transaction.

This is a correct statement of the law. The suit, as documents on the record show, was actually brought by Nathu against Baggu for one thousand rupees as damages for breach of agreement. It was dismissed with costs in both Courts, the cost amounting to Rs. 157-8-0. Assuming that the District Judge made a finding of fact that it was a suit for defamation, by which finding we are bound, even so, the costs were not incurred by Nathu as an act of wanton waste or reckless extravagance or to injure the interests of the reversioners. He was legally liable to pay the costs or he might have been sent to prison or his land attached in execution of the decree. This item is for necessity to the extent of Rs. 157-8-0. As to the other three items the District Judge found that Nathu was a man of loose and extravagant character whose creditors should have been on guard in dealing with him. He based his finding on the following facts: that he was keeping a jogi woman, who was connected with his extravagance, that he misappropriated land revenue and Jagir money in his charge as lambardar and also that he effected alienations amounting to nearly Rs. 6,000 in a period of seven years. Sarjit Singh's counsel said that he was given to drink and drugs, but the learned District Judge has said nothing about this. (After dealing with the items of advances made to Ram Kishen, brother of his mistress, and Rs. 820 due to Maghi, mortgage, the judgment proceeded.) The item of a thousand rupees in favour of Munshi Ram consists of two bonds: D. 21 for Rs. 500, dated 24th March 1925, and the D. 22 for Rs. 200, dated 18th February 1925, together with interest. D. 21 is the bond for Rs. 500 already excluded; the other bond was in favour of a third party and, it should be allowed. The amount due on this bond together with interest comes to Rs. 286. The leading case on debts due to previous creditors by an alienor whose character has been attacked is 1 Lah 472 (1). If the alienor is a man of loose character, has discharged that onus, the turn of the opposite party then comes to show that the alienee made no proper enquiry or that if he made one, he must have learnt of the real nature of the debts. (LeRossignol, J., p. 479).

The enquiry which should be made by the alienee should refer not only to the existence of the debts :

But include also an enquiry as to their nature if those who challenge the alienation can show that the result of the first enquiry should have raised doubts in the mind of an ordinarily prudent man as to the morality or reasonableness of the debts. (p. 480).

In the present case Nathu was living with a mistress, and careless of his own and other people's money. On the other hand, it has not been shown that he was guilty of reckless extravagance or wanton waste or was trying to injure the estate out of spite for his nephew. It is not enough for the plaintiff in such a case to show that the alienor is generally a man of bad character. If the alienee pays off debts which are really due to third parties it is for the plaintiff to prove that those debts were in each case tainted with immorality. I think the plaintiff has shown that the two advances of Rs. 500 to Ram Kishan were tainted with immorality, but he has not shown that any of the other previous debts were so tainted. That is the principle on which these cases ought to be decided. The net result is that I would find Rs. 1,863-8-0 out of the total consideration of Rs. 3,700 out of Sodhi Pritam Singh's sale to be for necessary purposes. I would modify the decree granted by the learned District Judge accordingly. The plaintiff is to get a decree in this Court that he is entitled to possession of the property alienated to Sodhi Pritam Singh on payment of Rs. 1,863-8-0. The parties are left to bear their own costs in this appeal.

Second Appeal No. 1147 of 1933, Decided on 8th June 1934, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 15th May 1933.

(a) Evidence — Recitals—Recital in document between third parties is altogether irrelevant.

1. Jhandu v. Niamat Khan, 1920 Lah 279=54 I C 842=1 Lah 472.

A document between strangers to the suit in which mention is made of one of the parties or their predecessors as holding the land in dispute lying on the boundaries of lands belonging to the executant of the document is not relevant to prove title to the land in dispute: 1925 Cal 1034; 1926 Cal 479 and 224 P L R 1913, Foll. [P 115 C 1, 2]

(b) Evidence—Relevancy — Omission to object to admission of irrelevant evidence does not make it relevant.

There is a distinction between the relevancy and admissibility of a document. Evidence which is not relevant under provisions of the Evidence Act cannot be made relevant because it is led without objection. If a document is inadmissible on account of a defect which could be cured by the person relying on it if an objection had been taken at the proper time, no objection as to its admissibility can be allowed at a later stage. But the omission to object to the admission of irrelevant evidence cannot possibly make it relevant: 19 All 76, Rel. on.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs, who are the proprietors of the abadi of Mauza Urmur in the Hoshiarpur district, sued for possession of a house which was then occupied by one Nanak Chand, on the allegation that it had really reverted to them on the death of the last occupant Bhana without leaving any heirs. The defendant contended that Bhana never occupied the house. In the alternative, he relied on a will by Bhana in his favour. The lower appellate Court held that Bhana did occupy the house and that the execution of the will relied on by the defendant was not satisfactorily proved. On these findings, the plaintiffs' claim was decreed. The question of the competency of Bhana to make a will was not gone into. Nanak Chand has filed a further appeal to this Court. The finding that Bhana did occupy the house in suit is mainly based on a recital in a mortgage deed executed by him in favour of one Munshi in respect of a contiguous house showing the house in question to be the northern boundary thereof and to be the property of the mortgagor. It is well established that a recital in a document between third parties is altogether irrelevant. Bhana was admittedly dead at the time of the suit and his admission in the mortgage deed above could not be proved under S. 32, Evidence Act. In 86 I C 734 (1) it was held that a document between strangers to the suit in which mention is made of one of the parties or their predecessors as holding the land in dispute lying on the boundaries of lands belonging to the executant of the document is not relevant to prove title to the land in dispute. The same view was taken in 91 I C 688 (2) and 224 P L R 1913 (3). The learned counsel for the respondents urged that the objection to the admissibility of the document not having been taken in the trial Court could not be taken at this stage. This argument overlooks the distinction between relevancy and admissibility. Evidence which is not relevant under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act cannot be made relevant because it has been led without objection. If a document is inadmissible on account of a defect which could be cured by the person relying on it if an objection had been taken at the proper time, it is obvious that no objection as to its admissibility should be allowed at a later stage. The omission to object to the admission of irrelevant evidence cannot possibly make it relevant. In 19 All 76 (4), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an admission by a party could not be used as evidence in the plaintiff's favour and that an erroneous omission to object to the admission of such testimony did not make it available as a ground of judgment. I am therefore of opinion that the finding of the lower appellate Court that Bhana occupied the house in suit is vitiated because it is mainly based on irrelevant evidence.

The finding in regard to the execution of the will is also vitiated by the failure of the lower appellate Court to consider that it was a registered document and that one of the plaintiff's own witnesses had deposed that Bhana admitted its execution at the time of registration. If the execution of the will is proved, it will be necessary to give a finding as to whether Bhana was competent to make the will or not. I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the case to it for a fresh decision in the light of the above remarks. Costs to follow the event.

Sale, J.—This first appeal arises out of a dispute between the two brothers Sundar Das and Bishan Das in their capacity as representatives of their deceased father Jowahar Mal, a judgment-debtor, against whom Hari Chand had applied as decree-holder to execute a decree in a suit for possession by partition of certain property. The following pedigree table will illustrate the material facts of this case:

On 9th July 1932 Hari Chand sued for possession by partition of certain property left by Hardit Mal deceased impleading as defendants Jowahar Mal and Sant Ram. On 19th October 1932, Sundar

Das and Bishan Das, the sons of Jowahar Mal, purporting to act as agents of Jowahar Mal admitted the claim, but Sant Ram, the other defendant, objected to this plea on the ground that Jowahar Mal was of unsound mind. Thereupon Hari Chand, the plaintiff, applied for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for Jowahar Mal. Sundar Das, son of Jowahar mal, was at first appointed, but was removed; and later the other son Bishan Das was appointed by the Court on 20th November 1932 guardian ad litem for Jowahar Mal. On 8th January 1934 a preliminary decree for partition was passed on a compromise between the parties, followed by a final decree on 26th February 1934. A condition of the final decree was that Hari Chand was allowed possession of certain property subject to his paying Rs. 2,333-5-4 to Jowahar Mal, defendant; and on 1st March 1934 Hari Chand deposited this money in Court for payment to Jowahar Mal. On 15th March 1934, Jowahar Mal died. On 23rd March 1934 Hari Chand applied in execution to bring on the record the names of Sundar Das and Bishan Das as the legal representatives of Jowahar Mal. Notice was then issued by the Court, in reply to which it became apparent that there was a controversy between Sundar Das and Bishan Das not as to the rights of Hari Chand in the matter of the execution of the decree but as to their respective shares of the money deposited by Hari Chand in the name of Jowahar Mal, their deceased father. No order was passed by the lower Court on the question of bringing the names of Sundar Das and Bishan Das on the record as the legal representatives of the deceased Jowahar Mal. But on 1st June 1934 the Court ordered that Hari Chand be allowed the amount of costs due to him out of the amount deposited in Court, confirmed Hari Chand in possession and ordered the execution application to be consigned to the record room as fully satisfied. It is true that in this order the Senior Subordinate Judge mentions that Bishun Das and Sundar Das "have been brought upon the record as legal representatives of Jowahar Mal, deceased," but there is no trace in the record of any such order having been passed and before us Counsel agree that this observation was made under a misconception, the real facts being that no order had been actually passed bringing on record the names of any persons as legal representatives of Jowahar Mal.

By the same order the Senior Subordinate Judge, referring to the dispute between Sundar Das and Bishun Das, sons of Jowahar Mal, regarding the money deposited in Court for Jowahar Mal, held that it was not necessary for him in the present execution application to give any decision on their respective claims. He, therefore, refused to decide the question leaving the disputants to pursue their remedy by separate suit. No appeal was filed against this order, but later, on an application by Bishun Das, the Senior Subordinate Judge passed a supplementary order dated 6th October 1934, in the following terms :

Bishun Das and Sundar Das, sons of Jowahar Mal, are present. Both of them are equally entitled to the money deposited. Hence, one-half of the amount deposited be given to the petitioner.

Both brothers, it appears, withdrew the half share to which they became entitled by this order. Sundar Das then preferred an appeal to this Court objecting to the decision of the lower Court that Bishun Das was entitled to a half share of the money deposited on the ground that it was passed summarily without taking into consideration the objections made by Sundar Das. The case first came before a Single Judge, before whom a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of Bishun Das that the order passed by the lower Court was not appealable because it did not fall within the purview of S. 47, Civil P. C. The point urged before the Single Bench on behalf of the respondent was that the dispute between Sundar Das and Bishun Das in their capacity as representatives of Jowahar Mal, judgment-debtor, was not a question arising between the parties to the suit and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The learned Judge noticed a conflict of authorities on the question as to the applicability of S. 47, Civil P. C., in these circumstances. He was inclined to hold the view that S. 47, Civil P. C., does apply and an appeal is therefore competent, but in view of the importance of the question involved, he recommended that the case should be referred for decision to a Division Bench.

Mr. S. N. Bali on behalf of the appellant has argued before us two alternative positions. He contends in the first place that the case is governed by Cl. (3), S. 47, Civil P. C., and that an appeal is, therefore competent. He complains that the Senior Subordinate Judge in summarily awarding a half share of the money in deposit to Bishun Das, has ignored the objections of Sundar Das and he pleads that the case should be returned to the lower Court for further investigation under S. 47, Civil P. C. In the alternative he urges that if S. 47, Civil P. C., be held to have no application and his appeal be, therefore held incompetent, it should be entertained as an application in revision against the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge awarding a half share to Bishun Das. He contends that this order was without jurisdiction, because the Senior Subordinate Judge had finally disposed of the case by his order dated 1st June 1934, in which he declined to adjudicate on the rival claims but left the parties to pursue their remedy by separate suit. Mr. Bali asks us in revision to set aside the second order of 6th October 1934, and restore the original order of 1st June 1934. Mr. Kanwar Sain on behalf of the respondent Bishun Das urges that S. 47, Civil P. C., has no application because a dispute between the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor does not amount to a question between the parties to the suit and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. He points out that the decree-holder having deposited in Court the money for which he was liable, and in consequence having been allowed to retain possession of the property awarded to him in the partition decree, had no further interest in the matter of execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The remaining contest between Sundar Das and Bishun Das as the sons of Jowahar Mal, judgment-debtor, is not, he urges, a question arising between the parties to the suit and cannot, therefore be determined under S. 47, Civil P. C.

The order passed by the lower Court, he contends, is a mere administrative order which is not appealable.

There is nothing on the record to show the precise provision of the Civil Procedure Code, under which the lower Court purported to act in passing the material orders in this case. All that appears is that on 1st June 1934, on an application made by Hari Chand for execution of his decree, the Senior Subordinate Judge passed an order in full satisfaction of the decree, as a result of which the execution application was filed as satisfied. The decree-holder Hari Chand has accepted this order and it is clear that so far as the decree-holder is concerned, no question is outstanding between the parties to the suit relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of his decree. The dispute outstanding is between the so-called representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, for whom the decree-holder had deposited certain money in consideration of retaining possession of part of the disputed property. In passing this order, the lower Court refused to go into the dispute between the so-called representatives, for reasons not clearly specified, but presumably because it considered that it had no jurisdiction to do so. For reasons which will appear later in this judgment, I am of opinion that the lower Court rightly refused to adjudicate on this dispute, because, in fact, it had no jurisdiction, since S. 47, Civil P. C., is not applicable. The only criticism that can be directed to the lower Court's order of 1st June 1934, is the apparent incorrect assumption that Bishan Das and Sundar Das had been brought on the record as legal representatives of Jowahar Mal, deceased. No such actual order seems to have been passed: but it is to be noted that Bishan Das and Sundar Das were both present in Court on 1st June, and according to the Senior Subordinate Judge's order which in this particular has not been questioned, expressed as sons of Jowahar Mal, no objection to Hari Chand, the decree-holder, being granted what was claimed by him.

No doubt at that stage, the question for decision by the Senior Subordinate Judge, being an application by the decree-holder for the execution of his decree, S. 47, Civil P. C., did apply, and under Cl. (3), S. 47, the Court was bound to appoint a representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. A notice had issued for this purpose and the order passed on the decree-holder's application assumed that such a representative had been appointed in the presence of Bishan Das and Sundar Das who accepted the status of joint representatives. It is clear therefore that in effect the requirements of Cl. (3), S. 47, had been observed. But on Hari Chand's application for execution being thereafter consigned to the record room as fully satisfied, S. 47 ceased to have any further application, since there was no further question outstanding between the parties relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of Hari Chand's decree. Hari Chand and the surviving judgment-debtor had no further interest in the decree. It was three months later, on 9th July 1934, that Bishan Das applied for a half-share of the money deposited in the name of his deceased father and secured the order of the Court dated 6th October 1934, to which Sundar Das has now taken exception.

In support of his contention, that the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge is appealable, Mr. S. N. Bali cited a Privy Council authority, 19 Cal 683 (1). This authority does not however support his contention. The relevant question then before their Lordships was whether in a case admittedly relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, an auction-purchaser could be deemed to be a party to the suit for purposes of S. 244 (now S. 47), Civil P. C. Their Lordships expressed the view that the provisions of this section should not be narrowly construed and the mere fact that an auction-purchaser was not strictly a party to the suit, but was nevertheless interested in the result, should not be held to be a bar to the application of the section. Clearly, this is not an authority for the application of S. 47, Civil P. C., to the facts of the present case however wide a construction may be placed on the provisions of the section. Other authorities have been cited in support of the view that the Court is bound to decide under S. 47, Civil P. C., the question of who are the representatives of the parties to the suit. This contention is self-evident from the provisions of Cl. (3), S. 47, Civil P. C., but the wording of Cl. (3) which limits its application "for the purposes of this section," makes it clear that the Court is only to go into the question of representation for the purposes of deciding a question arising between the parties to the suit and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. In other words, sub-S. 3, S. 47 is ancillary to sub-S. 1 and cannot be invoked unless the case is governed by sub-S. 1.

It was also argued by Mr. Bali that the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C., should not be confined to the case of parties who are arrayed against each other. In view of the wide construction which according to their Lordships of the Privy Council, should be placed on the provisions of S. 47, I would accept this argument to the extent of holding that the expression "parties to the suit" contemplated by sub-S. 1, S. 47, Civil P. C., should not be restricted to parties ranged against each other on opposite sides. For example, if A sues B and C for possession by partition and in execution of a decree obtained by A against B and C, a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree arises as between B and C. I would hold that S. 47 is applicable and the question must be determined by the Court executing the decree. This view is in accordance with 4 Rang 418 (2) which related to a case between parties ranged on the same side—an authority with which the learned referring Judge expressed himself in agreement.

But this finding does not help Mr. Bali's client in the circumstances of the present case. Here we are not dealing with a dispute between two parties ranged on the same side, but between two persons, both claiming to derive status from one party deceased. Moreover, since the decree is qua the decree-holders and surviving judgment-debtor fully satisfied, no question is outstanding relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Such a case cannot, in my opinion, fall within the purview of S. 47, Civil P. C., without unduly distorting the plain meaning of that section. The real issue now under consideration has been fully discussed in 57 Bom 641 (3), a Letters Patent Appeal of the Bombay High Court decided in 1933. This was an appeal arising out of execution of a mortgage decree in which there was a contest between the rival representatives of the deceased mortgagor to recover a certain sum of money to which the mortgagor was entitled under the terms of the decree.

In this case, the Subordinate Judge, during the pendency of the execution proceedings, decided as between the rival representatives purporting to act under the provisions of O. 21, R. 5, Civil P. C. It was common ground during the course of the appellate proceedings (as indeed is conceded before us), that O. 23 would have no application to such a case because that order is not applicable to execution proceedings. The Single Judge before whom the appeal first came took the view that the section applicable was Cl. (3), S. 47, Civil P. C., and that the order of the lower Court was therefore appealable. It was however held by the Division Bench in Letters Patent Appeal that sub-S. 3, S. 47, Civil P. C., must be read as ancillary to sub-S. 1 and only comes into operation where there is a question arising between the parties to the suit relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and that it does not apply to a case in which the question is between the rival representatives of one party, the other party having throughout disclaimed any interest in the question.

The case against the applicability of S. 47 is even stronger in the circumstances of the present case, because the contest between the rival representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor is, as is shown by their conduct during execution proceedings, and by the application of Bishan Das dated 9th July 1934, made after Hari Chand's execution application had been dismissed fully satisfied, entirely separate from any question connected with the execution, discharge or satisfaction of Hari Chand's decree. It is true that the amount deposited in the name of Jowahar Mal was still lying in the Court, but the contest as to the title to withdraw this decree lay solely between the two sons of Jowahar Mal no other parties to the suit having any further interest in the matter. It was also held in 1932 Pat 329 (4), a Letters Patent Appeal, that a dispute between two persons who are the legal representatives of the same party is not a question between parties for the purposes of S. 47, Civil P. C. The view was expressed that such a dispute should be settled by a regular suit and not by way of application for execution. These decisions have been followed in a Single Bench decision of this Court—1935 Lah 384 (5)—in which reliance was placed amongst others on 57 Bom 641 (3), the authority already cited. The weight of authority therefore supports the view taken in this judgment that S. 47, Civil P. C., is not applicable to a dispute confined to the representatives of one party to an application in execution, when the other parties have no further interest and the decree-holder has obtained satisfaction of his decree. I would hold therefore that the order of the lower Court is not appealable and that this appeal must be dismissed as incompetent.

The alternative position taken by Mr. Bali on behalf of his client is that his appeal should be treated as a revision and that in exercise of our revisional jurisdiction, we should vacate the last order passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge dated 6th October 1934, holding that the two brothers are equally entitled to the money deposited on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction, the matter having been concluded by his previous order of 1st June 1934. While expressing the view that the Senior Subordinate Judge would have been better advised to have adhered to his order of 1st June and left the parties to pursue their remedy by separate suit, I am of opinion that no such injustice has been occasioned by the subsequent order of 6th October 1934, as would justify our interference on the revision side. Although Sundar Das has now challenged this order, it is to be noted that he has withdrawn the half share of the money to which the lower Court has held him entitled. The position therefore is that both brothers have taken their half share of the money deposited in the name of their deceased father; and since Bishan

Das did, for eighteen months, from 20th November 1932, until 26th February 1934, when the final decree was passed, act as the guardian ad litem of his father, and must therefore have incurred considerable expense in conducting this litigation, I see no reason to compel him to restore in revision the half share to which his claim has been summarily upheld by the lower Court merely because the other brother, Sundar Das, has questioned his title. This summary decision will not bar a separate suit. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs and I would decline to interfere in revision.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 12 (2)—Application for copies made direct to copying department—Copying Department is not private agent of applicant—Delay by it in giving copy cannot be attributed to applicant.

Where an application for copies of a judgment and decree is made direct to an official of copying department whose duty is to make and deliver copies and not to make a further application to some official authority on the applicant's behalf, the copying department cannot be regarded as a private agent of the applicant and the delay made by it in supplying the copy cannot be attributed to the applicant: 9 I C 381, and 35 P L R 713, Disting. [P 122 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 12 (2)—'Time requisite'—No negligence or want of bona fides on part of applicant or his counsel—Delay in giving copies due to negligence of copying department—Period noted on application is to be regarded as 'time requisite.'

When there has been no mistake of counsel, no negligence, nor inaction, nor want of bona fides imputable to the applicant applying for the copies of a judgment and decree, but the delay in giving copies is due to the slipshod and negligent procedure of the copying department, the time which the department itself notes as having elapsed between the application and the completion of the copy is to be regarded as the "time requisite" within the meaning of S. 12 (2). Judgment.—This appeal is against a judgment of the Additional District Judge, Sialkot, dismissing the appellant's first appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation and the only point for determination is whether the decision on the point of limitation was proper. The appellant sued the respondents in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Narowal, for possession of certain house property. His suit was dismissed on 23rd March 1933. On 29th March, he presented an application to the copying department at Sialkot for copies of the judgment and decree. What happened after this is shown by the certified copy of the orders and actions recorded on the application. The application was not rejected but entertained although no fee was paid at the time of the application. No direction was given as to the time when the fee was to be paid nor was the applicant told when to appear to take the copies. The 'Moharrir' of the Sialkot Kacheri reported to the copying agent that the file had not been consigned to the record room. On 10th April, the copyist noted that the appellant should deposit Rs. 20, and notice was sent to him to deposit the money, otherwise the application would be consigned to the record room.

The appellant deposited the money on the next day. Again he was not told when the copies would be ready. On 12th April, the copyist noted that the copying charge would be Rs. 34-2-0, and the copying agent ordered that the applicant should be awaited up to 19th April. On 18th April, the additional amount of Rs. 14-2-0 was deposited, and an order was passed that a copy be prepared ('nakal taiar howe'). On the next day, 19th April, the appellant took his copy which had been certified correct on the 18th by the Clerk of the Court. The endorsement on the copy given recorded that the application for the copy had been made on 29th March, and that the copy had been completed on 18th April. The appellant presented his appeal on 8th May 1933, that is to say, 16 days after the period of limitation for the appeal had expired. A note on the memorandum stated that the appeal was within time after deducting the time spent in procuring copies (i. e. from 29th March to 18th April) and holidays (29th April to 7th May). The learned Additional District Judge based his decision that the appeal was barred on 9 I C 381 (1) and 35 P L R 713 (2), holding that the copying department is the agent of the applicant and that:

If the copying agent is at fault in delaying his demand for the deposit, the Court cannot excuse the delay.

It is contended by appellant's counsel that these rulings have no application where an application is made direct to the official department whose duty is to make and deliver copies and not to make a further application to some official authority, that the dates noted on the copy delivered are themselves sufficient proof of the time requisite to obtain the copies, that the record of orders and action taken on the application prove that the appellant was not negligent but made his deposits when asked to make them, and that the appellant is entitled by statute to add the period from 29th March to 18th April, to the time allowed for the appeal and that therefore the appeal was presented within time. Prima facie, an appellant is justified in taking advantage of the whole period between the date officially recorded on the certified copy as the date of application and the date there recorded as that on which the copy was completed. But it is argued for the respondents that these dates are not relevant, and it was for the appellant to account for every day's delay beyond the limitation period. Respondent's Counsel draws attention to the note on the copy that the cause of delay in preparing the copy was "Full deposit made on 18th April 1934" and contends that as it was due to the delay in making the deposit that the copy was not ready until twenty-one days after the date of the application, the appeal was rightly held to be barred by limitation. He has referred to a very large number of rulings, including those cited in the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge, which relate to cases where appellant's delays were held to be inexcusable under the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act.

The Division Bench judgment in 9 I C 381 (1), on which Dalip Singh, J., based

1. Ashiq Hussain v. Ali Bakhsh, (1911) 9 I C 381.

This ruling in 1928 Lah 16 (3), proceeded on the principles that when an applicant requests a copying agency to procure a copy for him from a Court the copying agency must be regarded as the applicant's private agent whose delay will not excuse his principal. In that case the Copying Agent, Delhi, to whom the application had been made was not shown to be an officer of the copying department. It was also found that the appellants had been guilty themselves of gross negligence; they had not applied for copy of the judgment appealed against until two and a half months after the judgment had been delivered. It is obvious that that ruling is not upon facts similar to those of the present case where the application was made personally (this is not disputed) to the Copying Department, Sialkot, and accepted by that department as an application to itself sufficient for further action by itself to be taken. What were the rules followed in Sialkot at the time for the acceptance of copies and payments of fees is not clear, but it is evident from the endorsement on the application that no request was made for any deposit of fee until 10th April 1933, after the record had been requisitioned from Narowal and the amount of fee payable had been ascertained. Here there was no negligence on the part of the applicant who deposited the amount he was asked to deposit on the next day. Nor was he told when the copy would be ready or that the deposit was insufficient.

The copy was apparently not completed until the 18th (when the order was that it should be completed). It also appears that time was allowed to the appellant up to 19th April, to deposit the additional amount necessary. But it is not shown that the appellant was informed of this. The deposit was made a day before this period expired. The copying department was therefore wholly responsible for the delay in this case. How the department, which was not paid by the applicant, but (and this is not denied before me) by Government and was not asked to make any further application on the applicant's behalf but itself to make and supply a copy can be regarded as a private agent of the applicant is difficult to understand. It is argued for the respondent that the applicant must be presumed to have known the departmental instructions given in Ch. 14-B, Vol. I, (p. 5) of the High Court Rules and Orders, which are that when the copying fees are not paid at the time of the application, the date of the application must be considered to be that on which the fees were filed. My attention has also been drawn to the departmental instructions issued by this Court and printed at p. 7, Ch. 17-C, Vol. 4, of the Rules and Orders. But it is clear that these instructions were not followed at the time in Sialkot, and no regard was paid to the orders in Part C, Ch. 17-C in Vol. 4.

None of the judgments relied upon by the respondents' counsel deals with a case on all fours with the present one. I do not think it necessary to refer to any except the two Privy Council judgments 49 Cal 999 (4) and 1928 P C 103 (5). These certainly lay it down that time which need not have elapsed if the appellant had taken reasonable proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree or order cannot be regarded as 'requisite time' within the meaning of sub-S. (2) of S. 12, Limitation Act, and that requisite time means time 'properly required.' They do not however lay down the proposition that when there has been no mistake of counsel, no negligence nor inaction nor want of bona fides imputable to the applicant but the delay in giving a copy is due to the slipshod and negligent procedure of the copying department, the time which the department itself notes as having elapsed between the application and the completion of the copy is not to be regarded as 'time requisite.' Allowing for this period in the present case I find the appeal to the District Judge to have been presented within time. I accept this appeal, set aside the lower appellate Court's order and remand the case to the District Judge for decision of the appeal before him upon its merits. Stamp on the appeal to be refunded. Costs to abide the event.

Order. — The plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the trial Court on 31st August 1934. He applied for copies to the District Copying Agency on 3rd September 1934, the trial Court being one situated at the headquarters of the district. The application was accepted, the records were at once summoned, an estimate of the cost was prepared and the full copying fee was paid on 6th September 1934.
The copies were prepared and were ready for delivery on 6th September 1934, and the appeal was eventually filed in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge on 2nd October 1934, the thirty-second day from the passing of the decree. The appellate Court allowed only one day to be deducted as the time requisite for obtaining copies and rejected the appeal, holding that the memorandum of appeal had not been presented within the time prescribed by law.

In refusing to hear the appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge has followed a Single Bench decision of this Court to the effect that the Copying Agent cannot be regarded as the agent of the person who is applying for copies for the purpose of sending for the records and estimating the cost of preparing the copies; but this decision, so far as it relates to the preparation of copies of the records of the Courts of Subordinate Judges, has since been overruled and this principle applies only to the preparation of copies of the records of District Courts. In such a case the District Copying Agent is not the proper person to whom to apply for copies, unless he has been specially appointed for this purpose. When the records of other Subordinate Courts have been obtained however the District Copying Agent is usually (though not always) the proper person to whom an application for copies must be addressed under the rules. In the present instance, the application was properly made to the District Copying Agent, the trial Court being situated at the headquarters and not being a Court of Small Causes.

A further objection is raised that no payment accompanied, although a fixed sum should ordinarily accompany, the application for copies. Had the failure to make this deposit resulted in any delay, the plaintiff might not be able to claim a deduction of the additional period caused by his negligence, though it is to be observed that he was given no warning by the copying department, as the rules require. But, as already mentioned, his application was accepted as valid by the department concerned, and it does not appear that the preparation of copies was in any way held up for want of a deposit, so that the time which elapsed was exactly the same time as that would have elapsed if the application had been accompanied by an advance. The facts of the present case are similar to those of 37 P L R 510 (1) in which the appellant was allowed to deduct the full time spent in obtaining copies, no fee having been demanded from him at the time of the presentation of his application, although the rules require that an application should be returned when it is not accompanied by a deposit. With that decision I respectfully agree. The appellant only required one more day's grace to bring his appeal within time, and it is clear that at least one day was required to send for the records and prepare an estimate of the full cost, before the work of preparing copies could be taken in hand. For all these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal was presented to the Senior Subordinate Judge within the time prescribed by law.

1. Labhu Ram v. Banshi Dhar, 1936 Lah 120 =

The appellant has a statutory right to deduct the time requisite for obtaining the copies of the decree and judgment, and as the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has wrongly refused to hear the appeal on the ground that the memorandum of appeal was not presented before him in time, I accept this petition and direct that the appeal should not be admitted to hearing for decision on the merits.

JAI LAL AND SALE, JJ.

Sm. Shakuntla Devi — Plaintiff—Appellant.

Kaushalya Devi and others—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 1804 of 1934, Decided on 5th July 1935, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, D/- 26th June 1934.

(a) Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act (2 of 1929)—Application of—It applies to case of person dying before it came into force but having widow alive who inherits him at its enforcement.

The Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act 2 of 1929 applies to the case of a person who dies before it came into force, if his widow, who inherits his estate, is alive at the time of its enforcement: 1932 Lah 361 and 1934 Pat 324, Foll.; 1934 Mad 138 and 1933 Lah 777, Disting.; 1933 All 152, Applied. [P 125 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act (2 of 1929)—Preamble—"Dying intestate" does not refer to time of death of person—It is mere description of status of deceased—It is intended to signify that law is to be modified as to intestate and not testamentary succession.

The expression "dying intestate in the preamble of the Hindu Law Amendment Act (2 of 1929), has no reference and is not intended to have any reference, to the time of the death of the Hindu male; it is a mere description of the status of the deceased. It is used to signify that the law is intended to be modified in respect of the estates only of those Hindu males who have died or may die intestate. The question must therefore be decided with reference to the operative parts of the Act and the principles of the Hindu Law. [P 126 C 2]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective effect.

The cardinal rule relating to the interpretation of statutes is that unless expressly provided therein, a statute cannot be made to have retrospective effect. [P 127 C 1]

(d) Hindu Law—Succession — Widow—Inheritance is never in abeyance—Reversioners have no vested interest when widow is alive—Succession opens at death of widow but estate goes not to her but to her husband's next heir—No question of retrospective effect of Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act comes in if widow dies after Act even if husband had died before.

Inheritance is never in abeyance and reversionary heirs have no vested interest in the estate because the husband's life is assumed to continue in the person of the widow, and therefore the succession opens at the date of the death of the widow, and also that on the death of the widow the estate goes to the next heir of the husband and not of the widow. This is the rule of the Hindu law with regard to the nature of the estate inherited by a widow in the property of her husband. The determination of the next heir of the deceased husband of the widow takes place on the death of the widow. It is therefore obvious that there is no question of retrospective application of the Act if the widow dies after the Act comes into force even if the husband had died before the Act: 1921 Lah 85; 1916 P C 117 and 5 Cal 776 (P C), Rel. on. [P 127 C 2; P 128 C 1]

(e) Hindu Law—Reversioner — Right of—Reversioner not inheriting estate of intestate male due to existence of widow—Reversioner dying before widow—Estate goes to heirs of intestate person and not to heirs of reversioner.

Where a person, who would immediately have inherited the estate of an intestate Hindu male, but has not done so owing to the existence of a widow, dies before the widow, the estate goes to the next heirs of the Hindu male and not to the heirs of such person. [P 128 C 1]

Achhru Ram and Indar Deo—for Appellant.

Badri Das, Tirath Ram and Jagan Nath Agarwal—for Respondents.

Jai Lal, J.—The pedigree of the parties is printed at p. 39 of the paper book. In 1905 there was a division of joint family property among the five sons of Lala Shambhu Das who, it appears, were members of a joint Hindu family; but one question ultimately to be decided in this litigation is whether the two brothers Parma Nand and Devki Nand continued to be joint or were separate. Devki Nand died in 1912 and Parma Nand in 1922. Devki Nand left a son—

Dewan Chand, who died in 1918, leaving a widow, Mt. Shivan Devi, and a sister Shrimati Shakuntla Devi. Parma Nand left a son, Keshwa Nand, who died a couple of years ago. In 1924 a suit was instituted by Mt. Shivan Devi against Keshwa Nand in forma pauperis for recovery of the estate of her husband Dewan Chand. But before the parties went to trial the suit was withdrawn, and, on the same day, i. e., 16th October 1924, an award, said to have been made by some arbitrators appointed by the parties, was filed in Court and a decree granted by the Court in accordance therewith. In this award it was apparently held that Parma Nand and Devki Nand and his son Dewan Chand were joint and therefore on the death of Dewan Chand his interest in the joint property went by survivorship to Parma Nand and, on the death of the latter, the whole property went to Keshwa Nand, and consequently that Mt. Shivan Devi was entitled only to maintenance which was fixed at Rs. 160 a month. Attempts were made by some of the descendants of the other brothers of Devki Nand to have this decree set aside, and also by Mt. Shivan Devi; in the meantime the suit out of which this appeal was arisen was instituted by Mt. Shakuntla Devi for a declaration that the property in the hands of Dewan Chand was his separate property because he was not a member of a joint Hindu family with Parma Nand and Keshwa Nand and therefore that it did not go to Keshwa Nand by survivorship, and consequently that after the death of Mt. Shivan Devi she, Mt. Shakuntla Devi, was entitled to succeed to the estate of Dewan Chand as his sister, and the award and the decree were not binding on her and would not affect her reversionary rights.

This suit has been dismissed by the trial Judge on the ground that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain it because according to the Mitakshara law as administered in this Province she is not an heir to the estate of Dewan Chand after the death of his widow Mt. Shivan Devi. Consequently this appeal has been presented by Mt. Shakuntla Devi. It is true that, according to the Mitakshara law as originally administered in this province, a sister was not recognised as one of the Sapinda heirs to the estate of her brother, but the Indian Legislature has introduced a change in this respect by enacting the Hindu law of inheritance (Amendment Act,) Act 2 of 1929, which came into force on 21st February 1929. The learned trial Judge however has declined to apply this Act in the present case, because in his opinion it governs the succession to the estates of those males only who are governed by the law of Mitakshara and who die after 21st February 1929.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the view of the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous and that the appellant is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Act which applies to all cases in which succession to the estate of a deceased male governed by the law of Mitakshara will open out after the Act came into force. In other words, it is contended that the Act also applies to all cases where such a male had died before the date on which it came into force but his estate was held by a female heir, such as the widow, who was alive on such date. There has been some conflict on the question involved. It was held by a Division Bench of this Court in 13 Lah 178 (1) that Act 2 of 1929 applied to the case of a person who had died before it came into force, if his widow, who had inherited his estate, was alive at the time. There is however no discussion of the subject and it appears that there was no contest on it before the learned Judges. The same view was taken by the learned Chief Justice of the Patna High Court in 1934 Patna 324 (2). The learned Chief Justice discussed the matter in all its aspects and concurred with the view taken by this Court in the case mentioned above, and differed from the contrary decision of the Madras High Court in 57 Mad 718 (3).

The Allahabad High Court in 1933 All 152 (4) also applied the provisions of Act 2 of 1929 to a case in which the circumstances were analogous to those of this case. There is however no discussion of the matter. In 1933 Lah 777 (5) a learned Judge in Chambers of this Court expressed the same opinion as in 57 Mad 718 (3). His attention however does not appear to have been drawn to the decision of the Division Bench in 13 Lah 178 (1), nor is there any discussion of the question in his judgment. Moreover his judgment is subject to a Letters Patent appeal which is also before us, and will be disposed of by this judgment. Now Act 2 of 1929 is expressed to apply to persons who, but for the passing of this Act, would have been subject to the law of Mitakshara in respect of the provisions herein enacted, to such persons in respect only of the property of males not held in coparcenary and not disposed of by will.

In S. 2 it is provided that a son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister, and sister's son shall, in the order so specified, be entitled to rank in the order of succession next after a father's father and before a father's brother. The order of succession to which this amendment has been made is reproduced on p. 31, S. 43 of Mulla's Hindu Law, Edn. 7. As I have already stated, but for the passing of this Act, a sister would not be recognised as an heir under the law of Mitakshara, but the Act has conferred upon her a status to inherit the estate of her brother in the order specified, and there is no dispute that if the Act governs the succession in this case, then Shrimati Shakuntla Devi would be entitled to inherit the property of Devan Chand after the death of Mt. Shivan Devi. With one exception the arguments of the learned counsel, who contested the application of the Act, followed the lines of the reason given by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in 57 Mad 718 (3). It would therefore be convenient at this stage to consider that judgment. Two main reasons are given by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in support of their conclusion. The first is that in the preamble of the Act the use of the words "dying intestate" clearly indicates that the Act was intended to be applied to the property of such males only who might die after the Act came into force. The preamble of the Act is :

Whereas it is expedient to alter the order in which certain heirs of a Hindu male dying intestate are entitled to succeed to his estate, it is hereby enacted as follows.

The learned Judges also took into consideration the changes effected by the Select Committee in the Bill as introduced in the Legislative Assembly. Assuming that the Act as now passed is ambiguous and, therefore, it is permissible to refer to the preamble and to the changes effected in the original Bill by the Select Committee, still, in my opinion, the use in the preamble of the expression "dying intestate" does not lend support to the conclusion that the Act applies to the estate of only those "who shall hereafter die intestate." After giving my careful consideration to the matter, I am of opinion that the expression "dying intestate" has no reference and was not intended to have any reference, to the time of the death of the Hindu male; it is a mere description of the status of the deceased. It is used to signify that the law is intended to be modified in respect of the estates only of those Hindu males who have died or may die intestate. The intention of the legislature is to prevent the application of the Act to cases of testamentary succession, i. e., to property "not disposed of by will." The operative part of the Act uses no such expression. The preamble therefore does not lead to the conclusion that the Act is intended to govern the cases of inheritance to property of only those males who had already died when it came into force. The question must therefore be decided with reference to the operative parts of the Act and the principles of Hindu law.

The changes made to the Bill in the Select Committee also do not indicate that the Act was made applicable only to the estates of persons who die subsequent to 1st February 1929. In the Bill the word "deceased" was used before "Hindu dying intestate," but it was omitted in the Select Committee. This appears to have been done purely with a view to remove a defect in drafting and not to alter the original meaning of the preamble. The Bill as originally drafted was expressed to apply to the case of property of Hindus "to which succession opens after 31st July 1928." The Select Committee omitted the reference to the date on which succession opens on the ground that it was unnecessary to assign retrospective effect to the provisions by the Bill or to defer the coming into operation thereof. The Bill was passed into law early in 1929 and therefore if the provision as to its application to cases where succession opened after 31st July 1928 had been retained, it would have operated retrospectively to cases in which succession opened between that date and the date of coming into force of the Act, and it is this contingency that the Select Committee intended to avoid. The Committee did not wish to defer the coming into operation of the Act. Therefore it must be assumed that the Bill as amended was intended to apply to cases where the succession opened on or after the date on which the Act might come into force.

The second ground has reference to the cardinal rule relating to the interpretation of statutes that unless expressly provided therein a statute cannot be made to have retrospective effect. It was remarked that as there is no such express provision in Act 2 of 1929, the application of the Act to a case like the present would infringe the above rule of the interpretation of statutes. But I venture to remark that the learned Judges took for granted what they had to decide in the case. The question whether the application of the Act to a case like the present involves its application retrospectively depends on whether the inheritance in favour of the persons mentioned in S. 2 of the Act and on whom the right has for the first time been conferred, must be deemed to open out on the death of the male or on the death of the life estate holder; in other words whether the estate of a male who dies leaving a widow vests in the "next full heir," if I may use that expression, on the death of the male or of the widow. The answer to the question involves an examination of the provisions of the Hindu law as to the nature of the estate held by a female heir, such as a widow, in succession to a male, and of the question whether the "next full heir" inherits the estate of the male or the estate of the female who has immediately succeeded the latter. The matter is in my opinion concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 39 Mad 634 (6) where Lord Shaw in delivering the judgment of their Lordships observed:

The rule of the Hindu law with regard to the nature of the widow's estate may have been subject to various forms of expression, but in substance it is not doubtful. Her right is of the nature of a right of property; her position is that of owner; her powers in that character are, however limited; but to use the familiar language of Mayne's Hindu law, para. 625, p. 870, so long as she is alive no one has any vested interest in the "succession", and also that the reversionary heir, although having only those contingent interests which are differentiated little, if at all, from a spes successionis is recognised by Court of law as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life. But such an heir does so in a representative capacity as the question to whom the estate shall ultimately go shall be determined at the proper time.

In 5 Cal 776 (7) their Lordships had previously stated:

According to Hindu law, a widow who succeeds to the estate of her husband in default of male issue, whether she succeeds by inheritance or by survivorship, does not take a mere life-estate in the property. The whole estate is, for the time, vested in her; though in some respects, for only a qualified interest. Her estate is an anomalous one, and has been compared to that of a tenant-in-tail. It would perhaps be more correct to say that she holds an estate of inheritance to herself and the heirs of her husband. But whatever her estate is, it is clear that, until the termination of it, it is impossible to say who are the persons who will be entitled to succeed as heirs to her husband. The succession does not open to the heirs of the husband until the termination of the widow's estate. Upon the termination of that estate the property descends to those who would have been the heirs of the husband if he had lived up to and died at the moment of her death.

See also 2 Lah 383 (8) at p. 388. It would thus be observed that inheritance is never in abeyance and reversionary heirs have no vested interest in the estate, because the husband's life is assumed to continue in the person of the widow, and therefore the succession opens at the date of the death of the widow, and also that on the death of the widow the estate goes to the next heir of the husband and not of the widow. This is the rule of the Hindu law with regard to the nature of the estate inherited by a widow in the property of her husband, and it is undisputed that the determination of the next heir of the deceased husband of the widow takes place on the death of the widow; it is therefore obvious that there is no retrospective application of the Act if the widow dies after the Act comes into force.

8. Mt. Nasibul-Nisa v. Mt. Ahmad-un-nissa, 1921, Lah 85=66 I C 494=2 Lah 388.

even if the husband had died before that. There is no manner of doubt that where a person, who would immediately have inherited the estate of an intestate Hindu male, but has not done so owing to the existence of a widow, dies before the widow, the estate goes to the next heirs of the male and not to the heirs of such person. For instance, if a Hindu male dies leaving a widow, a brother and a nephew, the estate would ordinarily go to the brother after the death of the widow; but if the brother dies childless before the widow the nephew will inherit the estate, though otherwise he would have been excluded by the brother, and the heirs of the brother would not inherit it. If however the brother leaves sons they would inherit as nephews along with the other nephew of the deceased husband of the widow. But the learned counsel contends that though it is true that the selection of the next heir must take place out of the persons who may be alive on the death of the widow and who would have succeeded to the estate if the husband had died on the date of the death of the widow, (the law according to which the selection should be made should be the law which was in force on the date of the death of the husband and not of the widow.) They, however, take no account of the legal fiction that (when selecting the next heir, it must be assumed that the husband has lived up to the death of his widow.) There is absolutely no logic in the contention that in a case like this for one purpose the husband should be deemed to have lived up to the death of the widow and for the other up to his natural death.

Realising that this interpretation of the law would lead to some practical difficulties one learned counsel suggested an ingenious way out of them. He suggested that the Act should apply only to the first succession to the property of a male governed by the Mitakshara Law who had died after the Act came into force and that the next succession should always be according to the law of Mitakshara unaffected by Act 2 of 1929. He illustrated his contention by stating that if a male governed by the law of Mitakshara dies after 21st February 1929 leaving say, a widow and a sister the widow would succeed but after her the next heir would be from among the heirs originally recognised by the Mitakshara law and that the sister would not inherit under any circumstances and also that if such a male dies leaving no nearer heirs than a sister, according to the Mitakshara law as amended by the Act, then the sister would inherit, but if after the death of the sister there is a sister's son and a father's brother, then the father's brother would inherit the property and not the sister's son. I am unable to accept this contention; it is not supported by anything in the Act nor by any sound principle. The weight of authority is against the Madras view and the reasons given by the learned Judge of that Court in support of their conclusion are not, if I may say so with great respect, sound. In my opinion the conclusion of this Court in 13 Lah 178 (1) is the correct one and Act 2 of 1929 applies to the estates of those Hindu males who have died intestate before the Act came into force if their estate vested in a life estate holder who was alive on 21st February 1929.

I would therefore hold that, in the present case, Mt. Shakuntla Devi is by virtue of Act 2 of 1929 entitled to inherit the estate of her brother Dewan Chand if she survives his widow Mt. Shivan Devi, and is consequently entitled to maintain this suit. I would, therefore, accept this appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned trial Judge, would remand the case to him with direction to proceed with the trial of the suit in accordance with law. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal shall be refunded to the appellant but the other costs will abide the result. It was mentioned by the respondent's counsel that there are other objections to the competency of the appellant to maintain the suit. This judgment merely disposes of the one objection mentioned above and if there are any other objections and have been properly raised before the trial Court it will be for that Court to decide them.

Civil Ref. No. 22 of 1935, Decided on 13th November 1935, from Deputy Commissioner, Kangra, D/- 1st April 1935.

Punjab Land Alienation Act (13 of 1900), S. 3—Gift of land to bona fide religious and charitable purposes—Bonafides should be decided by Civil Court—Sanction by Deputy Commissioner is not necessary.

If a gift can be held to be in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose, the question of the sanction by Deputy Commissioner does not arise at all. S. 3 does not provide that if a gift is made in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose the Deputy Commissioner shall sanction the same; on the other hand it debars the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner to consider the question of sanction in the case of a gift made in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose, which is to be determined by a Civil Court. Order.—This is a petition by the Deputy Commissioner of Kangra under S. 21—A (3), Punjab Alienation of Land Act. The facts are these.

Mt. Kirpo, a widow of a member of an agricultural tribe in the Kangra District, made a gift of the entire agricultural land held by her in favour of the temple called Thakar Ramgopal Mandir at Damtal in the district of Kangra. A mutation of this gift was entered by the Patwari in the mutation register and was sent to the Collector by the Assistant Collector with a recommendation that the mutation of names be refused, because no land had been left in possession of the donor for her own maintenance, and Mt. Kumlo, a widow of a son of Mt. Kirpo, was alive and objected to the mutation. The Collector accordingly refused to sanction the mutation. The donee thereupon instituted a suit for a declaration that the land in dispute had been validly gifted to the temple and was owned by it. On a confession of judgment by Mt. Kirpo this suit was decreed. It was alleged before the Subordinate Judge, who decreed this suit, that the gift was in favour of the temple, that it was a bona fide gift, that the income of the land was credited to the treasury of the temple and that the poor and travellers were being fed out of the said income. The Deputy Commissioner thereupon applied for the revision of the decree to the District Judge of Hoshiarpur under S. 21—A (2) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act on the ground that the gift was not a bona fide one and it was not valid without his sanction. The District Judge, however, has held that it was a bona fide gift to the temple and that it did not require the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner. He has therefore, dismissed the application for revision. Consequently the Deputy Commissioner has applied for the revision of the order passed by the District Judge. I have heard the learned Government Advocate on behalf of the Deputy Commissioner and am of opinion that this application must be dismissed.

There is no force in the contention that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to decide the question of the bona fide nature of the gift or otherwise. S. 21, Punjab Alienation of Land Act excludes jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in any matter which the Local Government or a Revenue Officer is empowered by the Act to dispose of or in which the Local Government or any Revenue Officer exercises any power vested in it or in him by or under the Act. But a reference to S. 3, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, shows that this is not a matter which the Revenue Officer is empowered to dispose of or in which he could be deemed to have exercised any power vested in him under the Act, because S. 3 (2) expressly provides that sanction shall not be necessary in the case of a gift made in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose whether inter vivos or by will. If, therefore, a gift can be held to be in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose, the question of the sanction by the Deputy Commissioner does not arise at all. The section does not provide that if a gift is made in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose, then the Deputy Commissioner shall sanction the same, on the other hand, it debars the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner to consider the question of sanction in the case of a gift made in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose. Therefore S. 21, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to decide whether the gift is made in good faith for a religious or charitable purpose.

It has been found both by the learned Subordinate Judge and the District Judge that the gift in this case was made bona fide for a religious purpose. I see no good reason to differ from this conclusion. It is obvious that the purpose of the gift is bona fide a religious and charitable one. It may be that the widow of the son of the donor has been deprived of her right of maintenance; in that case she has her remedy in the Civil Courts to have the gift set aside; but it is no function of the Deputy Commissioner under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act to object to a gift which is for a religious or charitable purpose on the mere ground that the donor has no means of livelihood left for herself or the effect of the gift was to deprive some other person of his or her right of maintenance. Such a gift cannot be held to require the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. In the present case all that was necessary for the Civil Court to see was whether the gift was for a bona fide religious or charitable purpose, and the finding on this question is in favour of the donee. I am, therefore, unable to interfere on revision and dismiss this application but make no order as to costs.

Second Appeal No. 17 of 1935, Decided on 22nd October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 6th October 1934.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Succession—'Jats' in Phillaur Tahsil, Jullundur District—Collaterals up to fifth degree exclude daughters—No distinction between ancestral and non-ancestral property.

In the Phillaur Tahsil among Jats daughters are excluded by collaterals up to and including the fifth degree in matter of succession and there is no distinction between ancestral and non-ancestral property. [P 130 C 2]

(b) Riwaj-i-am—Statement unsupported by instances—Riwaj-i-am is not bad—Value of entry in Riwaj-i-am.

The fact that a statement of custom in a riwaj-i-am is not supported by instances does not in itself provide the necessary rebuttal; and if on an issue regarding the existence of an exception to a general rule of custom the sole evidence offered is a riwaj-i-am entry without instances, the issue must be decided in accordance with that entry. [P 131 C 1; P 132 C 1].

Achhru Ram—for Appellant.

Badri Das—for Respondents.

Currie, J.—The sole question for decision in this case is whether daughters succeed to the non-ancestral property left by their father. The parties are Jats of the Phillaur Tahsil of the Jullundur District. The riwaj-i-am of the district is clearly in favour of the collaterals. According to the answer to question 45 (a) in the Phillaur Tahsil among Jats daughters are excluded by collaterals up to and including the fifth degree. The answer to question 45 (b) shows that no distinction is drawn between ancestral and non-ancestral property. For the appellant Mr. Achhru Ram urges that the statement in the riwaj-i-am should not be accepted as it is opposed to the general custom of the province. He further urges that in certain cases this riwaj-i-am has not been accepted by the Courts as a correct statement of custom. He urges that the riwaj-i-am may be rebutted by showing that in other matters it is incorrect and in this connexion refers to 8 Lah 281 (1) at p. 300, but in that ruling despite the remark at p. 300 that:

One of the numerous methods of rebuttal is to convince the Court from an examination of other portions of the riwaj-i-am that it has not been compiled in a properly, careful manner or that for other reasons it is not a reliable record, the learned Judge proceeded to lay down that,

The fact that the statement of custom in a riwaj-i-am is not supported by instances does not in itself provide the necessary rebuttal and if on an issue regarding the existence of an exception to a general rule of custom the sole evidence offered is a riwaj-i-am entry without instances, the issue must be decided in accordance with that entry.

In the present case the entry is clear. In the vernacular riwaj-i-am of which a copy has been placed on the file one instance is cited in which collaterals failed to establish their claim in a suit, but it is not stated in what degree the collaterals were. Two mutations among Hindu Jats were cited in which daughters succeeded, but in neither case is it stated whether there were any collaterals. A copy of the original mutation in the first case has been placed on the file and that shows that the girl in whose favour the mutation was sanctioned was an unmarried child of four years so that the instance is of very little force. In addition some witnesses were examined and it is significant that they placed the degree at which collaterals were excluded as the fourth degree presumably because in the present case the collaterals are of the fifth degree. Further one of the plaintiffs' own witnesses, P. W. 5, states that a daughter does not exclude collaterals up to the fourth degree whether the property is ancestral or non-ancestral. Mr. Badri Das for the respondents further points out that one of the defendants' witnesses D. W. 4 states that formerly the Female Infanticide Act was in force in this village and from this circumstance he argues that in such circumstances it is unlikely that any rights would be conceded to daughters.

As regards the argument that the riwaj-i-am has not been accepted in certain cases reference was made, particularly to the unreported case, Civil Appeal No. 475 of 1932 (2), decided on 1st April 1935, in which this riwaj-i-am was adversely criticised. The case related to Sainis and it was held that there was evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the entry in the riwaj-i-am. The respondents' counsel points out however that in at least two cases this statement of custom has been accepted, viz., 15 Lah 586 (3) (dealing with Kambohs of Nakodar) and 1934 Lah 580 (4), a case of Brahmins. It is thus impossible to say that this riwaj-i-am should be discarded in its entirety. Certain answers might be shown to be at variance with the real custom if a sufficient number of instances were produced against the custom as stated, but it would, in my opinion, be unsafe to reject any particular statement in the riwaj-i-am merely on the ground that a custom had been wrongly stated with regard to some other matter. As regards the contention that the custom as stated in this riwaj-i-am is contrary to the general custom of the province, this argument loses its force when we find as pointed out by the learned counsel for the respondents that this identical custom of the exclusion of daughters from succession to non-ancestral property, has been held to prevail among Jats in the neighbouring District of Amritsar: vide 8 Lah 281 (1) and 1933 Lah 899 (5). It is therefore necessary in the present case to see whether there is any evidence to rebut the statement of the custom as given in the answer to question 45 (a) and (b). The instances cited in the present case prove nothing as the necessary details are lacking. Mr. Achhru Ram has further referred to two cases decided by this Court. One is a Single Bench decision reported in 1935 Lah 505 (6). The decision of the District Judge in this case was cited in the lower appellate Court and has been discussed therein. No instances are given and the decision turned on the decision in a previous suit between the parties in which it had been conceded that the plaintiff was not competent to challenge the gift in respect of non-ancestral property. This instance is therefore of little value.

The second case is a decision of a Division Bench reported in 1935 Lah 607 (7), a case among Dosanjah Jats of the Phillaur Tahsil, Jullundur District, who had migrated to Lyallpur. That case was decided in favour of the daughters' rights, it being held that there were six instances in favour of the daughters supported by reliable documentary evidence. Three of these instances it may be noted were among Arains and not among Jats. Of the other three, one was a really strong instance in favour of the daughters' rights. The second was a case in which counsel had conceded that the collaterals could not challenge the gift in respect of self-acquired property. In the third case the brother of the last male holder had consented to the gift in favour of the daughters and it was a remote collateral who attempted to contest it. This case was not cited before the lower Court and the instances given therein cannot, in my opinion, be used as the respondents in the present case had no opportunity of producing evidence to rebut these instances. In my judgment therefore the appellants in the present case have entirely failed to rebut the presumption raised by the entry in the riwaj-i-am and that entry even though unsupported by instances must be accepted until rebutted. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

It is not necessary for him to prove that he has been inconvenienced in excess of any other member of the public who may have the right to use the public highway or that he has suffered some special damage of a kind not common to the public. Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of appeals Nos. 1203 and 1204 of 1935. Two suits were instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge at Ludhiana for a declaration that the street known as Chauri Bihi, situate at village Ram Garh Sardaran, thana Dehlon, tahsil and District Ludhiana, was a public thoroughfare and was used by the plaintiffs and the public in general as of right. It was alleged that on a portion of this street the defendants had built their houses which caused obstruction to the public and to the plaintiffs and a prayer was therefore made for the issue of a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from continuing the obstruction. These suits were defended by two out of the three defendants; defendant 3, Ramzan, appeared in Court and confessed judgment. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suits. Two appeals were preferred to the District Judge by the defendants which have been accepted by him on the main ground that the suits, if considered to have been instituted after obtaining the consent of the Collector under S. 91, Civil P. C., were not maintainable because the consent was defective inasmuch as the Collector had not been specially authorised by the Local Government to give the consent as required by S. 93, and as suits instituted by the plaintiffs as persons aggrieved in their individual capacity were not maintainable in the absence of proof of special damage to the plaintiffs by the alleged obstruction. A question was raised before the learned District Judge that the appeals were barred by time. This was however decided by him in favour of the then appellants.

On these second appeals Mr. Achhru Ram repeated the objection as to limitation. I am however of opinion that there is no force in it. The District Judge has, in my opinion, rightly held that the appeals were not barred by time and in any case gave the benefit of S. 5, Lim. Act, in one of the cases before him. If I had felt any doubt as to the correctness of the view of the learned District Judge that the appeals were not barred by time I would have treated them within time by the application of S. 5, Lim. Act, because in my opinion there is no doubt that any delay that took place in their getting copies of the judgment and the decree was attributable more to the Copying Department of the trial Judge than to the appellants. On the merits of the appeals however in my opinion the appellants must succeed. 4 P R 1895 (1), in which it was held that in the case of a public nuisance an individual alleging himself to be aggrieved is not entitled to maintain an action for the removal of the nuisance unless he can prove special damage both in kind and quantity to him by the nuisance over and above what is suffered by the public generally, was based on 2 Bom 457 (2). In 47 All 151 (3) however the law laid down in the Bombay case was not accepted to be correct by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and since then the Calcutta High. Court in 60 Cal 1003 (4), has expressed the same opinion and this Court, in 16 Lah 517 (5), has laid down that the law enunciated in 4 P R 1895 (1) is not correct. This is what the learned Judges in the Lahore case say :

The principle of English law which requires proof of special damage in such cases is not applicable to India. The learned counsel for the Municipal Committee has relied on 4 P R 1895 (1), where a Bench of the Chief Court, Punjab, held that in order to sustain an action for the removal of an obstruction in a public street it is necessary for the plaintiff to show, not merely that the damage he suffered is greater in degree or frequency than that suffered by the rest of the public, but that it is different in kind. This authority was based on 2 Bom 457 (2) which affirmed the principle that no civil suit in respect of obstruction on the public highways could be maintained unless some particular damage in addition to the general inconvenience occasioned to the public was proved. This judgment however has been disapproved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 47 All 151 (3), which has been followed in 60 Cal 1003 (4). If the foundation falls the superstructure must fall, and we have no hesitation therefore in holding that in face of the Privy Council ruling mentioned above, the Punjab Chief Court judgment is no longer good law.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that in spite of 16 Lah 517 (5), he should follow 4 P R 1895 (1), because the judgment of this Court did not expressly overrule the Chief Court judgment. The remarks quoted above however clearly indicate that a Division Bench of this Court did not consider that the Punjab Chief Court judgment laid down good law; it must therefore be assumed to be no longer binding on the Subordinate Courts. I must follow the judgment of this Court. The effect of this judgment is that the plaintiff in a case like the present must establish that he is entitled to use a public highway which has been obstructed by the defendant and that he is inconvenienced by the obstruction. It is not necessary for him to prove that he has been inconvenienced in excess of any other member of the public who may have the right to use the public highway or that he has suffered some special damage of a kind not common to the public. So long as he can establish an injury, whether it is special injury to him or in common with the other members of the public who are entitled to use the highway, he is, according to the latest authority of this Court, entitled to maintain his suit for the removal of the obstruction.

I must therefore accept the appeals and set aside the decrees of the learned District Judge and remand the cases to him with directions to re-hear the appeals in the light of the observations made above. The learned Judge will consider the question in case he be still of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief claimed by them on the merits what the effect of the confession of judgment by Ramzan is. In view of the above decision I have refrained from discussing whether the consent given by the Collector in this case was sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to maintain the suits under Ss. 91 and 93, Civil P. C., but it seems to me that the view of the learned District Judge on this aspect of the case is correct. The costs of these appeals will abide the result.

Facts.—The pre-emption decree ordered the plaintiff to pay into Court on or before 3rd October 1932, Rs. 4,000 less the amount he had already deposited and (if he did so) get possession of the land as its proprietor, but if he did not make the payment on or before the said date, his suit shall stand dismissed with costs. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Hilton, J.—A preliminary objection is made that this appeal should have been presented to the District Judge. This objection is correct. A case on all fours is 83 P R 1912 (1). The authorities relied upon by the appellant are 16 P R 1908 (2), 7 Lah 570 (3) and 1934 Lah 545 (4). Those authorities lay down the law for suits for rendition of accounts and for redemption of mortgages, but the principles therein enunciated cannot be extended to pre-emption suits, but can only be applied to suits for which the Suits Valuation Act 7 of 1887 lays down no rule for the determination of the jurisdiction value. I would therefore follow 83 P R 1912 (1) and would order that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the appellant for presentation in the proper Court. The costs of the respondents in this Court should be paid by the appellant.

If the branches of a tree growing on neighbour's land overhang one's land and thereby Amar Nath Chopra—for Appellant.

Ram Lal Anand I—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent appears to be a very unreasonable person. He is related to the plaintiff as his uncle. According to the plan Ex. 10 the house shown in green colour belongs to the plaintiff and the one marked yellow to the north of the plaintiff's house belongs to the defendant. In between these two houses there is a vacant site. On this vacant site and near the wall of the plaintiff's house there stands a beri tree. This intervening plot of land is admittedly the joint property of the parties and the tree growing thereon must also be considered as joint property. Some of the branches of this beri tree overhang the northern wall of the plaintiff's house. The plaintiff's case is that he intends to raise the height of the northern wall, but the overhanging branches of the beri tree obstruct him and the defendant does not consent to the removal of the offending branches. The concurrent findings of the two Courts below are that the branches of the beri tree overhang the property of the plaintiff. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendant then went up in appeal and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has allowed the appeal and held that the plaintiff is not entitled to cut the branches of the tree which belong to both the parties and should be enjoyed in common. The plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal and has argued that the decision of the Court below is erroneous. I agree with this contention. The law on the subject is very clear. If the branches of a tree growing on my neighbour's land overhang my land and thereby cause nuisance, I am entitled to lop off those branches. This right is described by the text-writers on the subject as the abatement of nuisance. If authority is needed for this elementary proposition, 43 Bom 164 (1) and 31 Cal 944 (2) may be quoted. This is what the plaintiff could lawfully do, for the branches are causing a nuisance to his property. But the plaintiff proceeded by a more lawful and peaceful method and instead of cutting off the branches with his own hand he instituted the present suit for injunction and asked the assistance of the Court in removing the offending branches. In my opinion the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction asked for.

I therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and restore that of the first Court. The executing Court shall remove the branches which overhang the northern portion of the plaintiff's house, and the costs of this removal shall be defrayed by the defendant. The plaintiff shall get his costs throughout.

* Legitimacy—Legitimacy is question of legal character—Suit for declaration of legitimacy is valid.

The question of legitimacy is a question of legal character within the meaning of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, and there is nothing in S. 42 of the Act to debar a person from claiming a declaration that he is the legitimate son of the defendant: 1928 Lah 833; 35 Cal 777 and 1930 Lah 795 Disting. 34 Bom 676 and 29 Mad 48, Ref. [P 136 C 1]

Badri Das—for Appellant.

Arjan Dev Bagai—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellant instituted a suit for a declaration that he was a legitimate son of the respondent, being born to his wife, Mt. Maqsood Bibi. The necessity for the suit arose because the appellant purchased some property and the respondent instituted a suit to pre-empt that sale alleging that he was entitled to a superior right of pre-emption because the vendee, that is to say, the plaintiff in this case, was his illegitimate son. That suit ultimately did not reach the stage of decision because it had to be withdrawn because a person, who claimed to have a still superior right of pre-emption, claimed to pre-empt the sale. The present suit was decreed by the trial Judge, but it has been dismissed on appeal by the Additional District Judge solely on the ground that a suit like the present is not maintainable. The learned Judge has relied upon two judgments in support of his conclusion: 35 Cal 777 (1) and 1928 Lah 833 (2). An examination of both these cases, however, shows that the respective plaintiffs therein claimed the right to succeed to the property in the hands of the respective defendants after their death. Such suits were held not to be maintainable, mainly on the ground that they were really speculative suits as it could not be asserted with certainty that when the succession opened the plaintiffs would be alive and on this ground those suits were dismissed.

Before me the learned counsel for the appellant relies upon 34 Bom 676 (3) and 29 Mad 48 (4). In both these cases the suits were for a declaration that the defendants were not related to the respective plaintiffs as they had alleged. These cases, therefore, indirectly support the contention of the appellant, but no case has been cited which may be held to be directly applicable to the facts of this case. 1930 Lah 795 (5) was cited for the respondent, but that case was decided on its own peculiar facts and the observations made therein must be confined to such facts. The suit in that case was held to be non-maintainable because it was found that the plaintiff was entitled to a further relief than a mere declaration. At the same time there are some observations in the judgment which might under different circumstances have supported the contention of the respondent, but the facts of the present case are peculiar. Here the direct question involved is the legitimacy of the plaintiff. The defendant's assertion is that he is his illegitimate son and I am inclined to hold that the question of legitimacy is a question of legal character within the meaning of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. Moreover in the present case by virtue of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act the question of the plaintiff's legitimacy is very material to decide whether he does or does not belong to an agricultural tribe in the Punjab. It is undeniable that members of agricultural tribes have in this province by virtue of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act special rights and privileges and the declaration claimed by the plaintiff affects his right under the Act seriously. It is not merely therefore that the plaintiff seeks by this suit a declaration of his relationship to the defendant, but as I have stated above the question relates to the legal character that the plaintiff enjoys as the legitimate son of the defendant and as a member of an agricultural tribe. I hold, therefore, that the case cited on behalf of the respondent is not applicable to the facts of this case and that there is nothing in S. 42, Specific Relief Act, to debar the plaintiff from claiming a declaration that he is the legitimate son of the defendant. As the Additional District Judge has not decided the other points involved in the case it must be remanded to him with directions to re-hear the appeal and to decide it on the merits. I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the Additional District Judge and remand the case to him with directions to re-hear the appeal in accordance with law. Civil Revn. No. 341 of 1935, Decided on 15th October 1935, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 10th April 1935.

* (a) Partnership—Arbitration—Partnership unregistered—Partners referring to arbitration—S. 69 (1), Partnership Act, excludes 'suits' by unregistered firms—Application by unregistered firms under Sch. 2, Para. 20, Civil P. C., is not excluded by the provisions of Partnership Act.

The word used in S. 69 (1), Partnership Act is 'suit' and under Sch. 2, Para. 20, the party is authorised to apply to any Court having jurisdiction and the application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant and the opposite party. Therefore only a suit as understood in forensic language is excluded by S. 69 and not an application such as is contemplated in Para. 20, Sch. 2. [P 137 C 2]

(b) words and Phrases—Suit—No definition of 'suit' in any Act—Suit begins with plaint—Application under Sch. 2, Para. 20, Civil P. C., is not a suit.

The word 'suit' has not been defined, but it has been described in various authorities. One indicia of a suit is that it begins with a plaint. An application under Sch. 2, Para. 20, is not a plaint. The language of the paragraph is entirely against the contention that the application is a plaint. The proceedings may be treated as a suit for certain purposes, but they are not a suit properly so called. [P 137 C 2]

(c) Partnership—Dissolution of—Application to arbitration for dissolution of partnership of unregistered firm under S. 69 (3) (a)—Provisions of S. 69 (1), Partnership Act do not affect proceedings of dissolution.

Under S. 69, sub-S. 3 (a), the provisions of sub-S. (1) are not to affect the enforcing of any right to sue for the dissolution of partnership. Where therefore arbitration proceedings are on the face of them taken for the purposes of the dissolution of partnership of an unregistered firm, the proceedings under Sch. 2, Para. 20, would be protected from the application of S. 69, Partnership Act. (d) Arbitration—Arbitrator fully empowered to make award—Party cannot challenge award, because given in particular way.

Order.—This is an application in revision. It arises out of the following circumstances: Nur Din is the author of a certain book called Lama'at-i-Nur. Qamar Din is a publisher. The author and the publisher entered into an agreement on 25th July 1924. That agreement is on the record. The publisher had agreed to print 3,000 copies and this publication was to constitute the first edition of the work. He was at liberty to publish these 3,000 copies at once or by instalments. It is admitted that the publisher published only 1,000 copies during the ten years that elapsed between the date of the partnership and the dispute which arose between the parties subsequently in 1934. The book, it may be mentioned, was in existence on the date on which the deed of partnership was executed. Differences arose between the parties and on 2nd February 1934 they referred them to the arbitration of Mr. Fazal Din, a Vakil. It is recited in the reference that the parties are desirous of ending the partnership and appoint Mr. Fazal Din, Vakil, as their arbitrator, empowering him to dissolve the partnership and that his decision in respect of all matters in dispute, arising out of the partnership shall be accepted by the partners who would have no right to raise any objection. On 29th June 1934 the award was delivered by the arbitrator. Under this award a sum of Rs. 1,500 was allowed as damages to Nur Din, the author, on the ground that Qamar Din has not published the remaining 2,000 copies. There were two minor items which were not pressed and which may be left out of consideration. On the delivery of this award an application was made on 27th August 1934 by Nur Din in the Court of the Subordinate Judge under the provisions of Sch. 2, Para. 20, Civil P. C., for filing the award with a prayer that the Court may grant a decree in terms of the award. Various objections were filed by Qamar Din, but it is necessary to consider only two of these objections :

(1) That the applicant, namely Nur Din, was precluded under the provisions of S. 69, Partnership Act 9 of 1932, from taking proceedings under Sch. 2, Para. 20 ;

(2) that the arbitrator had exceeded his authority inasmuch as no power was given to him to assess damages, and in spite of the absence of such a power being conferred upon him, he gave a substantial sum of Rs. 1,500 as damages against the respondent Qamar Din ;

(3) the judicial misconduct of the arbitrator was also pleaded.

The trial Court accepted the first two of these objections and setting aside the award, dismissed the application of the applicant, Nur Din. Nur Din went up in appeal to the learned District Judge under the provisions of S. 104 (1) (f), Civil P. C. The learned Judge has held that the proceedings taken by Nur Din, applicant, under Sch. 2, Para. 20, were not obnoxious to the provisions of S. 69, Partnership Act, and further held that under the circumstances of the case the arbitrator could award damages to the applicant against the publisher, Hafiz Qamar Din. As the question of misconduct had not been decided by the trial Court, the learned Judge remanded the case for the decision of that question. Qamar Din has come up to this Court in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. Mr. Akbar Ali, his learned counsel, has argued this application at considerable length, and, I must say, with considerable ability. His case is that under the provisions of S. 69, Partnership Act, Act 9 of 1932, no suit was entertainable by or on behalf of any person suing as a partner in a firm against any person who is alleged to be a partner in the firm unless the firm is registered and the person suing is or has been shown in the Register of firms as a partner in the firm. The partnership in the present case had not admittedly been registered and therefore the applicant could not have recourse to the civil Court by initiating proceedings under Para. 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. This is a highly technical objection and a technical answer can be given to it.

The word used in S. 69 (1), Partnership Act is "suit", and under Sch. 2, Para. 20, the party is authorised to apply to any Court having jurisdiction and the application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant-plaintiff and the opposite party as defendant. It follows therefore that only a "suit" as understood in forensic language was excluded and not an application such as is contemplated in para. 20, Sch. 2. The word "suit" has not been defined, but it has been described in various authorities. One indicia of a suit is that it begins with a plaint. Now it is perfectly clear that an application under Sch. 2, Para. 20, is not a plaint. The language of the paragraph is entirely against the contention that the application is a plaint. The proceedings may be treated as a suit for certain purposes, but they are not a suit properly so called. No direct authority has been pointed out to me contrary to this view and in the absence of such authority I overrule this contention of the learned counsel. I may also point out that under S. 69, sub-S. 3 (a), the provisions of sub-S. 1 are not to affect the enforcing of any right to sue for the dissolution of partnership. The arbitration proceedings were on the face of them taken for the purposes of the dissolution of partnership and on that ground too the proceedings under Sch. 2, Para. 20, would be protected.

As regards the second point, it is true that there is no specific provision either in the deed of partnership of 25th July 1924 or in the agreement to refer to arbitration dated 2nd February 1934 about the assessment of damages ; but Cl. 4 of the deed of partnership is comprehensive enough to cover the awarding of damages. It runs as follows :

The present partnership is confined only to the first edition and the number of copies printed in the first edition is 3,000. Deponent 2 has the option to print the full number of the first edition at once or in two instalments. . . .

Admittedly this was not done and during the ten years that passed between the date of the deed of partnership and the dispute between the parties only 1,000 copies were printed. Before the arbitrator the following statement was made by the publisher Hafiz Qamar Din on 14th March 1934 :

Condition 4 of the deed of partnership is correct. I am ready to publish 2,000 copies according to condition 4 and to sell them if I am given reasonable time. If within the time given I fail to print that number or if I do not print that number at all, then I shall be liable to pay such compensation as the arbitrator might award.

From this it would appear that the publisher admitted the breach and wanted time to make good the breach by supplying the deficiency and publishing the total number. The arbitrator did not give him time. The breach therefore remained and the arbitrator assessed damages for the breach at Rs. 1,500. The sum appears to be somewhat excessive, but an arbitrator has full power and jurisdiction to make his own award and it does not lie in the mouth of the applicant in this Court to challenge the award of the arbitrator on this point. In my opinion the order of the Court below was correct. The question of the judicial misconduct will have to be decided by the proper Tribunal and at the proper time with which I am not concerned ; but, on a consideration of the whole case I have no hesitation in accepting the decision of the two Courts below on the points raised. The application therefore is dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

Sundar—Appellant.

Hiru and others—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1609 of 1934, Decided on 20th May 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 6th July 1934.

(a) Document — Admissibility — Appeal—Document produced after arguments—Opposite party absent—Notice to opposite party held necessary, hence document not properly received in evidence.

A document was produced by a party in the appellate Court after the arguments were completed and in absence of the other party:

Held : that it was necessary that the opposite party should have been given notice of the same and an opportunity to produce any evidence in rebuttal should have been allowed; but as this was not done the document could not be considered to have been properly received in evidence at all. [P 139 C 1]

(b) Landlord and Tenant—Trees on holding—Wajib-ul-arz allowing tenant to cut one tree for marriage or funeral with lambardar's permission—Chil trees allowed to be cut on payment—Terms held not compelling landlord to preserve trees for tenant's use—They could not restrain landlord by injunction to cut trees.

According to the terms of a Wajib-ul-arz the tenant was allowed to cut one tree out of the trees growing on his holding for purposes of marriage or funeral, with the permission of the lambardar and was allowed to cut chil trees on payment:

Held : that there was nothing in the terms of the Wajib-ul-arz to show that the landlord was bound to preserve the trees for the use of the tenant and that the tenant had no such interest in the trees as to restrain the landlord by means of a perpetual injunction from cutting down the trees. [P 139 C 1, 2]

Judgment. — The plaintiffs in this case are the occupancy tenants and certain other residents of the village Guhwar Chhan in Tappa Lohara, while the defendants are the landlords of the village. The landlords sold some pine trees from the village forest land which was not assessed to land revenue. The plaintiffs sued for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from cutting the trees. The trial Court dismissed the suit and its judgment was upheld on appeal by the learned Senior Sub-Judge. From this decision, Sunder, plaintiff, has come up to this Court in second appeal. The pine trees in dispute were found originally to belong to Government and the ownership was transferred to the village proprietors by an agreement between the Government and the proprietors about the year 1868. The terms of the agreement are given at pp. 103 and 104 of the District Gazetteer and are reproduced in the judgment of the learned Senior Sub-Judge. There is no provision in this agreement giving any rights to the occupancy tenants or other residents of the village in respect of the pine trees. The plaintiffs however rely on the Wajib-ul-arz of the village of which a copy (Ex. P. A.) was produced by them in the appellate Court. The learned Senior Sub-Judge has found that even this Wajib-ul-arz does not support the plaintiffs' claim.

The learned counsel for the defendants-respondents however points out that this copy was produced by the plaintiffs in the appellate Court after arguments were completed and in the absence of the defendants. This contention appears to be correct. The learned Senior Sub-Judge has given no reasons for admitting this additional evidence in appeal and in my opinion this copy cannot be considered to have been properly received in evidence at all. The learned counsel for the plaintiff stated that the plaintiffs had originally produced Ex. P. 7, another copy of a Wajib-ul-arz, but that Wajib-ul-arz related to a different village. This mistake was not originally discovered and hence Ex. P. A. was produced in the appellate Court. Even if this be correct and the document was to be admitted it was obviously necessary that the respondents should have been given notice of the same and opportunity to produce any evidence in rebuttal, but this was not done. The appeal must fail on this ground alone. But it seems to me that even the terms of Ex. P. A. do not really support the plaintiffs' claim. The terms of Ex. P. A. on which the plaintiffs rely are as follows : (a) the lambardar was to see that trees were not needlessly cut ; (b) any khewatdar, that is, owner or occupancy tenant, might with the permission of the lambardar cut free of charge one tree for marriage or funeral ceremonies ; (c) he might cut chil trees for any other purpose at Rs. 0.4-0 a tree creditable to the malba fund, but the trees were not to be cut for purposes of trade.

The first term is not relevant; the second merely allows the occupancy tenants to cut one tree on the occasion of marriage or funeral with the permission of the lambardar ; the third term allows them to cut chil trees on payment. There is nothing in these terms to show that the landlords were bound to preserve the pine trees for the use of the occupancy tenants. There is no doubt that the landlords alone were the proprietors of the trees and in my opinion the document relied on is not sufficient to show that the plaintiffs had any such interest in the trees as could enable them to sue for the perpetual injunction prayed for. I may further note that the learned Senior Sub-Judge has found that there was no allegation even that the defendants landlords were entirely doing away with the forest. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Jagannath Aggarwal—for Appellant.

Kishen Dayal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the judgment, dated 12th June 1933, of Dalip Singh, J. The learned Judge set aside the decree of the District Judge and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the appellant Mt. Sattan was not competent to maintain it as she was not an heir under the law of Mitakshara. On behalf of the appellant it was claimed that under Act 2 of 1929 a sister had been given a right to inherit the property of her brother and, therefore, she was entitled to maintain this suit. The learned Judge, however, held that that Act did not apply to her case as Chanan, the Hindu male through whom she claims, died before the passing of the Act. In First Appeal No. 1804 of 1934 (1), we have held that the Act does apply to cases in which a male governed by the law of Mitakshara has died before the date on which the Act came into force leaving a widow who was alive on such date. The consequence is that this appeal must be accepted, the decree of the learned Judge in Chambers set aside and that of the District Judge Civil Revn. No. 405 of 1935, Decided on 17th October 1935, from order of Judge, Small Cause Court, Ludhiana, D/- 15th May 1935.

(a) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 17—Court has discretion to allow time to deposit security by defendant—Defendant cannot postpone depositing of security indefinitely.

The provisions of S. 17 as regards the deposit of the amount due from the defendant under the decree are directory and not mandatory, and that it is open to the Court in appropriate cases to extend the time within which the deposit is to be made. Order.—This application for revision arises out of certain Small Cause Court proceedings. The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery from the defendant of Rs. 99 12-0, the price of certain electric stores supplied by him. On 23rd March 1935 an ex parte decree was passed against the defendants. On the same day an application was made by the defendant Barkat Ram for the setting aside of the ex parte decree. The requisite security under S. 17, Small Cause Courts Act, was not deposited. On 29th March 1935 the word 'zamanat' was endorsed on the application for restoration. Apparently it meant that zamanat (security) should be deposited. This somewhat laconic order was passed in the presence of the applicant. On 1st April 1935 a notice was issued to the plaintiff to appear on 24th April 1935.

On 24th April 1935 the parties were ordered to lead evidence and 15th May 1935 was fixed for the recording of evidence. On that very day the application was dismissed on the ground that security had not been filed within a reasonable time. The applicant defendant has come up to this Court in revision and has offered to pay the security for the first time. If this application were to be granted it would amount to putting a premium upon gross negligence. The Full Bench decision reported in 12 Lah 359 (1) no doubt lays down that the provisions of S. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, as regards the deposit of the amount due from the defendant under the decree, are directory and not mandatory and that it is open to the Court in appropriate cases to extend the time within which the deposit is to be made.

These words in my judgment do not give an unlimited license to the defendant applicant and certainly are no justification for not depositing for an indefinite period the decretal amount as directed by the section. The defendant made his application for restoration on 23rd March 1935 and this application was dismissed on 15th May 1935. At no time during this interval of about two months minus one week did the defendant offer the decretal amount by way of security. It is only in this Court that his learned Counsel has asked permission to do so. According to the Full Bench decision the Court in appropriate cases can allow time for depositing the decretal amount. The Court below in the present case has not thought fit to exercise this discretion and I think rightly. In a matter of discretion, unless there are very special circumstances, this Court is reluctant to interfere with the orders of the Court below. I therefore dismiss this application with costs.

Benarsi Das — Plaintiff — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 408 of 1935, Decided on 25th October 1935, from order of Sub-Judge, 2nd Class, Rawalpindi, D/- 18th March 1935.

(a) Practice—Procedure—Defendant filing written statement—Witnesses summoned but not examined—Defendant taking up new plea of defence going to root of case—Plea should be allowed—High Court can interfere under S. 107, Government of India Act, when plea is not allowed—Rules of procedure ancillary to object of administering justice.

The Courts have to observe the rules of procedure but they must always remember that procedure is only ancillary to the primary objects for which the Courts exist, namely administration of justice between parties, and the Court ought to know that a party can even raise inconsistent pleas or plead in the alternative.

In a certain case the defendant filed a written statement, issues were framed, witnesses were summoned but they were not examined. At this stage defendant raised a plea which if it was true would go to the root of the case which would then be dismissed. The lower Court held that the plea raised was at a late stage and was an entirely new plea that could not be allowed:

Held: that as the case had been raised only at the stage of evidence, the plea, if allowed, would not injure the plaintiff, and being an important plea should be allowed to be raised. [P 141 C 2]

(b) Practice—Revision—Powers of superintendence — High Court can interfere in judicial matter.

Dev Raj Sawhney—for Petitioner.H. L. Bhagat — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This is an unusual application, purporting to have been made under the provisions of S. 107, Government of India Act, 1915. The facts leading up to the present application are as follows: On 26th June 1934 the present suit was filed by the plaintiff for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,200 as arrears of his salary. The defendant filed his written statement on 5th December 1934. On the same date issues were framed, witnesses were summoned but were not examined. On 26th February 1935 the defendant made an application that he should be permitted to raise a plea that the present suit was not maintainable in view of the fact that on 26th February 1934 the matter in controversy between the parties had been settled and decided by an award delivered by one Lala Devi Das. The plaintiff took objection to this new plea being raised at that stage. On 18th March 1935 the Court below dismissed the application of the defendant on the ground that it was belated and was in the nature of an afterthought and inconsistent with the pleas already taken by the defendant in his written statement. The trial Court further observed that the award on which the defendant proposed to rely was indefinite and therefore incapable of execution and that the plea sought to be raised on the basis of that award was prima facie of doubtful merits. The defendant has come up to this Court in revision.

In my opinion the application dated 26th February 1935, though it raised a new plea which was not to be found in the original statement, dated, 5th December 1934, was not belated having regard to the circumstances of the case. No evidence had been recorded. It is true that some witnesses had been summoned, but they were not examined; hence no injury could have been done to the plaintiff. At any rate the plaintiff could have been compensated by awarding costs to him. Furthermore the issue regarding the alleged award would have been a self-contained one and the evidence in support of it and against it would have constituted a compact block quite independent of the other pleas raised in the case. The plea is an important one because, if it is established, it would go to the root of the plaintiff's claim and the suit would be dismissed on this ground alone. The Court below was wrong in animadverting upon the award, when it had shut out the very plea, in deciding which the award would have been the subject-matter of a proper adjudication. The Courts have to observe the rules of procedure, but they must always remember that procedure is only ancillary to the primary objects for which the Courts exist, namely administration of justice between parties. The action of the Court below in this case was unjustifiable and in my opinion the discretion exercised by it was arbitrary. Furthermore, the Court ought to have known that a party can raise inconsistent pleas or plead in the alternative. I therefore, acting under the provisions of S. 107, Government of India Act, allow this application, set aside the order of the Court below dated 18th March 1935 and direct that the plea may be admitted and a proper issue be raised on it and the parties should be given full opportunity to lead relevant evidence thereupon. I have no doubt in my mind that in rare cases, in order to do substantial justice between the parties, this High Court while exercising its powers of superintendence under S. 107, Government of India Act, can interfere in matters which are not merely administrative but judicial. There are a number of reported decisions on the subject, but as an illustration I would refer to 1933 Lah 259 (1). In two cases at least I remember having interfered under S. 107, Government of India Act, in order to enable the Court to promote the interests of justice. Costs would abide the result.

S. L. Puri—for Appellant.Jhanda Singh—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The judgment of the Senior Subordinate Judge is extremely unsatisfactory. One Gian Singh was appointed the guardian of the person and property of his minor brother, Jiwand Singh, on 8th March 1928. Jiwand Singh was born somewhere in September 1916, so that he would now be little more than 19. An application was made that Gian Singh should be removed from his guardianship because of certain malpractices. Thereupon Gian Singh made an application offering to resign the guardianship. Subsequently he made an application withdrawing his resignation, but the Court on 13th October 1934 did not give him permission to withdraw his resignation. The Court removed Gian Singh from the guardianship. After his resignation several applications were made by various other relations of the minor each claiming a right to be appointed as the guardian of the person and property of the minor. The Court below framed the following issues:

1. Whether it is necessary to appoint a guardian of the person and property of Jiwand Singh, minor? 2. If it is, whether any one of the applicants is a proper person to be appointed a guardian?

It was brought out in the course of evidence that Jiwand Singh is mentally deficient and the Court below threw out a suggestion that the District Court should be approached and proceedings under the Lunacy Act 4 of 1912 should be taken. I understand that those proceedings are still pending, but the learned Judge went on to observe that, if the proceedings under the Lunacy Act fell through, it might become necessary to see whether Jiwand Singh's mental condition requires a guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act. This remark is due to a misapprehension because the Guardian and Wards Act does not deal with cases of lunatics. The learned Judge has observed that, because Jiwand Singh is now 19 years old and understands his interests quite well, it is not necessary to appoint a guardian for his person and property and that he would certainly like to manage his property and receive income. This finding is palpably erroneous and is based upon a total ignorance of the law of guardianship. A guardian of the person and property of Jiwand Singh had been appointed on 8th March 1928 by the proper Court. The result of this appointment is that Jiwand Singh would be treated as a minor or infant and would not be able to enter into a contract or to transact any kind of business himself until the age of 21. The learned Counsel for the parties inform me that the minor is possessed of fairly considerable landed property and it would be necessary for him from time to time to grant receipts, etc. Under the law, as I understand, he would not be able to grant a valid receipt or enter into any other contract. The inconvenience therefore is apparent and the estate of the minor would be entirely mismanaged during the interval. Under the circumstances the Court below was in error in refraining from appointing a guardian of the person and property of Jiwan Singh even though he had exceeded the age of 18 years. I therefore allow this appeal and setting aside the order of the Court below direct that Court to make a suitable appointment of a guardian of the person and property of the minor. I make no order as to costs.

Yashpal Gandhi for M. C. Mahajan—for Respondents.

Currie, J.—The sole point arising in these two appeals is the interpretation to be placed on the clause in the wajib-ul-arz of village Makhan Bela in the Alipur tahsil relating to the rights of Adna Maliks in land which has been subject to diluvion. In these cases it was held that the Adna Malik on the re-emergence of the land was entitled to regain possession of the land on payment of Haq Jhuri. The learned Judge who decided the appeal in Chambers adopted this view in consideration of the ruling given in 12 Lah. 318 (1), but expressed certain doubts as regards the interpretation of the wajib-ul-arz. the relevant clause of the wajib-ul-arz runs as follows:

Doom:—Andar Hadud Mauza Burd Baramad Ka Asar:—Is Mauza men do Kism Ki milkiat Adna-o-Ala hai. Jis Malik Adna Ki Zamin burd ho jati hai-to Baramdgi Ke waqt woh Zamin milkiat Malkan-i-ala Ki hoti hai-Malkan Adna Ka is Zamin par Kuchh istehqag nahin rehta. Malkan-i-Ana bad hag dene "Jhuri" Malkan-i-ala Ko mustahaq qabza karneke is zamin per honge, bila dene hag "Jhuri" ko unka kuchh wasta nah hoga. Agar Malkan-i-Ala Jhuri amdan nah leven to Malkan-i-Adna is ragba baramdah par qabza karneke majaz nahin hai, aur Jhuri ka tasfia Malkan-i-Ala-o-Adna hasab haisiat arazi-o-malik Adna ho jata hai. Sharah koikhas muqarrar nahin hai.

I would interpret this as meaning that when the land is submerged the rights of the Adna Malik are extinguished, but on its re-emergence he is entitled to regain possession of it by paying Haq Jhuri. The rate of the Jhuri is not fixed and if the superior owner refuses to accept the Jhuri offered by the Adna Malik the matter is to be determined with due regard to the quality of the land and the capacity of the Adna Malik. That, I think, is the only interpretation that can be put on this clause. Mr. Har Gopal argues that the Ala Malik has an absolute right to refuse to accept Jhuri. If that was so, it would, in my opinion, have been unnecessary to insert in the wajib-ul-arz the condition that the Adna Malik had the right to regain possession on payment of Jhuri, and further the words relating to the method of assessment of the Jhuri in case of dispute would have been entirely unnecessary. These words form part of the same sentence as the words relating to the refusal of the Ala Malik to accept Jhuri and must be read with the first part of the sentence. They cannot be separated into two separate and distinct clauses. In my opinion, therefore, the interpretation placed on this clause by the learned Judge in Chambers was correct and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Order.—On 18th June 1930 the Committee of the notified area of Karnal served a notice on Hari Ram Mahajan of Karnal under S. 195, Punjab Municipal Act, requiring certain shops within the notified area to be demolished. The President of the Committee (the Deputy Commissioner of Karnal) refused to withdraw the notice on a representation made to him by Hari Ram, but on 18th August 1930 gave Hari Ram notice that the Committee was prepared to accept compensation in lieu of the demolition of the buildings. Hari Ram accepted this proposal and asked the President to fix compensation which he would gladly pay. After some negotiations the Committee resolved on 12th November 1931 to fix the amount at Rs. 450 and Hari Ram was informed of this on 20th November 1931. On 23rd January 1932 Hari Ram appealed to the Commissioner against the resolution of 12th November 1931, the ground urged being that the order to pay compensation was not justified because the Committee had no power to levy house tax on the property concerned. The Commissioner rejected the appeal finding that the buildings were within the notified area limits.

On 30th May 1934 the Committee resolved to take action under S. 81, Punjab Municipal Act. Application was made to the local Magistrate accordingly and the Magistrate passed an order for recovery under that section. Against this order Hari Ram presented a petition to the Sessions Judge and the Sessions Judge has recommended that this Court should in exercise of its power of revision set aside the order. The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order is illegal because (1) it is not proved that S. 195, Punjab Municipal Act, has been made applicable to the notified area of Karnal, and (2) that as the buildings were admittedly completed in November 1929, more than six months before notice to demolish them, was given to Hari Ram on 18th June 1930, the notice was ultra vires.

Before me the learned counsel for the Committee points out that Ss. 81 and 195, Punjab Municipal Act, were extended to the notified area of Karnal by Notification No. 11832, dated 29th May 1918, (p. 164 of Part 1-A of the Punjab Gazette). Of this notification the Courts must take judicial notice. The first objection raised by the learned Sessions Judge has therefore no force.

Counsel for the Committee contends that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to question the legality of the Committee's order requiring payment of compensation, his function under the provisions of S. 81, Punjab Municipal Act, being similar to that of a Court executing a decree, the merits of which do not concern him. In reply petitioner's counsel argues that it was the duty of the Magistrate to see that on the facts as stated by the claimant the amount was claimable, that is to say whether the claim was intra vires or ultra vires, and that in this case he should have decided that it was not claimable because the notice to demolish the buildings was not given within six months of the date of their completion. He relies on 2 P R 1910 Cr (1) and 1 P R Cr 1891 (2), in support of this argument. It cannot, I think, be disputed now that a revision petition may be entertained against the Magistrate's order by this Court. This Court has on several occasions interfered in such cases where it has found the action of a Municipal Committee to be ultra vires (e. g., 99 I C 1030 (3) and 1931 Lah 315 (4), as well as 2 P R 1910 Cr (1), already cited).

The question as observed in 1 P R 1891 Cr (2) is how far the Magistrate's enquiry is to extend. The present case is not one in which the Municipality's claim arises out of a contract or out of a relationship of landlord and tenant, 1931 Lah 315 (4), but is to recover an amount claimable under the provisions of S. 195, Municipal Act. In the present case there was the final order of the Commissioner which certainly made the amount legally 'claimable.' If there was a mistake regarding the true date of the completion of the buildings (which the petitioners had stated to be November 1933) the petitioners could have asked the Commissioner to review his order. I do not think it was open to the Magistrate to try the question whether owing to a mistake in procedure the Commissioner's order was incorrect. There are no provisions indicating that the Magistrate is applied to in a judicial capacity when an application is made to him under S. 81, Municipal Act. Had the legislature intended to leave it open to the Magistrate to hold a judicial enquiry some indication of this intention would surely have been made in the section. See the remarks of Blair, J., in 22 All 111 (5). In 1 P R 1891 Cr (2), Roe, J., observed that the position of a Magistrate in such a case is similar to that of a Magistrate recovering under the Criminal Procedure Code a fine passed by another Magistrate. In my view the Magistrate had no authority to determine whether the notice was or was not actually given within six months of the demolition of the buildings and so

Second Appeal No. 890 of 1935, Decided on 18th October 1935, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 2nd February 1935.

Pre-emption—Notification excepting land in Municipal limits from right of pre-emption—Notification covers land brought within Municipal limits after notification.

Notification exempting the limits of a Municipality from the operation of the pre-emption Act is wide enough to cover the areas which may be included within the limits of the Municipality after the date of the notification.

Jai Gopal Sethi—for Appellant.

Achhru Ram—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff appeals against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Lahore dismissing his suit for pre-emption. The land in dispute is admittedly situated within the Municipal limits of Lahore. S. 8, Punjab Pre-emption Act, authorizes the Local Government to declare by notification that in any local area or with respect to any land or property or class of land or property or with respect to any sale or class of sales no right of pre-emption or only such limited right as the Local Government may specify shall exist. By Notification No. 15926 of 11th May 1920 the Local Government directed that no right of pre-emption shall exist within the boundaries of the Municipality of Lahore except in respect of the areas therein defined.

It is admitted that the land in suit is not situated within the limits of the areas excluded from the operation of the notification. But the plaintiff's claim now on appeal is that this area was brought within the limits of the Municipality of Lahore after 1920, i. e. after the date of the notification referred to above, and therefore is not exempt from the right of pre-emption. In the first instance it is a question whether it is open to the appellant to contest that the land in dispute was brought within the limits of the Lahore Municipality after the date of the notification. The learned counsel for the appellant admits that there are only two notifications defining the limits of the Lahore Municipality: one was issued in 1918 and the other in 1923. The plaintiff, examined as a witness, stated that in 1920 the land in dispute had been included within the limits of the Lahore Municipality. The only interpretation of that statement can be that it was brought within the Municipal limits by the notification of 1918 because according to his own counsel there was no notification between 1920 and 1923 extending the limits of the Lahore Municipality. It may however be that the plaintiff was not certain of his ground when he made the statement referred to above, though I am not prepared to believe that he did not understand what he was saying. But the notification exempting the limits of the Lahore Municipality from the operation of the Pre-emption Act is in my opinion wide enough to cover the areas which may be included within the limits of the Lahore Municipality after the date of the notification of 1920.

The learned counsel for the appellant concedes that if the notification had been merely that no right of pre-emption shall exist within the boundaries of the Municipality of Lahore the area now in dispute would have been governed by the notification even if included in such limits after the notification. But his contention is that by virtue of the exceptions mentioned in the notification, the area which may be included after the notification, cannot be held to be governed by it. I am unable to see the force of this argument. Certain portions were expressly excluded from the operation of the notification and admittedly the area now in suit is not so excepted. It is therefore covered by the operative part of the notification which excepts the lands situated within the limits of Lahore Municipality from the operation of the right of pre-emption. In order to escape the effect of the notification the learned counsel must establish that the area in suit was expressly excepted by the Government. Admittedly this has not been done. Consequently there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

 Partnership — Suit for accounts—Partnership dissolved—Account-books in possession of person claiming accounts—Such person can lay suit for accounts.

It is the right of each partner to claim an account of a dissolved partnership and the mere fact that the account-books are in possession of the partner claiming accounts, does not necessarily enable him to find out what the amount due to him would be, because, before this is done various matters have to be decided in the presence of the parties, as for instance, the valuation of the assets including the debts due to the firm is one of the most important matters which has to be decided and the plaintiff alone is not competent to do so; in the alternative the assets must be realised before the accounts can be settled. The plaintiff in such case cannot be expected either to place his own value on the assets of the firm including the debts due to the firm or to realize them before suing for accounts. So a partner who is in possession of the partnership books is competent to maintain a suit for accounts of the dissolved partnership. [P 147 C 1]

J. R. Agnihotri and M. L. Puri—for Appellant.

Amar Nath Chona—for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—The appellant instituted a suit for accounts of a dissolved partnership and impleaded the other partners and the legal representatives of the deceased partners as defendants. Some of the defendants denied that they were partners. Both the Courts below are agreed that the defendants were partners in the firm and are also agreed as to the share that each of them had. The trial Court decreed the suit but the District Judge has, on appeal by one of the defendants or rather the legal representatives of one of the partners, dismissed the suit on the ground that the account-books were in possession of the plaintiff and he was therefore in a position to determine what amount was due to him from the defendants. The learned Judge is of opinion that the plaintiff should have sued for the specific amount alleged to be due to him and should not have sued for rendition of accounts. He has cited some cases in support of his view, but an examination of these cases shows that they related to disputes about accounts between principals and agents and plaintiffs' suits for accounts were held not to be sustainable on the ground that the account-books in such cases were in possession of the respective plaintiffs who could ascertain from them what the amounts due to them were.

No authority has been cited in support of the respondent's attempt to apply the same principle to suits between partners. The right of partners in this respect is defined in S. 257, Contract Act, corresponding to S. 9, Partnership Act. It is the right of each partner to claim an account of a dissolved partnership and the mere fact that the account-books are in possession of the plaintiff does not necessarily enable him to find out what the amount due to him would be because, before this is done, various matters have to be decided in the presence of the parties, as for instance, the valuation of the assets including the debts due to the firm is one of the most important matters which has to be decided and the plaintiff alone is not competent to do so; in the alternative the assets must be realised before the accounts can be settled. The plaintiff in such a case cannot be expected either to place his own value on the assets of the firm including the debts due to the firm or to realize them before suing for accounts. I have indicated one practical difficulty in applying the same principle to suits for accounts between partners as is applied to suits between principal and agents. It is not therefore merely a question of the legal right of each partner to claim an account of a dissolved partnership in Court even if the books are in his possession but there are practical difficulties in his way for himself to determine on a mere inspection of books the amount that would be due to him.

In my opinion the view of the learned District Judge that a partner who is in possession of the partnership books is not competent to maintain a suit for the accounts of the dissolved partnership, is erroneous. Such a right vests in each partner and no authority has been cited to enable me to hold that it does not exist under the circumstances disclosed in this case. I accept this appeal and set aside the decree of the District Judge, and restore that of the trial Judge with costs throughout.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 778 of 1935, Decided on 17th October 1935, from order of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 25th February 1935.

Limitation—New party—Misdescription—Person intended to be sued described wrongly—Plaint amended by correcting proper defendant—Defendant is not new substitution within meaning of S. 22, Limitation Act.

A person wanted to sue one G, who had given a cause of action to the plaintiff. Plaintiff was not aware of the identity of the person of G. A particular G was served, but it appeared that he was not the person whom the plaintiff wanted to sue. So the plaintiff amended the plaint by correcting the description of G and got the right person served. The defendant contended that S. 22, Lim. Act, applied as he was a substituted defendant and the suit was instituted against him on the date when the plaint was amended and on that date the suit was barred by time:

Held: that the case was one not of substitution within S. 22, Lim. Act, but was one of mere misdescription and suit should be held to be instituted against the defendant when the suit was filed; 1932 Lah 314; 1925 Cal 716 and 1924 Cal 74, Disting. [P 148 C 1, 2; P 149 C 1]

J. C. Sethi—for Appellant.

Khalifa Shuja-ud-Din—Respondents.

Judgment.—It is not without hesitation that I have decided to dismiss this appeal. The facts are these: The respondent Dharam Das instituted a suit against Girdhari Lal alleging that the latter had in collusion with his step-mother obtained a fraudulent decree against him and realised some money which belonged to him and which was lying in deposit in Court. He alleged that he was a minor then. The defendant was described to be Girdhari Lal, shopkeeper, Sadar Bazar, cloth-seller, Street Nathan Singh Pahari Dhiraj, Delhi. Summons was issued to the defendant and was served upon Girdhari Lal who answered the description given in the plaint and who, it is alleged, was pointed out by the plaintiff himself. The plaintiff denies that he pointed out any particular person or that he accompanied the process-server. The report of the process-server, however states that the plaintiff accompanied him and pointed out the person and it is signed by the plaintiff. It thus appears that the plaintiff did point out a Girdhari Lal as the person who should be served with summons. When the case came up for hearing Girdhari Lal who had been served with summons appeared in Court and stated that he had nothing to do with any transaction relating to the plaintiff. The latter then realised his mistake and stated that he was not the person whom he intended to sue. He was allowed to amend his plaint and the defendant then was described as Girdhari Lal, son of Faqir Chand, landlord of Mohalla Jattan, Sadar Bazar, Delhi. This defendant was then served and appeared in Court and raised the plea that the suit was barred by time because the plaint as against him must be deemed to have been presented on the day on which it was filed as amended with his correct description and that on that date the normal period for the suit had expired. The trial Court gave effect to this plea but the District Judge on appeal has reversed the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit and has remanded the case for trial on the merits. The defendant Girdhari Lal, on whose objection the suit was originally dismissed as barred by the time, has appealed to this Court.

His contention is that on the facts mentioned above S. 22, Limitation Act applies. That section is where after the institution of a suit a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party. There is no contention that if it be found in this case that a new defendant was added or substituted the suit would be barred by time, but it has been found by the learned District Judge, and is contended by the learned counsel for the respondent, that there is no question of any substitution of a new defendant in this case, and that it was a case of misdescription of the defendant. It does appear that the plaintiff when he originally instituted the suit was not aware of the personal identity of the person against whom he instituted the suit. All that he knew was that he was a Girdhari Lal residing in the Sadar Bazar Delhi. But the ground on which the learned District Judge has held that it was a case of misdescription is that the plaintiff intended to sue the person who realised the money from the Court and he was called Girdhari Lal and the fact that he was not aware of his identity did not matter so long as the suit was instituted in the name of the person who had realised the money.

This argument is met by Mr. Sethi for the appellant by stating that the intention of the plaintiff should be judged by his after-conduct and that the description given in the plaint tallies with the person whom he pointed out subsequently as his defendant and on whom he got service effected, and this clearly shows that he originally intended to sue the Girdhari Lal who was subsequently discharged at his own request and therefore the suit must be deemed to be against a new Girdhari Lal after amendment of the plaint. This argument is a plausible one and has created some difficulty in my mind. At the same time there is force in the contention of the plaintiff-respondent which contention was accepted by the District Judge, that he intended to sue the person who realised the money from Court and admittedly his name was Girdhari Lal and the fact that he impleaded originally a wrong Girdhari Lal, amounts to a misdescription and not the substitution of a new defendant within the meaning of S. 22, Lim. Act. 1932 Lah 314 (1), cited by the appellant's counsel, does not appear to be of material assistance. In that case a wrong legal representative was substituted in place of the deceased party and the real legal representative was brought on the record after the normal period for the appeal had expired. It was held that the legal representative must be deemed to have been brought on the record on the date when the real legal representative was substituted and not when the wrong person was brought on the record. In 52 Cal 783 (2), also cited by Mr. Sethi, the suit was originally brought against the Agent of the Bengal Nagpur Railway.

The plaint was then amended so as to describe the defendant as the Bengal Nagpur Railway and it was held that it was not a case of misdescription of the defendant but of the substitution of a N. C. Pandit—for Appellant.

Judgment.—This petition arises out of certain insolvency proceedings. One Phangan was declared an insolvent on 14th January 1932. On 17th June 1932 he applied for his discharge. Notices were served upon the creditors. On 17th August 1932 the Receiver sold certain materials of a house for a sum of Rs. 100 and the sale was subsequently confirmed. These materials were purchased by Salig Ram, the present applicant. On 15th April 1933 the Receiver made a report to the Insolvency Judge that the sale had been brought about by fraud which was practised upon him, and the property therefore had been sold for a grossly inadequate price. The Receiver stated in this report that the purchaser, who had been appearing as a surety for the insolvent, had given him to understand that the value of the materials was not more than Rs. 25 and that he was purchasing the same for Rs. 100 merely to oblige the debtor. The Insolvency Court set aside the sale. The purchaser, Salig Ram, appealed to the District Judge and it was argued before him that the sale having taken place on 17th August 1932, the report of the receiver for setting aside the sale which was made after a period of about eight months was not entertainable and the order of the trial Court was without jurisdiction. The District Judge overruled this contention. On the question of fact, the District Judge agreed with the Court below and held that the sale had been brought about by misrepresentation and the property had been sold to the appellant for Rs. 100 when it was really worth much more. He accordingly dismissed the appeal. The purchaser, Salig Ram, has come up to this Court. It is unfortunate that neither the receiver nor any one of the creditors was represented in this Court at the time of the arguments. The counsel who appeared for the purchaser, Salig Ram, was not quite clear as regards his legal position whether an appeal lay or not. At one time he suggested that the application in this Court was covered by the first proviso to S. 75, Provincial Insolvency Act. He then argued that he had a right of second appeal under the second proviso though he was reluctant to admit that the present proceedings were taken by the receiver under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act. I however allowed him to argue the question of law which arose in the case.

I must observe at the outset that the reasoning of the District Judge does not appear to me to be sound. His view is that the Court acted under some undefined and inherent powers in entertaining the application, or the report as he calls it, for setting aside the sale. In my opinion the proceedings taken by the receiver fall within the scope of S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, though he himself purported to invoke the inherent powers of the Court. It was urged by the learned counsel that the Insolvency Court should not have entertained the application because it was made long after the date of the sale and that the period of limitation which governed the application is given in S. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act. I do not think that this contention is sound. S. 68 clearly lays down that, if the insolvent or any other creditor or any other person is aggrieved by any act of the receiver, he may apply to the Court, but that such an application must be made within 21 days from the date of the act or decision complained of. In the present case it is quite clear that it was the receiver who was moving the Court against a sale held by himself and his object was to rectify the error which had resulted in the loss to the assets of the debtor, to the detriment of the creditors. Therefore, S. 68 has no application. S. 4 is very wide in its terms and the trend of decisions seems to be to construe it liberally so as to do complete justice between the parties and make a complete and equitable distribution of the property of the insolvent. The learned counsel relied upon a Division Bench decision of this Court reported in 1935 Lah 60 (1). There the learned Judges laid down that even an application under S. 4 should be made within 21 days if it is one to set aside an order of the Official Receiver. This case is clearly distinguishable because it refers to an application which had been made by a party to set aside the order of the Official Receiver under S. 68. In the present case it is the Official Receiver who is moving the Court to set aside the sale which he had himself held on the ground of fraud. Furthermore, in dealing with S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, a Division Bench of this Court, to which I was a party, laid down in 15 Lah 294 (2), vide also 1927 Sind 66 (3), that S. 53 of the Act does not control or restrict the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court by S. 4, to decide all questions of title. S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, strikes at certain transfers, after the transferor is adjudged insolvent by means of a petition presented by the Receiver within two years after the date of the transfer. But, according to the Division Bench decision noted above, when the Court is taking action under S. 4, it can set aside the transfer although made more than two years before the order of adjudication. If the learned Judges in 1935 Lah 60 (1), intended to lay down that the proceedings under S. 4, Insolvency Act, could only be taken within a period of 21 days as provided in S. 68 I would respectfully prefer to follow the Division Bench decision in 15 Lah 294 (2), to which I was a party. The question however does not arise as I have pointed out that the action of the Receiver did not fall within the purview of S. 68. In my opinion the Insolvency Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the application of the Official Receiver in spite of the fact that it was made more than 21 days after the date of the sale. The question of fraud and misrepresentation on the part of the auction-purchaser is a question of fact and was not raised by the counsel for the applicant. I therefore affirm the decision of the lower Court though on different grounds. The present petition is dismissed but without costs as the respondents were not represented.

debtless Act, 1934, came into force. It was represented to the executing Court that under the provisions of S. 34 of that Act, the warrant could no longer be executed. The Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, repelled this objection and ordered the bailiff to execute it, though he added in his order that if the judgment-debtor refused to accompany the bailiff, the bailiff should not touch him or force him to come to Court and should only report his refusal to the Court. Against this decision this appeal has been preferred. S. 34 is quite clear:

No judgment-debtor shall be liable to arrest for default in the payment of any money due under a decree unless the Court is satisfied that the judgment-debtor has, without just cause, contumaciously refused to pay the amount of the decree, in whole or in part, within his capacity to make payment.

There is nothing in this section about the date of issue of the warrant. What the section says is that after 19th April 1935 no judgment-debtor shall be liable to arrest unless the necessary conditions are fulfilled. I therefore accept this appeal, set aside the order of the senior Subordinate Judge and direct that no action be taken under the warrant in question. (b) Hindu Law—Applicability—High caste Hindus in the Punjab.

In the case of high caste Hindus, the first presumption is that they follow Hindu law and not "Punjab Customary law or Agricultural Customary law." [P 152 C 1]

(c) Words and Phrases—Meaning of "Punjab Customary Law"—There is no such thing as Punjab Customary Law in same sense that there is Hindu or Mahomedan Law—It describes certain customs which govern agricultural and village communities in Punjab.

There is no such thing as the Punjab Customary law in the same sense that there is a Hindu law or a Mahomedan law. The expression is nothing more than a convenient phrase for describing certain customs which long experience has shown frequently govern tribes occupied in agriculture and forming compact village communities throughout the Punjab.

Judgment.—These two connected appeals can be disposed of in one judgment. The point arising in the first appeal is whether Gaur Brahmins of village Chiragh in the Delhi Province in the matters of succession of property are governed by a custom which admits the right of representation so far as collateral succession is concerned or whether they are governed by Hindu law by which the nearer kindred would exclude the more remote. The learned appellate Court has held that the parties are governed by custom. In the second appeal the same point arises with reference to village Pahladpur Bangar. In this case also the appellate Court held that the parties were governed by the custom stated above. Certificate of appeal was granted in both cases. The learned counsel for the appellant has cited the following cases, 86 P. R. 1904 (1), a decision concerning the family in the first appeal; 1931 Lah 491 (2), 7 Lah 522 (3), 4 Lah 254 (4),

1. Chuttan v. Ramchand, (1904) 86 P R 1904.
2. Bhagwani v. Sitaram, 1931 Lah 491=134 I C 302=32 P L R 284.
3. Wazir Singh v. Moti Singh, 1926 Lah 395=94 I C 492=7 Lah 522=27 P L R 846.
4. Salig Ram v. Badhawa, 1923 Lah 501=73 I C 759=4 Lah 254.

6 Lah 524 (5) and 99 P R 1909 (6). The learned counsel for the respondents in the first appeal has cited 15 Lah 739 (7) and 137 I C 81 (8). He has also referred to Exs. D-4, D-7, D-1 and 142 I C 284 (9).

The same counsel appeared for the appellants in the second appeal. There is a different counsel for respondents but the arguments are the same in both appeals, with the distinction that, in the second appeal, the parties are not proved to have and it was not contended on their behalf, that they exercised any priestly functions. It may be taken as settled law that, in the case of high caste Hindus, the first presumption is that they follow Hindu law and not what by a convenient phrase is generally called "Punjab Customary law or Agricultural Customary law." It should, however, always be borne in mind that there is no such thing as the Punjab Customary Law in the same sense that there is a Hindu Law or a Muhammadan Law. The expression is nothing more than a convenient phrase for describing certain customs which long experience has shown frequently govern tribes occupied in agriculture and forming compact village communities throughout the Punjab. It must, however, be always remembered that, in the case of any particular tribe, it does not follow that because they are governed in certain cases by certain customs it follows as a matter of course that they have adopted or followed the entire body of customs common to various agricultural tribes. If the position is kept clearly in mind many of the rulings cited really can be shown to apply only to the facts of the particular case. In this appeal the riwaj-i-am is perfectly clear and it states that the answer of all tribes to the question whether in matters of succession they recognise the right of representation was in the affirmative. This being so, according to the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council, 10 Lah 86(10), it follows

5. Khazanchand v. Parasram, 1925 Lah 646=90 I C 1045=5 Lah 524=26 P L R 627.
6. Mansa v. Surta, (1909) 99 P R 1909=16 P L R 1910.
7. Chhajji v. Bhagatram, 1934 Lah 580=148 I C 862=15 Lah 739=35 P L R 383.
8. Thakardas v. Gopaldas, 1932 Lah 326=137 I C 81=33 P L R 257.
9. Badlu v. Umrao Kuer, 1933 Lah 473=142 I C 284=34 P L R 351.
10. Vaishno Detti v. Rameshri, 1928 P C 294=113 I C 1=55 I A 407=10 Lah 86 (PC).

that the onus lies on the person claiming that the riwaj-i-am is wrong.

There is no proof in this case of any instance, judicial or non-judicial, contrary to the statement made in the riwaj-i-am. The learned counsel, however, relies on the fact that these Brahmins, though they form a compact village community or at any rate a large section of one, do not follow agriculture as their main profession. He contends that the parties still exercise priestly functions and that the members of the tribe as a rule depend more on their priestly functions and on service than on agriculture. All this argument, it appears to me, might be a good argument, if an inference was sought to be drawn that these persons followed the custom common to agricultural tribes in the Punjab. But, in this case, it is not necessary to go so far as that at all. The right of representation is recognised in Hindu Law in joint families to a limited extent. It would be an easy step as a modification of Hindu Law that custom should extend the right of representation to collateral succession beyond the joint family. The mere fact that the persons are parties or had nothing to do with agriculture would not, I consider, show that a definite statement made in a riwaj-i-am was wrong nor would it shift the onus cast, by that statement on the party asserting the contrary without proof of much more than a mere hypothetical argument based on the caste of the parties or their occupation. I consider therefore that the appeals fail and they are dismissed with costs accordingly.

Civil Revn. No. 29 of 1935, Decided on 9th October 1935, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Gujrat, D/- 8th October 1934.

* Execution—Decree transferred to another Court for execution—Decree-holder going into liquidation—Official Receiver taking its place applying to transferee Court for execution—As decree does not vest in Official Receiver and he is not transferee of decree he can apply to transferee Court for execution of decree.

A decree obtained by a bank was transferred to another Court for execution. In the meantime the bank went into liquidation and the Official Receiver applied to transferee Court for execution. It was contended that in view of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., the Receiver could not apply to transferee Court for execution but should apply to the Court that passed the decree:

Held: that the Official Liquidator was merely the agent of the Court for the purposes of liquidation of the bank. The decree did not vest in him. He could not take any proceedings in execution in his own name. S. 179, Companies Act, makes it quite clear that the Official Liquidator was not the transferee of the decree and therefore the decree could be executed by the transferee Court on his application made on behalf of the bank in liquidation and in its name.

Achhru Ram—for Petitioner.

Order.—The Lyallpur Bank, Limited, obtained a money decree against the respondent and had the same transferred for execution to Gujrat. The decree was passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Lyallpur. After the decree had been transferred to Gujrat the bank went into liquidation and an Official Liquidator was appointed. The Official Liquidator applied to the Court at Gujrat to execute the decree, but this application has been rejected on the ground that under O. 21, R. 16, an application by the transferee can be made for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it and therefore direct application to the transferee Court was incompetent. The Official Liquidator has appealed to this Court in the name of the Bank and it is contended that O. 21, R. 16, does not apply to the facts of this case as the Official Liquidator does not come within the ambit of the expression 'transferee of the decree.' O. 21, R. 16 provides that where a decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it. Now it is clear that the decree has not been transferred by assignment in writing. I am also clear that it has not been transferred by operation of law. The Official Liquidator is merely the agent of the Court for the purposes of liquidation of the Bank. The decree does not vest in him. He cannot take any proceedings in execution in his own name. On the other hand S. 179, Companies Act, makes it quite clear that the Official Liquidator shall have power with the sanction of the Court inter alia to institute or defend any suit or prosecution or other legal proceedings, civil or criminal, in the name or on behalf of the Company. This leaves no doubt that the Official Liquidator is not the transferee of the decree and therefore the decree could be executed by the Gujrat Court on his application made on behalf of the Bank in liquidation and in its name.

I accept the petition, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of Gujrat and send the proceedings back to him with directions to proceed with the execution of the decree in accordance with law. The respondents shall pay the costs of the petitioner in this Court.

Second Appeal No. 1754 of 1934, Decided on 27th March 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 24th June 1934.

(a) Mortgage—Sale of mortgaged property in execution of mortgage decree—Rights of mortgagee are not extinguished.

When the mortgaged property is sold in execution of a decree obtained on the footing of the mortgage, the rights of the mortgagee are not extinguished as S. 89, T. P. Act, has been repealed by O. 34, Civil P. C.: 1924 P C 206, Expl.; 1922 P C 11, Foll.; 1933 Lah 361, Expl. and Dissent; 1918 P C 34 and 1920 P C 79, Expl. and Disting. [P 154 C 2; P 155 C 1]

(b) Mortgage—Suit by prior usufructuary mortgagee auction-purchaser for possession of mortgaged property as of right—He has claim over puisne mortgagee—Full court-fee need not be paid even if suit is on footing of mortgage.

Where the suit by a usufructuary mortgagee auction-purchaser is a simple suit for possession of mortgaged property he has a prior right to possession against the puisne mortgagee because his mortgage deed is also with possession and is prior to the mortgage deed in favour of the puisne mortgagee. Full court-fee need not be paid even if the suit is on the footing of the mortgage: 1915 L B 49; 1934 Nag 36; 26 Mad 484; 1916 Mad 875 and 1933 Mad 588, Disting. [P 155 C 2]

The puisne mortgagee was however allowed by the High Court to retain possession on payment by him of the sum found due to the prior mortgagee. [P 156 C 2]

Dalip Singh, J.—The facts of this appeal are as follows: On 6th January 1922 one Jaswant Singh mortgaged the house in dispute and other properties which included a shop and three vacant sites to the plaintiff for Rs. 18,000 with possession. Jaswant Singh also executed a rent-deed in favour of the plaintiff and thus retained actual possession of the house. In August 1927 Gurmukh Singh, the plaintiff, sued Jaswant Singh on the footing of the mortgage deed for sale of the mortgaged property. To this suit was impleaded one Mohan Lal to whom Jaswant Singh had sold a shop for Rs. 12,000 on 1st March 1922. In this sale Rupees 9,000 were left with the vendee for payment to the plaintiff-mortgagee in order to complete the sale. One Anand Singh was also made a party to the suit because on 6th March 1922 Jaswant Singh had sold three vacant sites to him for Rs. 12,000; Rs. 9,000 had been left with the vendee in order to redeem Gurmukh Singh. In that suit Gurmukh Singh obtained a decree for about Rs. 32,000, as a charge on the properties, on 5th February 1929. He had not received the Rs. 9,000 left with Mohan Lal or the Rs. 9,000 left with Anand Singh except to the extent of Rs. 1,520 which had been paid by way of interest on the principal sum of Rs. 18,000 and which was given credit for in the decree.

The defendant in the present suit, Sundar Singh, was not made a party to this suit. This Sundar Singh had become mortgagee from Jaswant Singh, the original mortgagor, on 9th July 1925, for a sum of Rs. 4,000. This mortgage was also with possession. Gurmukh Singh proceeded to execute his decree and on 23rd January 1930 the house was sold and was purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 3,600. The sale was confirmed on 16th May 1930. When Gurmukh Singh endeavoured to obtain possession under this sale he was resisted by Sundar Singh, the present defendant, who was in possession.

It appears that Sundar Singh had sued Jaswant Singh on his mortgage on 5th October 1928. He had not impleaded Gurmukh Singh, though it has been held that he was fully aware that Gurmukh Singh was a prior mortgagee. He got a preliminary decree on 21st December 1928 and a final decree on 2nd November 1929. It is alleged that he got possession of the property by collusion with Jaswant Singh, mortgagor.

The objection taken by Sundar Singh was upheld by the executing Court and Gurmukh Singh was referred to a civil suit. He brought the present suit paying a court-fee of Rs. 307-8-0 on the value of the house, which he valued at Rupees 3,600, the sum for which he had purchased it in the auction sale. He referred in his plaint to the fact that he was a prior mortgagee with a right to possession, also that he was the auction-purchaser in the decree on the foot of that mortgage-deed, and that in both capacities he was entitled to possession of the property. It appears that in the trial Court an objection was taken by the counsel for Sundar Singh defendant that the plaintiff Gurmukh Singh had properly valued his suit and paid the proper court-fee if he was suing as auction-purchaser, but that if he was suing as a mortgagee he should pay court-fee on the principal sum of the mortgage, i. e., Rs. 18,000. It appears that in the course of the reply at the end of the case the counsel for the plaintiff made a statement which the Court understood to mean that he abandoned his rights as a prior mortgagee and rested his suit merely on his right as an auction-purchaser. The trial Court thereupon held that a mere auction-purchaser could not oust a puisne mortgagee from possession of the property without redeeming the puisne mortgagee.

In appeal before the learned District Judge the first two grounds taken were that the plaintiff-appellant was mortgagee with possession and as such was entitled to possession against the defendants who were only trespassers, or at best subsequent mortgagees, and that the statement of the counsel was mistaken. The learned District Judge held that the rights of a mortgagee under a mortgage are extinguished when in execution of his decree, obtained on the footing of the mortgage, the mortgaged property is sold. Secondly, that a prior mortgagee who claims possession of a portion of the mortgaged property in possession of a puisne mortgagee, not in his capacity as a prior mortgagee but in his capacity as auction-purchaser of the said property, cannot assert his preferential right as a prior mortgagee against the puisne mortgagee who must be redeemed before he can be asked to deliver possession to the auction-purchaser. He therefore upheld the judgment and decree of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal with costs. The plaintiff has come in second appeal and contends that the first proposition affirmed by the learned District Judge as to the extinction of the rights of a mortgagee is incorrect and he has cited 43 All 469 (1), a Privy Council ruling, in support of his contention. This ruling certainly supports the contention. The learned District Judge had relied on authorities, 40 All 407 (1) and 42 All 364 (3), of their Lordships of the Privy Council, for this proposition. As explained in I L R 43 All 469 (1) by their Lordships of the Privy Council themselves, those rulings were under S. 89, T. P. Act, wherein it was expressly enacted that when the sale had taken place the security was extinguished.

Their Lordships pointed out that that section had been repealed by the enactment of O. 34, Civil P. C., and that these words do not occur in the relevant rules of that order. I therefore consider that this contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is correct. As regards the second proposition it does not seem to me necessary to enter into the question as to the capacity of the auction-purchaser because on the plaint as framed, and as admittedly argued, the suit was based on both capacities, namely that of auction purchaser and prior mortgagee. The statement of the learned counsel in reply before the trial Court was not recorded and possibly there was some misunderstanding on the point. At any rate this was repudiated before the learned District Judge and the counsel who appeared before the learned District Judge also appeared here and stated that he had contended before the learned District Judge that the suit was in both capacities and this was admitted by the junior counsel for the respondent who was present before the learned District Judge.

There is no force whatsoever in the objection that full Court-fee on Rs. 18,000 had to be paid by the mortgagee if the suit was on the footing of the mortgage. The suit was not for sale or foreclosure by the mortgagee. It was simply a suit for possession of certain property to which he alleged he had a prior right to possession because his mortgage deed was also with possession and was prior to the mortgage deed in favour of the defendant. The maximum possible amount of Court-fee that could be demanded from the plaintiff was on the market value of the property in dispute which was Rs. 3,600, which sum was not disputed before the trial Court as adequately representing the value of the house. This Court-fee had been paid, and in the circumstances I do not consider that any mistaken repudiation of the suit in the capacity as a mortgagee, if made by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in answer to this untenable objection of the defendant-respondent, should be held to bind him in the suit.

The question therefore is whether a mortgagee with possession who has obtained a decree in a suit brought on the footing of his mortgage without impleading a puisne mortgagee, also with possession, is entitled to get possession of the property which he has purchased in an auction sale from the puisne mortgagee. It seems to me that there can be only one answer to this question. At no time had the mortgagee lost his right to possession in any way and the right to possession conferred on the second mortgagee by the mortgagor in derogation of his own prior grant to the plaintiff mortgagee could not possibly be held to confer a better title to possession on the subsequent mortgagee. The learned counsel for the defendant-respondent has cited various rulings: 30 I C 710 (4), 1934 Nag 36 (5), 26 Mad 484 (6), 29 I C 916 (7) and 56 Mad 846 (8). But these are all rulings where the first mortgage was without possession and they do not appear to me to have any bearing on a case where the first mortgage is with possession. The learned counsel for the respondent also endeavoured to contend that the possession of the first mortgagee was only a paper possession, but I am unable to see why there was only a paper possession because the mortgagor had executed a rent deed in favour of the mortgagee on the same day as he executed the mortgage. It appears to me that possession passed to the plaintiff mortgagee and nothing whatsoever has been shown in what way he forfeited it or lost it. The learned counsel has also cited 82 I C 794 (9), a Privy Council ruling, and 1933 Lah 361 (10), a Single Bench ruling of this Court, for the proposition that the rights of a mortgagee are extinguished by the property being brought to sale. The headnote of the Privy Council ruling as given in 82 I C 794 (9) is misleading. The word "transaction" in the body of the Privy Council judgment, quoted from the High Court judgment in the case, does not refer to the mortgage at all but refers to a special arrangement made by the mortgagee with the judgment-debtor to hold certain properties in lieu of his interest charges at a certain fixed rate. It seems to me, speaking with all deference, that this headnote misled the learned Judge in 1933 Lah 361 (10). The point was expressly discussed in 43 All 469 (1), also a Privy Council ruling, and it seems to me impossible to hold that if the mortgage charge had ceased to exist their Lordships could speak of it as being used as a shield. I therefore see no force in the contentions urged by the learned counsel for the respondent on this point.

The learned counsel for the respondent further contended that at any rate he was entitled to redeem the prior mortgagee and that he should have been given an option to retain possession by ascertainment of the sum due to the prior mortgagee if he wished to retain possession by payment of the sum found due. I am not certain that this point was clearly raised in his pleadings, but on the merits of the case and in order to shorten litigation between the parties, it seems to me desirable in the interests of justice that a remand should be granted to the Court below for the purpose of ascertaining, what is the sum now due on the footing of the mortgage to the plaintiff, the prior mortgagee, and to pass a decree giving him possession subject to the right of the defendant Sundar Singh, the puisne mortgagee, retaining possession of the property by paying up the sum found due. I would therefore remand the case under O. 41, R. 25, to the trial Court to determine the sum due to the prior mortgagee, the plaintiff, Gurmukh Singh, and for this purpose to allow parties to lead evidence thereon and to return the same with his opinion thereon through the District Judge who will also give his opinion thereon and then return the report to this Court within three months. The parties have been warned to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, on 23rd April 1935, to obtain a date for hearing.

powered by custom to make a gift not only to his daughter, but to his pre-deceased son's daughter. The plaintiffs have come up to the High Court in second appeal on a certificate.

Before us there is no contest as to the gift in favour of Mt. Hapho, counsel admitting that a sonless Arain of Nakodar Tahsil can gift ancestral property to his daughter; nor is there any contest as to the non-ancestral property. The only contest is as to the one-half of Gaman's ancestral property which was gifted to his grand-daughter Mt. Nur Bibi. In view of the Question and Answer No. 90 (A) in Rai Bahadur Hotu Singh's Customary Law of the Jullundur district, the onus was rightly placed on the defendants. The following instances have been cited: three on behalf of the plaintiffs and five on behalf of the defendants:

On behalf of the plaintiffs:

1. Ex. P/8, a judgment by Lala Achhru Ram, Munsiff, dated 24th December 1888.

2. Ex. P/6, a judgment by Lala Munna Lal, Munsiff, dated 30th July 1909. A petition against Lala Munna Lal's judgment was dismissed in kutchha peshi by Reid, J. on 17th May 1910.

3. Ex. P/7, a judgment by Pandit Rajindar Krishna, Subordinate, Judge 4th Class, dated 11th December 1924.

These three instances undoubtedly support the plaintiffs' case.

On the other hand, the respondents rely on (1) a judgment by Lt. Col. B. C. Roe, District Judge of Jullundur, given on 10th March 1926.

Rahmatullah, an Arain of the Nakodar Tahsil had made a will in favour of his pre-deceased son's daughters. It was admitted before the District Judge by respondents' counsel that such a will was valid. The factum of the will was contested, but found in favour of the grand-daughters.

(2) Ex. D/2, a judgment by E. R. Anderson, District Judge of Jullundur, dated 26th May 1927. This judgment cited 133 P R 1906 (1) and also instances given in Prenter's Codification of Custom, Vol. I, p. 206, and held that a gift made by a sonless proprietor in favour of son's daughter and daughter's son was valid by custom.

(3) Ex. D/A, a judgment by Khan Zaka-ud-Din, District Judge of Jullundur, dated 10th August 1929.

1. Bala v. Nur Mohamed, (1906) 133 P R 1906.

(4) They also rely on 133 P R 1906 (1) in which Lal Chand, J., rejected an appeal and upheld a gift by Ambia, an Arain of the Nakodar Tahsil, in favour of his daughter's son and son's daughter who had married his daughter's son. The Judge said,

It is now established beyond doubt that a gift by an Arain of Jullundur District of his entire estate in favour of his daughter's son is valid by custom. It appears to me that there is no distinction in principle where the gift is made in favour of a son's daughter, specially as in the present case, she is married to a daughter's son.

(5) Civil Appeal No. 841 of 1921, decided on 14th April 1924, by a Division Bench of the High Court. The Bench rejected an appeal against the judgment of Khan Bahadur Mirza Zafar Ali, Additional Judge, Jullundur, upholding a gift by an Arain of the Jullundur Tahsil in favour of his daughter and three daughters of his deceased son. The judgment discusses the law at some length and also cites three instances of mutations. In my opinion the instances quoted on behalf of the defendants are more cogent and more authoritative than those quoted for the plaintiffs. They include two judgments by this Court and three judgments by District Judges. Further, it is well-known that among Arains, an endogamous tribe, women hold an unusually favoured position, and there are numerous authorities in which a right to make a gift to daughters, has been upheld. If a man can make a gift to his daughter, it is hard to see why he should not also make a gift in favour of his pre-deceased son's daughter, who in this case must have been brought up as a daughter. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Munshi and others — Plaintiffs and another—Defendant—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 293 of 1934, Decided on 23rd October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 13th November 1933.

Custom (Punjab) — Jats of Garhshanker Tahsil, Hoshiarpur District — Non-ancestral Property — whether daughters preferred to collaterals of 5th degree in succession — (Quaere).

Quaere—There should be a further enquiry on the question of custom whether amongst Jats of Garhshankar Tahsil in the Hoshiarpur District daughters succeed to non-ancestral property in preference to collaterals of the fifth degree: 1933 Lah 107 and 1925 Lah 306, Ref. [P 159 C1]

Achhru Ram—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by collaterals of the 5th degree to challenge a gift made by a widow named Mt. Bhagwani in favour of her daughter, Mt. Kishni. The property has been found to be non-ancestral. The parties are Jats of the village Sahungra, in Garhshankar Tahsil of the Hoshiarpur District. The widow has not been shown to have any power to make a valid gift of the property but it is contended that a daughter has the right to succeed to non-ancestral property in preference to collaterals and hence the gift being merely tantamount to acceleration of succession is valid. This is now the only point for decision in this appeal, which has been filed on behalf of the daughter, Mt. Kishni. The plaintiffs rely upon the answer to question 45 of the Customary Law of the Hoshiarpur District as attested at the last settlement of 1914. The question and the relevant portion of the answer are as follows :

Question 45: Under what circumstances can daughters inherit? If there are sons, widows or near collaterals, do they exclude the daughter? If the collaterals exclude her, is there any fixed limit of relationship within which such near kindred must stand? Answer. Jats of Tahsil Dasuya, Rajputs of Tahsil Garhshankar, Mahatons, Gujars (except the Mohamedan Gujars of Hoshiarpur), Chhangs, Dogars, Awans, Brahmans and Khatris state that a daughter cannot succeed in the presence of heirs up to and including collaterals of any degree. Jats of Tahsil Hoshiarpur and Garhshankar and Kalals say that a daughter can succeed in the absence of heirs up to and including collaterals of the fifth degree. * * *

The learned counsel for the appellant has urged that this answer should be taken to have reference only to ancestral property and has referred to various rulings of the Punjab Chief Court and this High Court in which it has been held that in the absence of any clear indication to the contrary, entries in the riwaj-i-am should be taken to refer to ancestral property only. The learned District Judge has relied however on a judgment of this Court reported as 1933 Lah 107 (1), in which the above answer to question 45 in the Customary Law of the Hoshiarpur District was held to cover self-acquired property as well. That decision was based on a consideration of the answers given to some other questions in the same Customary Law from which it appeared to the learned Judges that the tribesmen examined did make a distinction between self-acquired and ancestral property when such distinction existed, even though the questions were of a general character (see answers to questions 34, 87 and 90). The learned counsel for the appellant has urged that this view is against the trend of previous decisions and should not be accepted and that in any case the entry in the riwaj-i-am being opposed to custom as found to be generally prevalent in the Province, and being unsupported by any instances directly in point, the presumption raised by it is not strong and the onus on the appellant should be considered to be discharged by the evidence on the record. The learned counsel referred to 5 Lah 473 (2), 6 Lah 332 (3) and 10 Lah 249 (4), in which in similar circumstances the burden of proof on the daughters was considered to be light and was held to be discharged by citation of a few instances.

There is no doubt that the entries in riwaj-i-ams are usually taken to refer to ancestral property in the absence of any clear indication to the contrary (see, e. g., 38 P R 1916 (5), 13 Lah 404 (6) and 13 Lah 458 (7)). The answer to question 45 in the present case does not specifically refer to non-ancestral property and the view taken in 1933 Lah 107 (1), does not appear to have been previously taken with reference to this question, though there are some 'obiter' observations to that effect to be found in 6 Lah 332 (3). The questions in reply to which the tribesmen made a distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property, though not specifically asked, appear to be very few. There is therefore justification for the appellant's counsel's contention that his clients could never have expected that the answer to question 45 in the Customary Law would be construed to cover non-ancestral property. The decision of the learned District Judge is practically based only on 1933 Lah 107 (1). There is very little evidence on the record to come to a definite conclusion independently. In fact, what little evidence there is seems to go rather in favour of the appellants, because there are at least two judicial instances relating to the same tribe produced by the appellants while the respondents relied on some oral evidence only, which is worthless. In view of all these facts it seems necessary in the interests of justice that there should be a further enquiry on the question of custom involved, viz., whether amongst Jats of Garhshanker Tahsil in the Hoshiarpur District daughters succeed to non-ancestral property in preference to collaterals of the fifth degree. I would therefore remand the case to the trial Court for an enquiry and finding on this point. The trial Court may appoint a local commissioner to make a local investigation if considered necessary. The parties are directed to appear before the trial Court (Senior Subordinate Judge, Hoshiarpur) on 7th November 1935. Report by 1st February 1936. Objections within ten days and the case should be put for final disposal as soon as possible thereafter.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 19 of 1932, Decided on 16th July 1934, from order of Jai Lal, J., D/- 10th February 1932.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 48—Instalment decree for money—Provision in it that on default of any instalment whole decree would become payable at once—Execution of such decree is governed by latter part of S. 48 (1) (b).

A decree which provides that the whole decree shall become payable in the event of a default in the payment of any instalment is not a decree for money payable on a certain date within the meaning of the first part of S. 48. Such a decree does not cease to be an instalment decree when a default takes place; therefore after 12 years from the date of the default only that instalment will become barred in respect of which the default is made under the latter portion of S. 48: 1928 All 629, Rel on.

(b) Civil P. C., (1908), S. 48 (1) (b)—Instalment decree giving option to decree-holder to execute full decree on default—He may not exercise this option.

Where the terms of an instalment decree give an option to the decree-holder to enforce the penalty for default, the decree-holder should not be deprived of that option. Thus the whole decree does not become payable on the date of the first default leaving no option to the decree-holder in the matter: 1921 Lah 42 and 1930 Lah 124, Foll.

Din Dayal Kapur—for Appellants.

Manohar Lal Suchdev—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—The sole point for decision in this appeal is whether the execution of a compromise decree for Rs. 650 which was payable in six-monthly instalments commencing from 15th February 1917, was barred by the provisions of S. 48, Civil P. C. None of the instalments were admittedly paid. According to the terms of the decree, in default of payment of any instalment, the decree-holder was entitled to realize the whole of the decretal amount at once. The contention of the judgment-debtor was that owing to this default clause the whole decree became capable of execution on the date on which the first instalment was due, i. e., on 15th February 1917, and the present application for execution made on 20th March 1929 was barred under S. 48, Civil P. C., inasmuch as it was made more than 12 years since that date. The Courts below have held that execution was barred with respect to the first instalment, but not with respect to the subsequent instalments and this view has been upheld by a learned Judge of this Court in Chambers. From this decision, the present appeal has been preferred under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent. The learned counsel for the appellant has contended that S. 48, Civil P. C., ought to be construed independently of any judicial decisions with reference to Art. 75 or Art. 182 (7), Lim. Act, and that on a true construction of that section, execution of the whole decree was barred in the present instance. It seems to me however that the wording of that section goes against the appellant. According to Cl. (b) of that section, which is admittedly the only relevant portion for the purposes of this appeal, the 12 years' period is to be computed from

(b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree.

In the present instance the decree being payable by instalments, strictly speaking, only the latter portion of the clause is applicable and according to that portion execution will be barred only with respect to the first instalment, which was not within 12 years from the date of the present application. The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that since there was a default in payment of the first instalment, the whole decree became payable on 15th February 1917 and the period of 12 years should be computed from that date for the whole decree. There is however nothing in the wording of S. 48 itself to support this contention. The only authority directly in point, which the learned counsel was able to cite was 1925 Bom 326 (1). It was held in that case that a decree of this kind ceases to be an instalment-decree when a default takes place and therefore the period of 12 years must be reckoned from the date of default. This view is tantamount to holding that in the event of a default the decree becomes payable 'on a certain date' within the meaning of the first part of S. 48, Civil P. C. With all respect however I must say that this seems to me to be straining the language of the section. The first part of this clause refers to a decree which directs any payment of money, etc., to be made 'at a certain date'. Can it be said that a decree which provides that the whole decree shall become payable in the event of a default in the payment of any instalment, is a decree for money payable 'on a certain date'? When the decree is passed it is uncertain whether a default will take place at all and if so in payment of which of the instalments. It is therefore difficult to see how such a decree could be properly held to be a decree for money payable 'at a certain date,' within the meaning of the first part of S. 48. This was the view taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 51 All 237 (2) with reference to Art. 182 (7), Limitation Act, where the same expression occurs and the reasoning appears to me to be applicable to Cl. (b), S. 48, Civil P. C., as well.

If the above view is correct, it is clear that execution would not be barred in the present case except in respect of the first instalment. But it may be pointed out further that the learned counsel's contention that the whole decree became payable on the date of the first default and left no option to the decree-holder in the matter is opposed to the view taken by this Court as well as by the Punjab Chief Court in a long series of decisions (see 100 P R 1902 (3), 6 P R 1913 (4), 2 Lah 155 (5), 10 L L J 382 (6) and 1930 Lah 124 (7)). The High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta have taken a different view (see, e. g., 21 Cal 542 (8), 53 Cal 277 (9), 27 Bom 1 (10), 42 Bom 728 (11); but the view taken by this Court is in accord with the views of the High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Madras as expressed in 51 All 237 (2), 11 Pat 440 (12) and 36 Mad 66 (13), 49 Mad 403 (14), etc. It seems to me that the construction of a bond or a decree of this kind must depend primarily upon the intention of the parties as disclosed by the terms of the bond or decree, and if these terms clearly give an option to the creditor or the decree-holder to enforce the penalty for default I do not see why the creditor or the decree-holder should be deprived of that option. As pointed out in 2 Lah 155 (5), a provision of this kind is meant for the benefit of the decree-holder and it is for him to decide whether he will take advantage of the option or not. The view taken by this Court receives support from a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 7 Luck 442 (15). That was a case, in which the mortgage deed provided that interest was to be paid annually and in default of payment of interest in any one year, the mortgagee was entitled to realize the entire mortgage-money at once. It was held by their Lordships that a proviso of this nature is meant exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagee and it gave him the option either to enforce the security at once or stand by his investment for the full terms of the mortgage bond. The same principle would, I think, govern the present case. A similar construction appears to have been placed by their Lordships on an instalment-decree in 5 Rangoon 422 (16).

The learned counsel for the appellant urged in the end that even if the decree-holder be held to have had an option in the matter, his mere abstinence to sue for the whole amount was not sufficient to establish "waiver" and hence the decree should be held to have become payable on the date of the first instalment. The question whether "abstinence" when coupled with other circumstances would or would not amount to waiver is largely if not wholly a question of fact. This point was not taken up before the learned Judge in chambers and cannot now be allowed to be raised in this appeal. I would accordingly hold that the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant that the 12 years' period under S. 48, Civil P. C., must be computed from the date of the first default is unsustainable in the circumstances of this case, and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal No. 6 of 1933, Decided on 18th December 1934, from order of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, D/- 1st June 1932.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 32, R. 4—Partition suit—Interest of each litigant is exclusive—Minor sister cannot ordinarily be represented by step-brother.

The interest of every litigant in a partition suit is mutually exclusive and comes, so to say, into direct conflict with that of the other. In such suits, therefore, it cannot be presumed as a matter of course that a minor sister can safely and properly be represented by an adult brother. The interest of one is clearly adverse to that of the other and as such one is legally disqualified to act as the next friend of the other. This remark applies with greater force to a case where the adult brother happens to be the step-brother of his sister: Case law Ref. [P 162 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 41—Father transferring minor son's property—Transferee cannot claim benefit of S. 41.

Minors who have an interest in the property cannot by reason of the disability of infancy give their consent and the adult members of a joint family, including the father of a minor member, are not competent to give on behalf of the minor express or implied consent to a transferee of property of the joint family being the ostensible owner of it, so as to enable a purchaser from him to claim the protection of S. 41: 1931 P C 118, Foll. [P 164 C 1]

Ghulam Mohy-ud-din—for Appellant.

Barkat Ali, Bashir Ahmad for Haji Nabi Bux and Madan Lal—for Respondents 2, 3 and 8.

Din Mohammad, J.—Master Kalloo owned some immovable property at Kasauli and in Delhi. He had married two wives. By one who had pre-deceased him, he had two sons, Mohammad Ismail and Abdul Rahim, and by the other, named Mt. Bashiran, he had two daughters, Mt. Kalsum Begum and Mt. Khurshid alias Bibi. He died in 1918, leaving him surviving his widow and four children named above who were all his heirs under Mohammadan Law. Mt. Bashiran also died in 1921. On 6th January 1923, Abdul Rahim instituted a suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, for partition of the property left by Master Kalloo. In this suit Mohammad Ismail alone was impleaded as defendant, and the two girls, who were admittedly minors then, were arrayed as plaintiffs, but Abdul Rahim himself was shown as their next friend. No reference was made to Mt. Bashiran in the plaint and the whole property was sought to be partitioned among the daughters and sons of Kalloo according to their shares under Mahomedan law. On 12th February, an application was made by Abdul Rahim that there was no dispute between the parties, that the two girls were minors and that he may be allowed to refer the case to arbitration on their behalf also. On the same day the Subordinate Judge granted the necessary permission. It appears that one Sharafuddin was appointed the sole arbitrator in the case and he made his award on 20th March 1923. He allotted separate shares to the two brothers of the face value of Rs. 14,000 each and assigned a house in Delhi jointly to the girls and mentioned its face value also to be Rs. 14,000. On the same day, the award was produced in Court, the statements of Abdul Rahim and Mohammad Ismail were recorded and a decree for partition was passed in accordance with the award.

On 11th April 1924, both Abdul Rahim and Mohammad Ismail sold the property that had fallen to their share at Kasauli in favour of Nabi Baksh; the former for Rs. 15,500 and the latter for Rs. 18,000 respectively. To Abdul Rahim, however, there was still left one house of the face value of Rs. 3,500 situate in the same locality as the house allotted to the girls. It may be mentioned here that one Mohammad Yasin started some litigation in connection with the house that was allotted to the girls and brought the case on appeal to this Court. In the meantime Mt. Khurshid also died leaving behind her husband Mohammad Ramzan.

On 24th June 1931, Mt. Kalsum Begum instituted the present suit impleading all the necessary parties including Mohammad Ramzan and the vendee Nabi Bakhsh and claimed 30/96ths share of her father's property on the ground that since her father's death, she had added to her original share of 14/96ths, the additional 16/96ths on account of her mother's and sister's death. When this suit was pending, notice of Mohammad Yasin's case in this Court was served upon her which put her on her guard and on enquiry she came to know about the previous litigation and amended her plaint with the permission of the Court. She then alleged that she was a minor at the time of the previous suit and was consequently not bound by the decree for partition, as she was not properly represented in that case. Various pleas were raised by the defendants in answer to the plaintiffs' claim, but the share as demanded by her was not disputed. The Senior Subordinate Judge dismissed her suit mainly on the ground that she was bound by the previous decree. Dissatisfied with this decision, she has appealed. We may say at once that the only crucial point in this case is whether or not the plaintiff is bound by the previous decree of 20th March 1923. If she is so bound, she is at once out of Court, but if not, then no law can stand between her and the relief she claims.

It is common ground that both she and her sister were minors in 1923 and in order to bind them therefore with what took place in Courts at that time, it must be shown that all those formalities were duly observed which law has laid down for the protection of minors. Now, R. 4, O. 32, Civil P. C., provides for minor plaintiffs and enacts that any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor provided that his interest is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not a defendant in the case. Let us now apply this test to her case and see whether she was properly represented before the Court in 1923. The suit then was a partition suit in which, as is known, a decree can also be made in favour of every member of the family who is on the record irrespective of the fact whether he is arrayed as plaintiff or defendant. Besides, the interest of every litigant in a partition suit is mutually exclusive and comes, so to say, into direct conflict with that of the other. In such suits therefore it cannot be presumed as a matter of course that a minor sister can safely and properly be represented by an adult brother. The interest of one is clearly adverse to that of the other and as such one is legally disqualified to act as the next friend of the other. This remark applies with greater force to this case as here the adult brother happened to be the step-brother of his sister, and the way in which the two brothers have conducted themselves in that litigation leaves no manner of doubt whatever that they were harbouring a design to rob these fatherless and motherless minors of as much of their patrimony as they possibly could. As pointed out above, not even a remote reference was made to the minors' mother in the plaint and by this omission alone, they succeeded in slicing off 12/96ths of the minor's property and adding it to their own quota. Again by arraying the minors as plaintiffs and, showing himself as their next friend Abdul Rahim made it impossible for any process of Court to be served upon them personally and this was all the more inexcusable, as the respondents themselves have admitted before us that Mt. Kalsum Begam at least was just on the verge of her majority and was even married about a year afterwards. Abdul Rahim, as subsequent events have disclosed, was not anxious to keep the minors' share joint with his own and there is no valid reason why in these circumstances he did not alone figure as plaintiff and implead the minors as defendants. Further the brothers, if honest, could easily have delayed this suit by one year and let the plaintiff attain her majority or secure the protection of her husband. They hurried through everything as otherwise their schemes would have been shattered. They even managed to dispose of the property that fell to their share with hot haste and thus shoved their burden to some other shoulders.

The very division, which was proposed by the arbitrator and which was most innocently accepted by the brothers in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, proved most favourable to them even within the course of a year. One of them made a clean profit of Rs. 4,000 and another, besides making a cash profit of Rs. 1,500, could still reserve a house for himself in Delhi. As against this, the house that jointly fell to the minors' share appears to have been immediately brought into litigation by Mohammad Yasin and was not valued at more than Rs. 5,500 even by that stranger. In the present suit also, its value has not been assessed at any higher figure, and keeping in view the profits made by the two brothers in one year on their own shares, one is forced to an irresistible conclusion that the house allotted to the minor was intentionally over-valued and was under no circumstances worth more than Rs. 5,500 and that the balance of the minors' share was equally misappropriated by both the brothers. Much stress has been laid on the fact that the reference to arbitration was made with the permission of the Court, that subsequently the award was a rule of the Court and that such solemn proceedings should claim every respect. We are however satisfied that the Senior Subordinate Judge did not apply his mind properly to the facts of the case and took no step to ascertain whether the award was or was not to the benefit of the minor. For this omission we hold the adult members of the family chiefly to blame as they scrupulously tried to avoid all suspicion by the omission of the minors' mother from the plaint. We are convinced therefore that the plaintiff was not properly represented in the previous suit and is not consequently bound by the decree of 20th March 1923.

Every case of this nature proceeds on its own facts and it is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule to determine the adverse nature of a next friend's interest. In support of our conclusion however it may be helpful to refer to a few authorities that have been cited before us and particularly to 31 All 572 (1), 46 All 620 (2) and 47 Mad 79 (3). In 31 All 572 (1) one S died leaving two daughters U and R, an illegitimate son A and his brother M, who were entitled under the Mohammadan law to succeed to shares of his estate. M applied for mutation of names in the revenue registers and U, purporting to act on behalf of her minor sister R, opposed the application, and allowed it to be supposed that A was the legitimate son of S. By agreement the dispute was referred to arbitration and the award allotted to each of the claimants respective shares. In some subsequent execution proceedings, conducted at the instance of M, U was appointed guardian ad litem of her minor sister R. On a suit by the minor R their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld her objection that she had not been properly represented throughout the litigation by her own sister and was consequently not bound by what took place then. In 46 All 620 (2), one N had been legally appointed guardian of his minor brothers. In a suit brought by the mortgagees the minors were impleaded under the guardianship of N and a decree obtained. Later the minors sued to set aside the decree and it was held that the interest of N being obviously adverse to that of the minors, they could not be considered as having been properly represented in the suit on the mortgage.

In 47 Mad 79 (3) it was found in the circumstances mentioned in that case that the interest of the father was adverse to that of the minor sons, and that the appointment of the father as guardian was improper and illegal. Reference may with advantage be also made to 56 I C 97 (4), 79 I C 556 (2), 59 I C 31 (5), 55 I C 218 (6) and 1932 All 293 (7). The only other point argued before us is that the vendee at least can claim the benefit of S. 41, T. P. Act. This matter is however concluded by authority. In 53 All 290 (8), it has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council that minors who have an interest in the property cannot by reason of the disability of infancy give their consent, and the adult members of a joint family, including the father of a minor member, are not competent to give on behalf of the minor express or implied consent to a transferee of property of the joint family, being the ostensible owner of it, so as to enable a purchaser from him to claim the protection of S. 41, T. P. Act, 1882. For the reasons given we accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below, and pass a preliminary decree for partition of 30/96ths share in the properties in suit in favour of the appellant. Costs both here and in the Court below will be paid by the respondents other than Mohammad Ramzan and Nabi Baksh.

Judgment.—On 4th January 1928, Harnam Das, the father of the minor defendants, executed, in favour of the plaintiffs, a mortgage of his mortgagee rights in certain trees for the sum of Rs. 570 admitted to be due under a previous account. The registration of the document was refused on the ground that it contravened the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act, and the plaintiffs instituted this suit for the recovery of Rs. 570 due by reason of the failure of consideration through their not being able to have the mortgage completed. In the first instance the trial Court and, on appeal, the District Judge dismissed the suit without examining the merits, holding that though the plaintiffs claimed a refund of their money, the suit must fail as the deed was compulsorily registerable and a suit could not be founded on the acknow-

An appeal was taken to this Court and Mr. Justice Addison remanded the suit for a decision on the merits. He held that the document could be used as the basis of a claim for return of the money acknowledged to be due therein and that it was not necessary to base the claim on the original dealings. He also stated that all defences on the merits, including limitation, ought to be open to the defendant. The case was accordingly tried and was dismissed by the trial Judge on the ground that the plaintiffs clearly came to Court for the recovery of the original debt, and furthermore that, on the date of the execution of the mortgage deed, the original debt was barred by limitation. This decision was upheld on appeal by the learned District Judge. The plaintiffs have now appealed, and the argument presented on their behalf by Mr. Asa Ram is that the mortgage deed of 4th January 1928 gave a new cause of action, first because it involved the promise to pay the Rs. 570 intended to be secured by it, and also because it became a debt of another character, it having been the subject of an arrangement by which it was to be retained by the debtor as consideration for a new transaction. That arrangement failed. The second argument is based on 11 All 47 (1) a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

In the present case it has been found by the learned District Judge that, at the date of the mortgage deed, the claim to recover this sum of Rs. 570 had become barred, the debt having originally been contracted in 1924. I am in agreement with this finding of the learned Judge and consider that he was right in treating it as a separate item which had never come into other accounts which were settled from time to time between the parties. The Allahabad decision is based on S. 65, Contract Act, which compels a person, who has received an advantage under an agreement that becomes void to restore it or make compensation for it. I do not think that it can be said that in the present case Harnam Das received any advantage under the agreement, because in law he could not have been compelled to pay the sum of Rs. 570 secured by it. As the debt for which the mortgage was given was barred by statute there was no consideration for the mortgage. It remains to examine the first proposition that this document contains a promise to pay. This argument is based on S. 25, Contract Act, which makes an agreement made without consideration void, unless it is a promise, made in writing, and signed by the person to be charged therewith . . . to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits.

But it has been decided that nothing short of an express promise can provide a fresh period of limitation, 23 All 502 (2), and I have been unable to find anything anywhere else in the mortgage-deed which could be construed as an express promise. The nature of the whole transaction as well as the terms of the mortgage-deed gives ample ground for implying a promise to pay and I would hold without hesitation that there is such promise. But, as I have said, that is not enough to support the claim. It has been argued that the judgment of Mr. Justice Addison has already decided this point in the plaintiffs' favour, but after a careful perusal of the judgment I have no doubt that this point was not considered by Mr. Justice Addison, and indeed he seems to have refrained from dealing with it. What he says is that it is clear that a suit lies on a non-conditional acknowledgment as it implies a promise to pay and that after failure of existing consideration owing to non-registration or other causes a suit lies for money advanced. He has, therefore, indicated that as this case was presented to him the principle laid down in 11 All 47 (1), might be applicable but he has not considered the fact which has been found to exist, namely that at the date of the mortgage deed the then existing debt was irrecoverable because it was barred by statute. For these reasons I would uphold the findings of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 153 of 1933, Decided on 4th July 1934, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 21st November 1932.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (4) (c) and Sch. 2, Art. 17 (iii).—Mortgage decree and property sold—Suit for declaration by minor son that mortgage-decree and sale are invalid and not binding on him involves consequential relief and suit falls under S. 7 (4) (c).

A suit by a son for a declaration that certain mortgage-decree and sale in execution thereof are invalid and as such not binding on his interest involves a consequential relief and is governed by S. 7 (4) (c), and the fact that the minor has not been personally impleaded in the suit on the mortgage does not make any difference: 1927 P C 56; 1924 All 908; 1929 Pat 741 and 1915 Mad 948, Ref. [P 166 C 2]

Chuni Lal Vohra—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The only question to be decided in this appeal is, whether the value of the suit has been properly assessed for the purposes of court-fee. The grandfather of the plaintiff, Ram Das, mortgaged certain property, now alleged to be ancestral. The mortgagee brought a suit on the mortgage, impleading the sons of Ram Das as his legal representatives. The suit was decreed, and the property was sold in execution. The plaintiff, who is still a minor, seeks a declaration that the decree and sale are invalid as the original mortgage-debt was either fictitious or raised for immoral purposes. He claims that this is a suit for a simple declaration without consequential relief, falling under Art. 17 (iii), Sch. 2, attached to the Court-fees Act, for which a fixed court-fee is prescribed. The trial Court held however that it was a suit embodying consequential relief and so falling under S. 7 (4) (c) of the Act itself, in which case the plaintiff must value his relief and pay duty ad valorem thereon. The plaint was accordingly returned for amendment, and the appeal is against this order.

The only authorities laid before us in support of the plaintiff's contention are decisions relating to suits in which a plaintiff seeks a declaration that an alienation of family property is not binding upon him, which is not quite the same as seeking to avoid both a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property as well as a subsequent sale in execution of the decree. 38 Mad 922 (1) lays down clearly that a suit for a declaration that a mortgage decree is not binding on the plaintiff and for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing the same is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief. The facts were similar to those in the present suit, but the minor plaintiffs had actually been impleaded by name as parties to the suit on the mortgage. In the present instance it does not appear that the minor plaintiff was personally impleaded in the suit brought against his father and uncle, and the question is whether this makes any substantial difference for the purpose of deciding whether the declaration now claimed by the plaintiff involved any consequential relief. In our opinion it does not. When the suit was brought on the mortgage executed by Ram Das, the father of the plaintiff could and should have raised the plea that the mortgage was not binding on the family property, if there was any force in that contention. The plaintiff was a minor at the time and his father was entitled to represent him. In this connection, reference may be made to the decisions cited by the lower Court, 1927 P C 56 (2), 1924 All 908 (3) and 1929 Pat 741 (4). That this was the view taken by the plaintiff himself is shown by the fact that the plaint contained a distinct prayer that the decree should be held to be invalid and that the sale should be held to be void. If the plaintiff seeks these reliefs and cannot merely confine himself to a prayer for a declaration that the decree and the sale are not binding on him as not touching his interest but must seek to have them invalidated, then his suit for a declaration involves consequential relief and the view of the lower Court is correct. For these reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Ferozepore District—Riwaj-i-am, answer 32 — Decree obtained against father—Ancestral property in hands of son not liable to attachment or sale.

Answers to question 32 does not show that there is a special custom in the Ferozepore District which makes ancestral property in the hands of sons liable to attachment and sale in the execution of a money decree against their deceased father. [P 168 C 1]

(b) Res judicata—Constructive—Party admitting certain facts in previous case—Line of attack contrary to previous admission is not permissible.

Judgment.—One Abdul Karim died, leaving him surviving three minor sons, namely Lal Muhammad, Muhammad Munir and Gauhar Ali. The firm Khem Chand-Radha Kishan instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 10,788 against the three minor sons of Abdul Karim on 21st October 1924. On 29th April 1925, the firm Khem Chand-Radha Kishan was granted a decree against the minor sons. The decree-sheet contains the following words :

Digri bazumawari jaidad Abdul Karim mut-waffi ke di jati hai. Muda Alaihim ki eati zumawari nahin hogi.

On 26th May 1925, the decree-holders presented an application for execution of their decree by attachment of certain immoveable properties. The judgment-debtors filed objections on 4th July 1925, to the effect that properties marked A, B, C and D were ancestral and could not be attached under the decree. On 6th August it was stated on behalf of the decree-holders that none of the properties were ancestral. The executing Court thereupon framed two issues, one of which was in the following terms :

Whether the houses in dispute were ancestral qua the judgment-debtors, and hence not attachable and saleable in execution of the decree.

On 1st February 1927, the counsel for the decree-holders made the following statement :

Main taslim karta hum kih makanat A, B, C one-third D ki teh zamin jaddi hai. Unka malba nilam hona chahiye. Un men siraf madyunan ki rihai hai. Main yih bhi taslim karta hun ki un men paidawar wagaira bhi rakhte hain.

The executing Court held houses, A, B, C and one-third of D to be ancestral and released them from attachment. It also held that these houses were used for residential purposes and for purposes subservient to agriculture, and that they were not liable to attachment and sale on that ground also. Properties E, F, G and H were held to be self-acquired properties of Abdul Karim, and were therefore sold in execution of the decree. Both the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors appealed to this Court. Both of these appeals were however dismissed. On 1st November 1932, the decree-holders presented another application for the execution of their decree, and this has given rise to the present appeal. They sought execution of their decree by bringing to sale the land in dispute which is admittedly the ancestral property of Abdul Karim. It was stated that there was a special custom in the Ferozepore District whereby ancestral property in the hands of the sons of the debtor was liable for the debts of their father, and that 4 P R 1913 (1) was therefore not applicable to the present case. The executing Court has held that it has been established that there is a special custom in the Ferozepore District which makes ancestral property in the hands of the sons of the debtor liable to attachment and sale in execution of a simple money decree against their deceased father. The judgment-debtors have come up in appeal to this Court. The lower Court has based its judgment mainly on the Answer to Question 32 in the Customary law of the Ferozepore District which runs in the following terms :

1. Jagdip Singh v. Narayan Singh, (1913) 4 P R 1913=15 I C 866=173 P L R 1912=160 P W R 1912.

Question No. 32: Is a minor whose father is dead and who has inherited the father's estate liable for the father's debt? If such debts are not payable till the minor comes of age, can the property inherited be alienated in the interval?

Answer: All tribes admit that the minor is liable. His liability is of course limited to the estate he inherits.

This identical question occurs in the Customary law of Shahpur District also. It was held by a Division Bench of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1935 (2), that all that the answer to question No. 32 means is that the guardian of a minor can, just as the minor can when he attains majority, pay his father's debts and sell the ancestral land which came to him through his father in order to do so. This answer does not imply that he succeeds his father as his legal representative. It merely implies that the guardian has the same power in the matter of alienation of property as the son has when he attains majority. Question No. 32 forms part of the Chapter dealing with guardianship and minority. I am therefore in respectful agreement with the observations made by the Division Bench referred to above and hold that the answer to question 32 does not show that there is a special custom in the Ferozepore District which makes ancestral property in the hands of sons liable to attachment and sale in the execution of a money decree against their deceased father. During the execution proceedings which took place in the year 1925, it was not asserted by the decree-holders that there was a special custom in the Ferozepore District which made ancestral property liable to attachment and sale in execution of their decree. In fact the statement of the counsel of the decree-holders dated 1st February 1927, shows that the decree-holders at that time admitted that ancestral property was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of their decree. The doctrine of constructive res judicata therefore fully applies to the facts of the present case, and the decree-holders cannot during the present proceedings adopt a line of attack which was not adopted during the earlier execution proceedings, and which, if taken, was given up. It was contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that as the houses A, B, C and D were bound to be released from attachment under S. 60, Civil P. C., during the previous execution proceedings it was not necessary for the decree-holders to plead a special custom. It must however be remembered that a separate issue was framed:

Whether the houses in dispute were ancestral, and hence not attachable and saleable in execution of the decree.

The houses were released from attachment because they were ancestral and not merely because they were used for agricultural purposes. For the reasons given above, I hold that the land in dispute being ancestral is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of the respondents against the appellants. I therefore set aside the order of the executing Court dated 20th January 1935 and accept this appeal with costs throughout.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 5—Appeal lying to High Court filed in District Court—Lower Court decree also not beyond doubt—Respondent also first filing his appeal in District Court—Time during which appeal remained in District Court held should be excluded.

The decree, as framed by the lower Court, was not clearly worded and its exact meaning and significance was by no means beyond doubt. The respondent himself was misled in choosing the wrong forum and it was he who was the first to file his appeal in the District Court instead of the High Court and it was only subsequently that appellant filed his appeal in the District Court within time:

Held: that the provisions of S. 5 were applicable and the period during which the appeal remained pending in the District Court should be excluded. [P 170 C 1]

(b) Mortgage — Redemption—Person purchasing equity of redemption with full knowledge of mortgage in which term of redemption is fixed as 25 years—Term by itself is not clog on equity of redemption.

Where the plaintiff purchases the equity of redemption with full knowledge of the defendants' mortgage, the mere fact that the term of redemption fixed in the deed in favour of the defendant is a long one is by itself not a sufficient ground for supposing that this condition is a clog and should be relieved against.

Where the part of the mortgage money is made under the deed payable forthwith to another by the mortgagee, but the payment is made only subsequently owing to the unexpected events, such money cannot be deemed to have been paid to the mortgagor at the time of the execution of the mortgage nor can the mortgagee be considered as the agent of the mortgagor in respect of payment of such money to another, and as such the mortgagee cannot claim interest on such amount from date of mortgage but only from date of actual payment by him: 1925 Lah 174, Expl.; 1919 Mad 367, and 1930 Mad 382, Disting.; Case law Ref.

Where part of the principal money is made payable by the mortgagee to another forthwith and the mortgagor is entitled to redeem within 20 years, but owing to unexpected events the payment by the mortgagee is made only subsequently, the right to redeem accrues only 20 years from date of actual payment and not from date of mortgage.

But where a tender is actually made but in a medium different from that required by law, the objection to the form of the tender may be expressly or impliedly waived by the creditor and he will be deemed to have waived the objection, if he rejects the tender on other grounds, without making any objection to its legality in point of quality: 34 Cal 805; 1931 Bom 118 and 1929 Mad 290, Rel. on.

M. C. Mahajan, Shamair Chand, Arjan Das and Bhagat Ram Kohli—for Appellants.

Achhru Ram, Bhagu Ram, Ghulam Mohy-ud-din, and J. N. Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—This judgment shall dispose of cross-appeals, Civil Appeal Nos. 344 and 625 of 1928, which arise from a suit for redemption and certain alternative reliefs. The suit was partially decreed by the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Sargodha, on 18th June 1927, and from this decree both parties lodged appeals in the Court of the District Judge within the period prescribed by law for presentation of appeals in that Court. The appeals came up for hearing before the District Judge on 19th January 1928, when he held that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was appealable to the High Court and not to his Court. He accordingly directed that the memoranda of appeal be returned for presentation in the proper Court. The papers were actually returned to the parties on 26th January 1928; and the defendants presented their appeal in this Court on 30th January 1928 (Civil Appeal No. 344 of 1928), and the plaintiff presented his appeal (Civil Appeal No. 625 of 1928), on 13th February 1928.

At the commencement of the hearing before us, a preliminary objection was raised by counsel for the respondent in Civil Appeal No. 344 of 1928 that the appeal was barred by time. After examining the relevant portions of the record and considering the arguments of counsel, we overruled the objection and proceeded to hear the case on the merits. It is conceded that according to recent Full Bench decisions the order of the District Judge, holding that the appeals lay to the High Court, was correct and the appeals should have been presented in this Court within ninety days of the date of the Subordinate Judge's decree. A contrary view however had been taken in some earlier rulings, according to which the valuation fixed in the plaint, which in this case was Rs. 3,500, governed the forum of appeal. Further, the decree, as framed by the Subordinate Judge, was not clearly worded and its exact meaning and significance was by no means beyond doubt. Indeed, the plaintiff-respondent himself appears to have been misled in choosing the wrong forum and, as stated already, it was he who was the first to file his appeal in the District Court. In our opinion this is pre-eminently a case to which the provisions of S. 5, Lim. Act, are applicable. It is conceded that if the period during which the appeals remained pending in the District Court is excluded, both appeals are within time. The preliminary objection has no force and is overruled. Coming to the merits, we find that the land in dispute has been the subject of numerous alienations and considerable litigation during the last sixty years, and it is necessary to set out its history in chronological order. (His lordship then dealt with the history in detail and proceeded to consider the appeal on merits.) From this decree the plaintiff as well as defendants 1 to 9 have appealed. The prayer in the plaintiff's appeal is that he should be granted a decree for immediate possession of the land by redemption, while the defendants in their appeal ask for a total dismissal of the suit.

It will be convenient to take up first the plaintiff's appeal, in which a claim for immediate redemption of the mortgage is made. It is conceded that according to the terms of his mortgage (Ex. P. C.) Maya Das was entitled to remain in actual possession of the entire mortgaged land for twenty-five years or fifty harvests and that this period was to commence from the date when he took possession after redeeming the first mortgagees, Pir Haidar Shah and Malik Sahib Khan, whose term was to expire in June 1895. Before that date, however, Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal had redeemed the first mortgagees and obtained possession, and according to the conditions of their mortgage they were to remain in possession for a period of twenty years commencing with Rabi 1889. Maya Das, alleging that his deed was of an earlier date than that of Jawala Sahai Dhera Mal, sued to recover possession from them, but the Chief Court in 1893 disallowed his claim, holding that their mortgage had priority over his mortgage, and that Maya Das was not entitled to redeem till the period of twenty years fixed in their deed (Ex. P. D.) had run out. It is no longer denied that these twenty years expired in October 1908. It is clear, therefore that the right of Maya Das to enter into possession did not accrue till that date.

This is admitted in very clear terms in para. 9 of the plaint, and after making a half-hearted attempt to explain away this admission Mr. Jagan Nath frankly conceded that the starting point of the twenty-five years' term of the defendants' mortgage is 25th October 1908. He urged, however, that this condition was a clog on the equity of redemption and should not be enforced. As already stated in the litigation ending with the Chief Court judgment of 1893, one of the issues related to the validity of the conditions of the mortgage (Ex. P. C.) and it was then held that these conditions were valid and legally enforceable, and that no fraud or undue influence of any kind had been practised on the mortgagor. Admittedly the plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption with full knowledge of the defendants' mortgage, and the decision of the Chief Court is binding on him. Moreover, the mere fact that the term of redemption fixed in the deed is a long one is by itself not a sufficient ground for supposing that this condition is a clog and should be relieved against. I hold therefore that the contention, that the term of twenty-five years is a clog on the equity of redemption, is without substance and must be overruled.

Mr. Jagan Nath next urged that though the claim for redemption was premature at the date of the institution of the suit as well as at the date of the decree of the lower Court, but counting the period from October 1908 twenty-five years have expired on 25th October 1933 during the pendency of the appeal, and this Court should decree redemption now. In reply Mr. Mehr Chand contended that the period of twenty-five years should begin from August 1918 when the defendants were able to obtain actual possession after lengthy litigation with the second mortgagees. It is quite clear that Maya Das was in no way to blame for the litigation of 1913-18 when his claim for redemption was resisted on grounds, most of which were found to be frivolous and unsustainable. He is therefore entitled to an exclusion of the time during which the suit remained pending, i. e. February 1913 to August 1918, or $5\frac{1}{2}$ years. But Mr. Mehr Chand has not been able to give any satisfactory explanation of the inaction of Maya Das from October 1908 to February 1913, when he could have redeemed the second mortgagees. I do not think therefore that his clients are entitled to exclude this period. As a result of this finding, the mortgage (Ex. P. C.) will be redeemable after the expiry of $5\frac{1}{2}$ years from 25th October 1933, i. e., on 25th April 1939. I hold therefore that the claim for redemption is still premature. Accordingly the plaintiff's appeal (Civil Appeal 625 of 1928) fails and must be dismissed with costs.

In the defendants' appeal the controversy mainly centres on the point, whether under the terms of the mortgage the plaintiff is entitled to reduce the mortgage charge by paying forthwith the interest-bearing portion of the principal sum secured together with the interest accrued thereon, though he cannot redeem the mortgage for some years more. The learned Subordinate Judge has found this issue in favour of the plaintiff and has held that the plaintiff could reduce the mortgage charge by paying off Rs. 1,500 plus interest at Re. 1 per cent per mensem with yearly rests from 2nd July 1918 (when this amount was paid by Maya Das to the second mortgagees) to 13th March 1926, (when the plaintiff tendered the amount by cheque to the sons of Maya Das). On this basis he has calculated the total amount due in this account on the date of decree to be Rs. 3,571. In support of this finding, Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal for the plaintiff-respondent points out that though the principal sum secured on the mortgage in question was Rs. 3,500 it was made up of three items, for each of which the parties had made separate and distinct stipulations, as is clear from the conditions of the mortgage set out in para. (C) above. The first stipulation in Cl. (1), para. (C) created an immediate charge for Rs. 1,500 on one-half of the right to receive the produce which had been reserved to the mortgagor under the first mortgage (Ex. P. A.) in favour of Pir Haider Shah, etc. Cl. (2), authorised Maya Das to redeem the first mortgage from Pir Haider Shah, etc., on payment of Rs. 500 and after redemption divide the produce of the redeemed land with the mortgagor in certain specified shares. Both these items of Rs. 1,500 and 500 did not carry interest. The third item of the consideration consisted of another sum of Rs. 1,500 relating to which there were separate stipulations which are set out in detail in Cls. (3) to (6) above, and it is with this item that we are concerned in this appeal. Cl. (3) provided that :

The remaining sum of Rs. 1,500, shall carry interest from today at the rate of Re. 1 per cent per mensem, and form a charge on the entire mortgaged property; the account as to interest shall be made every year and the mortgagee shall charge interest on interest, and I shall pay the whole sum to the mortgagee within 20 years.

Clauses (4) to (6) lay down the consequences of non-payment of the amount due in this account on the termination of the 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd and 24th years from the date of the execution of the mortgage. Mr. Jagan Nath urges that (1) the sum of Rs. 1,500 referred to in these clauses was the amount which was left with Maya Das, mortgagee for payment to Shankar Das and Thakar Das, the promisees of agreement Ex. P. B., and (2) though it was stipulated that this item would bear interest from "today" (i. e. the date of mortgage) and could be repaid within 20 years from that date, and with certain penalties till the expiry of the 24th year (i. e. on 24th February 1911), but as it was on 2nd July 1918 that Rs. 1,500 was actually paid by Maya

Das to the assignees of Shankar Das and Thakar Das, that date, and not the date of the execution of the mortgage, should be considered to be the starting point for charging interest as well as for computing the period of 24 years, during which repayment could be made by the mortgagor as stipulated.

The contention of Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan for the defendants-appellants, on the other hand, is that the wording of the deed being clear and explicit and open to but one meaning only, the parties must be held bound by the stipulations contained therein, and it is not competent to the Court to speculate as to their supposed intention, and to substantiate therefor fresh and entirely different covenants. Mr. Mehr Chand also made a faint-hearted attempt to argue that the sum of Rs. 1,500 which was to carry interest was not the amount which was payable to the promisees of the agreement Ex. P. B. After hearing him I have no doubt that this argument is without substance. It is apparent from the terms of the mortgage-deed (Ex. P. C.) that the interest bearing portion of the principal amount secured on foot of the mortgage was the sum of Rs. 1,500 which was payable to Shankar Das and Thakar Das, and indeed this was admitted very clearly by Maya Das himself and his pleader on various occasions in the course of the civil and revenue litigation between the parties in 1889 to 1895 (see pp. 48, 50, 52, 54 and 56 of the paper book). It seems that at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed in dispute (Ex. P. C.) both the mortgagor (Ahmad Yar) and the mortgagee (Maya Das) were under the impression that Thakar Das and Shankar Das would have no objection to receive forthwith the sum of Rs. 1,500, and on that assumption it was stipulated that Rs. 1,500 would bear interest from "to-day." It is no doubt true that in the agreement (Ex. P. B.) Ahmad Yar had undertaken to execute a regular mortgage in favour of Shankar Das and Thakar Das on their redeeming the first mortgagees, Pir Haidar Shah and Malik Sahib Khan. But as Shankar Das and Thakar Das were unable to come to any arrangement with the prior mortgagees and the term of whose mortgage was not to expire till 1895, all that Shankar Das and Thakar Das were entitled to receive in February 1887 was Rs. 900, which they had lent to Ahmad Yar in 1882, together with interest thereon, or in all Rs. 1,500 approximately.

This sum of Rs. 1,500 was therefore left in deposit with Maya Das, mortgagee for payment to Shankar Das and Thakar Das and it was expected that they would be paid forthwith, and consequently it was entered in the deed that this "sum of Rs. 1,500 shall carry interest from today." It appears however that Thakar Das and Shankar Das were not willing to accept the money, and soon after transferred their rights under the agreement (Ex. P. B.) to Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal, who lost no time in getting into touch with Ahmad Yar, and in October 1888 persuaded him to execute a mortgage in their favour for a period of 20 years, authorising them to redeem the first mortgagees, Pir Haidar Shah and Malik Sahib Khan. Accordingly Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal, with the concurrence of Ahmad Yar, soon came to terms with the first mortgagees, and having redeemed their mortgage seven years before the expiry of its term, entered into possession. In compliance with the stipulations in his deed (Ex. P. C.) Maya Das offered payment of Rs. 1,500 first to Shankar Das and Thakar Das and then to their transferees, Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal, but neither of them was willing to accept it. Thereupon he put the matter in Court, but the Chief Court found that the mortgage in favour of Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal, though posterior in date to that of Maya Das, had priority over it, and that the latter could not compel them to receive payment of Rs. 1,500 till 1908. The result therefore was that the contemplated payment of Rs. 1,500 could not be made at the time of the execution of Maya Das's mortgage (Ex. P. C.) or within a reasonable time thereafter, as had been anticipated, and it was not till July 1918, that after further litigation, the amount was actually paid to the representatives of Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal.

It must be conceded that Maya Das was not to blame for this long delay in paying Rs. 1,500; indeed he had shown his readiness and willingness to pay by repeatedly making offers, both out of and through Court. But the fact remains that this part of the principal mortgage-money was not actually paid till 31 years after 1887, and I cannot see on what grounds, legal or equitable, can Maya Das or his successors-in-interest claim interest and compound interest on it for that period. It follows therefore that owing to the happening of unexpected events, the stipulation in the deed as to the payment of interest "from today" must be held to have become inoperative and incapable of being enforced according to its literal meaning. Mr. Mehr Chand, however has very ingeniously argued that a mortgage being a transfer of interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan (S. 58, T. P. Act) the unpaid portion of the mortgage-money must be held to have become the property of the mortgagor, which the mortgagee held as the agent of the mortgagor and which the latter was at liberty to draw at any time. From this he asks the Court to conclude that the sum of Rs. 1,500 should be "deemed to have been paid" at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed, and as such capable of bearing interest from that date, and suggests that the equities between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, arising from the circumstance that the money actually remained with the mortgagee for all these years, be adjusted by allowing the former (but not his assignee) compensation by way of damages for the failure of the agent (mortgagee) to invest the amount during this period so as to mitigate the loss to his principal (mortgagor). In support of this contention Mr. Mehr Chand referred to 49 I C 313 (1), 53 Mad 270 (2), and 78 I C 445 (3). The first two rulings however are clearly distinguishable, as in each of them the transaction in dispute was an out and out sale and not a mortgage as is the case here. That on this point there is substantial difference between a sale and a mortgage was pointed out by the House of Lords in the well-known case of the (1898) A C 309 (4). As observed by Lord Herschell in that case, (p. 315) a contract to lend money on the security of certain property is not in its nature a contract of purchase; it is an agreement on the one side to lend money for a term of years, and on the other side to give the lender a specified security for his loan. I am at a loss to see how an agreement of this description can create a debt from the lender to the borrower.

It has accordingly been held that a suit to enforce an agreement to lend money on a mortgage is not maintainable, nor is the mortgagor entitled to bring a suit to compel the mortgagee to advance the unpaid balance of the principal sum secured on the mortgage. See 2 Mad 79 (5); 45 I C 161 (6); 47 Mad 698 (7); 43 Cal 59 (8) and 52 All 1037 (9). The last-mentioned case contains the following observations (at p. 1046) which completely dispose of Mr. Mehr Chand's contention:

A contract to lend is not the same thing as a contract of agency. The mortgagees did not hold in their hands any money belonging to the mortgagor.

Similarly a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held in 33 Bom 426 (10) that:

An agreement to lend money does not create an obligation to pay money * * * It creates no debt, though the breach of it may give rise to a claim for damages.

The headnote of the third case, cited by Mr. Mehr Chand, 78 I C 445 (3) no doubt supports his contention. That was a case decided ex parte on revision by Martineau, J., sitting in Single Bench. The learned Judge held that on the facts of the case (which are not set out in the judgment) there was an implied contract by the mortgagee to pay the whole amount for which the land was mortgaged. He therefore held that the suit by the mortgagor to recover the unpaid balance of the mortgage-money was maintainable. It appears that the decision was based on the peculiar facts of the case, and the head-note is much wider than what was actually decided by the learned Judge. There is no discussion at all of the question in the judgment, and I do not think that that case can be accepted as an authority for the broad proposition urged by the appellants' learned counsel. After carefully considering Mr. Mehr Chand's arguments on this point, I find that there is no force in them and I hold, in agreement with the lower Court, that defendants 1 to 9 are not entitled to charge interest on the sum of Rs. 1,500 from the date of the execution of the mortgage, but that this sum carried interest and compound interest at the stipulated rate from the date on which it was actually paid, i. e. 2nd July 1918.

It necessarily follows from the finding in the preceding paragraph that the period of 20 years mentioned in Cl. (ii) of para. (C) above, within which the mortgagor was allowed to pay off the interest-bearing portion of the mortgage and thus reduce the debt pro tanto is to be computed from 2nd July 1918, and that as that period has not yet expired it is open to the plaintiff, as the successor-in-interest of the mortgagor, to repay, if he so chooses, that amount (Rs. 1,500) together with interest and compound interest at the stipulated rate, even though he is not yet entitled to redeem the mortgage. Mr. Mehr Chand contended that according to the plain reading of the deed this term of 20 years was to run from the date of the mortgage and that in accordance with the conditions in Cls. (4) to (6), para. (C), this right became extinct at the expiry of the 24th year in 1911. It is no doubt true, that this is what was within the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the bargain, but, as has been stated above, certain unforeseen circumstances supervened, with the result that it was not till 2nd July 1918 that the mortgagee was able to advance this part of the principal mortgage-money, and it was from that date that interest thereon became chargeable.

The right of the mortgagor to repay this amount therefore could not possibly accrue before 2nd July 1918. It cannot be denied that the provision in the deed permitting the mortgagor to lighten his burden by piecemeal repayments had been made for his benefit and was a necessary complement to the stipulation that this part of the principal mortgage-money was to bear interest and compound interest at certain specified rates. The intention clearly was that the two provisions were to be enforced simultaneously, one for the benefit of the mortgagee and the other for that of the mortgagor; and it would be absurd to hold that in the changed circumstances one of these provisions became operative from 1918, while the other had been extinguished seven years before it could be given effect to. The contention of the appellants, if accepted, would reserve to the mortgagee the right to charge interest and compound interest on Rs. 1,500 from the date of the advance, but would deny to the mortgagor the concession expressly given to him to reduce his liability by repaying the amount due within 20 years unconditionally and in the succeeding four years with certain penalties which are set out in great detail in the deed. It is quite clear that the appellants wish to approbate and reprobate in the same breath; they wish to pick and choose that which is beneficial to them and reject what is detrimental. This obviously they cannot be allowed to do. There is no doubt that the two conditions are inter-dependent and are inextricably mixed up, and both of them became operative on the date on which the mortgagee actually paid the principal sum. I therefore hold in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, that the terminus a quo of the term of 20 years mentioned in Cl. (3) of para. (C) above is 2nd July 1918 and that it is open to the mortgagor or the plaintiff as his successor-in-interest, to take advantage of the concession allowed to him.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held however that interest on this part of the mortgage-money ceased to run on 13th March 1926, when the plaintiff, through his pleader, sent to defendants 1 to 9 a cheque for Rs. 7,872 with the forwarding letter, Ex. D.3. He has held that having regard to the stipulation in Cl. (3), para. (C) above, this was a valid "tender" of the amount due on the interest-bearing portion of the mortgage-money, and as the defendants rejected it without any lawful excuse, the plaintiff is exonerated from liability for payment of interest and compound interest on Rs. 1,500 from that date. A perusal of the forwarding letter shows that the sum of Rs. 7,872 for which the cheque was sent, consisted of two items: (1) Rupees 6,037 being the amount which the plaintiff then believed to be due on account of the interest-bearing portion of the mortgage, and (2) Rs. 1,835 which the defendants-appellants had paid to the second mortgagees, Jowala Sahai and Dhera Mal, in accordance with the decree of the Chief Court passed in 1918, as the cost of improvements which the latter had effected during the currency of their mortgage. Before considering the legality of the "tender" it is necessary to clear the ground by referring to two matters on which there is no dispute between the parties. It is common ground that the amount actually due on 13th March 1926 on account of the first item was Rs. 3,571 only and not Rs. 6,037, as seems to have been erroneously supposed by the plaintiff and his advisers, who had calculated interest from 1914 instead of 2nd July 1918, when the prior mortgagees were actually paid off. Therefore, so far as this item is concerned, the plaintiff had tendered a larger sum than was really due. As regards the second item both counsel are agreed that the tender was premature. It is conceded by Mr. Jagan Nath that the cost of improvements was payable to the mortgagee at the time of redemption of the mortgage, and as the mortgage had not become redeemable in 1926 the defendants were not bound to accept that amount at the time. It is also to be noted that for payment of the amount, believed to be due on both these items, the plaintiff sent to the defendants a single cheque. On these facts the question arises whether the defendants were justified in rejecting the tender, because

(a) it was made by cheque and not in "current coin;" (b) the amount tendered for the first item was larger than what was really due; and (c) a single cheque was sent for the aggregate amount of both items, only one of which was due, and the other the defendants were not bound to accept.

It is no doubt true that a tender to be valid "must be made in the current coin of the realm" and a tender by cheque is not sufficient. It is however well settled now that where a tender is actually made but in a medium different from that required by law, the objection to the form of the tender may be expressly or impliedly waived by the creditor, and it has been held that he will be deemed to have waived the objection, if he rejects the tender on other grounds, without making any objection to its legality in point of quality. See 34 Cal 305 (11) at p. 310.

where the English and Indian authorities are collected: see also 55 Bom 525 (12) at p. 533, 56 M L J 255 (13) at p. 260 and Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. VII, p. 420. In the case before us, no objection was raised at the time when the cheque was returned by the defendants, as to the medium in which the tender was made, and therefore the tender cannot be held to be bad simply because it was made by cheque and not in coin or currency notes. Nor is there any force in objection (b), as the amount actually offered for the first item was nearly double of what was really due on the date on which the cheque was sent. The forwarding letter, Ex. D. 3, makes it clear that the offer was made subject to accounts being taken at a later stage. It is true that this letter is a long-winded document and contains some statements which the defendants did not and could not accept, but after making full allowances for this circumstance, it is quite clear that so far as this item is concerned the tender was really one made "under protest" and such a tender is not bad in law. The calculations were, of course, incorrect, but the mistake was in favour of the appellants and not against them, and they can have no reasonable grievance on this score. The tender of more than what is due is, of course good, and if any authority is required for this self-evident proposition, reference may be made to 77 E R 232 (14), 100 E R 802 (15) and 45 I C 638 (16).

The third objection, however, is more serious. As stated already, the plaintiff sent a single cheque for two items, only one of which was due at the time, and the other was not to be payable for some years to come. The cheque, being one and indivisible, could be accepted as a whole or not at all. It is clear, therefore, that for this reason the tender was not unconditional and the defendants were within their rights in rejecting it. It is of the essence of a valid tender that it should be "unconditional." If the offer is accompanied by a condition which prevents it from being perfect or complete in itself, it cannot be regarded as equivalent to payment, and the promisee is under no obligation to accept it (S. 38, Contract Act, and 69 I C 273 (17)). I am, therefore, constrained to hold that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is incorrect and that interest on this part of the consideration did not cease on 13th March 1926. But, as already stated, it is still open to the plaintiff to pay the amount due on this part of the mortgage-money in accordance with the provisions of Cls. (iii) to (vi) of para. (C) and reduce the charge accordingly.

The result of the foregoing discussion is that the only relief to which the plaintiff is entitled in this suit is a declaration that he is entitled to reduce the mortgage charge by paying off the interest-bearing portion of the mortgage-money within the period prescribed in the deed, as computed from 2nd July 1918. I would accordingly accept the defendants' appeal (Civil Appeal No. 344 of 1928), set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court, and in lieu thereof pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff declaring that he is entitled to pay off the interest-bearing portion of the mortgage-money (Rs. 1,500) with interest at Re. 1 per cent per mensem and compound interest with yearly rests, calculated from 2nd July 1918, within a period of 20 years from that date and, failing that, within the succeeding four years in the manner and on the conditions mentioned in the mortgage-deed (Ex. P. C.). The rest of the plaintiff's claim is dismissed. Having regard to all the circumstances and particularly the fact, that the appellants had put forward an untenable claim for interest from 1887 to 1918, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs of this appeal. The costs of the suit shall be borne by the parties as ordered by the trial Court.

Bari Doab Bank, Ltd., Hoshiarpur—Respondent.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 610 of 1935, Decided on 10th October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 29th January 1935.

Insolvency—Practice—Intention is to be inferred from circumstances of each case—Person carrying on extensive business disappearing in an unaccountable manner—Intention to defeat creditors, within the meaning of S. 6 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act, is clear.

The question of intention is always a difficult one for Courts to decide and direct evidence in proof of intention is well nigh impossible. Intention is a question of fact and has to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of each case. [P 177 C 1]

In the case of the debtors carrying on at one time a fairly extensive business, to close their place of business and leaving the locality in an unaccountable manner and taking up residence within the territories of a Native State are clear indications of an intention to defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of S. 6 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act. [P 177 C 1]

Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Achhru Ram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—A petition was made originally by the Bari Doab Bank, Limited, Hoshiarpur, against Muni Lal and others for their adjudication as insolvents. There were other creditors, who were impleaded as parties in that application. The Bank entered into a compromise with the debtors and obtained a transfer of some house property in their favour. They did not press the application. Other creditors however applied to carry on the insolvency proceedings against the debtors. A number of points were raised and formed the subject-matter of a long bead-roll of issues. The District Judge recorded findings on these issues and came to the conclusion that the petitioning creditors had made out a case for an order of adjudication. He therefore allowed the application and made an order of adjudication and passed other incidental orders. The debtors have come up to this Court in appeal and their learned counsel has challenged the findings of the Court below on issue 1 (v) and (vi). His argument is that, having regard to the evidence on the record, there was no proof of any intent to defeat or delay the creditors within the meaning of S. 6 (d) (ii) and (iii), Provincial Insolvency Act.

The question of intention is always a difficult one for Courts to decide and direct evidence in proof of intention is well nigh impossible. Intention is a question of fact and has to be inferred from the facts and circumstances of each case. The debtors appear to have been carrying on at one time a fairly extensive business. For such people to close their place of business and leaving the locality in an unaccountable manner and taking residence within the territories of a Native State are clear indications of an intention to defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of S. 6 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act. No other point has been argued by the learned counsel for the appellants. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Municipal Committee, Amritsar — Defendant—Petitioner.

Nanak Chand — Plaintiff — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 303 of 1935, Decided on 17th July 1935, from decree of Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, D/- 5th March 1935.

Punjab Municipal (Executive Officer) Act (1931), S. 6 (2), (4) — Contract for putting up poster on wall affects immovable property — Poster affixed to wall is not moveable encroachment—Executive Officer cannot enter into such contract without sanction of Committee.

A contract for the use of a wall for the purpose of affixing poster thereto is one which affects immovable property. The Committee cannot, for example, demolish the wall without breaking the contract or use it for the same purpose itself. A poster fixed to a wall cannot be regarded as a moveable encroachment. S. 173 (1) (a), Punjab Municipal Act, deals with moveable encroachments in the street which would continue to remain as they are even when the wall is pulled down. The Executive Officer has no legal right to lease out a wall space belonging to the Committee for the purpose of affixing posters without the sanction of the Committee.

Shamair Chand and Sham Das—for Petitioner.

Dev Raj Sawhney—for Opposite Party.

Order. — The plaintiff entered into a contract with the Executive Officer of the Municipal Committee at Amritsar for the use of a wall of a building belonging to the Committee for the purpose of affixing posters thereto. The contract was cancelled and the plaintiff sues the Committee for damages. The only question which calls for decision is whether a contract of this nature is a contract affecting the immovable property so as to bring it within the scope of S. 6 (2) and (4), Punjab Municipal (Executive Officer) Act, 1931. If it is a contract affecting immovable property it must be sanctioned by the Committee, drawn up in writing, and sealed with the common seal of the Committee. No sanction was obtained in the present case, either before or after the contract was made by the Executive Officer so that the contract will not be binding upon the Committee if it is one affecting immovable property.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has taken the view that the contract is not one affecting immovable property and has granted the plaintiff a decree. The question is merely one of interpretation, and it seems to me that the contract for the use of a wall for the purpose of affixing posters thereto is one which affects immovable property. The Committee could not, for example, demolish the wall without breaking the contract or use it for the same purpose itself. A suggestion has been made that the affixing of posters is an act which falls under S. 173 (1) (a), Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, which deals with the grant of permission to place moveable encroachments in a public street. But I do not think that a poster affixed to a wall can be regarded as a moveable encroachment. S. 173 (1) (a) deals with moveable encroachments in the street which would continue to remain as they are even when the wall had been pulled down. For these reasons I am of opinion, that the Executive Officer had no legal right to lease out a wall space belonging to the Committee for the purpose of affixing posters without the sanction of the Committee and that the contract on which the suit is based is not one by which the Committee is bound. I accept the petition for revision and dismiss the suit. In the peculiar circumstances of the case the parties are left to bear their own costs.

Second Appeal No. 24 of 1932, Decided on 28th October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 24th August 1931.

Custom (Punjab)—Succession — Randhawa Jat—Village Khunda, District Gurdaspur—Son formally adopted can succeed collaterally.

Bhide, J.—The only point for decision in this second appeal is:

Whether an adopted son of a childless Randhawa Jat of village Khunda, in the Tahsil and District of Gurdaspur, who has been formally adopted, can succeed collaterally in the adoptive family?

The learned District Judge decided this point in the affirmative, but has granted a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act, on the above point for the purpose of this appeal. In view of the wording of the certificate and the findings of fact of the learned District Judge it must, I think, be assumed for the purpose of this appeal that there has been a "formal" adoption in this case. The learned counsel for the appellants urged that the custom governing the parties does not permit any formal adoption and that it is not open to an individual to change the effect of an adoption merely by making the adoption 'formal.' But this position does not appear to have been specifically taken up in the Court below (vide issues), and there is besides no certificate on the question of the existence of the custom. Although customary appointment of an heir is the usual form of adoption in the Punjab there are reported cases in which it has been found that the adoption was of a formal character, i.e., the relationship created was not merely personal, but it was intended that the adopted son should be transplanted into the adoptive family as in the case of an adoption under Hindu law. It was held in 3 Lah 17 (1) that the main test of a 'formal adoption' under custom is the intention to take out the boy out of his natural family and introduce him into the adoptor's family as his natural son. In the present case the will of Kirpal Singh in pursuance of which the plaintiff was adopted shows that this was the intention and this is also the finding of the learned District Judge which must be taken as final. In 84 P R 1887 (2) it was held that where the intention to make a complete change of family is manifested, the right of collateral succession may be presumed to exist till the contrary is shown. To the same effect is the rule as stated in para 49, Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law.

On the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge, therefore, the presumption was in favour of the existence of the right of the adopted son to succeed collaterally. The riwaj-i-am does not deal with the question specifically but so far as it goes it seems to be in favour of the plaintiff-respondent who claims to be the adopted son. It appears that at the time of the preparation of the latest Customary law of the Gurdaspur District no direct question as regards the right of an adopted son to succeed collaterally was asked, but the author has noted 15 mutations of collateral succession which were discovered, while none was found in which an adopted son was superceded as regards collateral succession (vide p. 44 of the Customary law of the Gurdaspur District, 1913). The mutations relate to different tribes of the district, including Hindu Jats. In the present case four other instances have been produced on behalf of the adopted son. One of these instances relates to Jats. As against these instances the appellants have relied only on one instance, viz., the case reported as 181 P R 1889 (3).

These instances appear to be cases of ordinary customary appointment of an heir. When, however, collateral succession has been allowed even in the case of such adoption in the district, the presumption in favour of such succession in the case of a 'formal' adoption would be still stronger. On the material on the

First Appeal No. 2144 of 1934, Decided on 11th October 1935, from preliminary decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Campbellpur, D/- 30th July 1934.

Court-fees—Appeal against mortgage decree—Appellant praying for declaration that he is agriculturist—Appeal cannot be against one finding but should be against whole decree—Court-fee stamp on memorandum of appeal should be under Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act.

A mortgage decree under O. 34, R. 4, was passed against the defendant who was held to be a non-agriculturist. The defendant claimed that he belonged to an agricultural tribe. Court held against such contention. Defendant appealed against the decision claiming that he be declared an agriculturist. On the appeal he paid a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 only. It was contended that he should be made to pay ad valorem Court-fee stamp on the appeal:

Held: that the defendant had no right to come up in appeal to the High Court merely to get rid of a finding of the trial Court which did not suit him. It was competent to him to appeal only against a decree. Under these circumstances he should pay Court-fee stamp under Art. 1, Sch. 1, of the Court-fees Act: 1926 Lah 408; 30 Mad 96 (FB) and 37 Cal 914, Approved.

Barkat Ali and Mohammad Din Jan—for Appellants.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Abdul Rashid, J.—This appeal has arisen out of an action brought by Tola Ram Singh against Fazal Ahmad and others, for recovery of Rs. 11,460-15-0, principal, interest and compound interest, by the sale of 7 kanals and 6½ marlas of land together with the houses and shops standing thereon situate in the town of Campbellpur on foot of certain mortgages executed by Fazal Ahmad, defendant 1, in favour of the plaintiff. It was stated in the plaint that defendant 1 was a Lohar-Tarkhan by caste. Defendant 1 pleaded, inter alia, that he belonged to a notified agricultural tribe being an Awan by caste, while the plaintiff was a non-agriculturist; that the plaintiff was not entitled to get a decree for the sale of the mortgaged land under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C., but that the defendant had no objection to a money decree for Rs. 6,615 and reasonable interest being passed against him. The trial Court framed eleven issues, but for the purposes of this appeal it is necessary to refer only to two issues which run as follows:

(10) Whether defendant, Fazal Ahmad, is a member of an agricultural tribe and plaintiff cannot, therefore, get a decree for the sale of the land besides the sites of the houses and shops on the land and besides the houses and shops? Onus on defendant Fazal Ahmad.

(11) Whether the houses and shops and the sites underneath them referred to in issue No. 10 fall within the definition of land and plaintiff cannot get a decree for sale as regards them also? Onus on defendants.

The trial Court held that defendant 1, is a Lohar-Tarkhan by caste and that he has failed to prove that he is an Awan, or that he belongs to any other tribe notified as an agricultural tribe in the Campbellpur District. It was further held that the land under the houses and the shops could not be regarded as land within the purview of the Alienation of Land Act. As a result of this finding the plaintiff was granted a preliminary decree for Rs. 11,460-15-0 together with costs and future interest realisable by the sale of the mortgaged property under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C. Against this decree defendant 1 and his two brothers have preferred an appeal to this Court. The memorandum of appeal presented by Mr. Barkat Ali contains the following prayer:

It may be declared that the appellants are Awans and that, therefore, the lands cannot be sold in execution. It is also prayed that Rs. 1,350 out of interest may be disallowed.

A Court-fee of Rs. 10 was paid so far as the prayer for being declared Awans was concerned, and ad valorem Court-fee was paid on Rs. 1,350 so far as the prayer for the disallowance of interest was concerned. At the hearing a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent that there has been no proper presentation of this appeal which ought to bear an ad valorem Court-fee stamp on the total decretal amount or, if the value of the mortgaged property is less than the decretal amount, then ad valorem Court-fee stamp on the value of the property. It was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent that the object of the appeal was to save the hypothecated property from being sold in execution of the decree, and that it was not competent to the appellant in appeal merely to ask for a finding that he be declared to be an Awan. Reference was made in this connexion to a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported as 7 Lah 215 (1). In that case the plaintiff sued his original vendees and subsequent transferees for the balance of the price of a house and shop which he had sold, and obtained a decree under which he was entitled to realise a portion of the decretal amount by sale of the shop of which defendant A was the last transferee. A appealed against so much of the decree as rendered his principal liable and sought that he should be released from the decree. It was held in that case that the proper stamp for the purposes of Court-fee on the appeal was one ad valorem on the value of the decree not exceeding however the value of the shop. It was held in a Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court reported as 30 Mad 96 (2), that where the appellant in an appeal against a mortgage decree does not dispute the amount decreed but raises the question of the liability of certain properties for the decretal amount, the value of the appeal for the purposes of court-fee under Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act, is the value of such property when such value is less than the amount decreed, and when such value exceeds the amount decreed, such decretal amount. The Calcutta High Court in 37 Cal 914 (3) held that where the appellant in an appeal against a mortgage decree does not dispute the amount decreed but raises the question of the liability of certain properties, the value of the appeal for the purposes of Court-fee is the value of such property. Sch. 2, Art. 17, Cl. (6), Court-fees Act has no application to such a case. The Patna High Court and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner at Nagpur have also taken the same view.

The learned counsel for the appellants

contended that his main object in appeal was to get a finding from this Court that he was a member of a notified agricultural tribe, being an Awan, and that if he succeeded in getting this finding or a declaration to this effect his land would not be liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree in view of the provisions of S. 16, Alienation of Land Act. The learned counsel submitted that he could ignore the mortgage decree if he succeeded in establishing in appeal that he was a member of an agricultural tribe. Reliance was placed by him on a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported as 34 P L R 523 (4), where it was held that under S. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe could not be sold in execution even though a decree had been obtained by the mortgagee for sale of such land on the foot of a mortgage. It was further urged that the prayer of the appellant to the effect that the lands cannot be sold in execution was a mere surplusage and that the effective portion of the prayer was that a finding may be given that the appellant was an Awan. Reference was made in this connexion to 3 Pat 795 (5) and 32 P L R 854 (6).

It appears to me that the authorities relied upon by the appellant's counsel are of no assistance in this case. The appellant has no right to come up in appeal to this Court merely to get rid of a finding of the trial Court which does not suit him. It is competent to him to appeal only against a decree, and the decree makes the mortgaged property liable to sale. In substance therefore he is challenging the mortgage decree and praying that a simple money decree might be passed against him. Under these circumstances the authorities relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondent are fully applicable to the facts of the present case. I would therefore hold that apart from the appeal relating to interest there is no proper appeal before this Court. The decretal amount of Rupees 11,460-15-0 consists of Rs. 7,000 on account of principal and Rs. 4,460-15-0 on account of interest. The prayer of the appellant is that the amount of interest may be reduced by Rs. 1,350. He has paid ad valorem Court-fee on this amount. The learned counsel for the respondent has agreed to give up interest to the extent of Rs. 1,350. The decretal amount will therefore be reduced by the sum of Rs. 1,350. The cross-objections with respect to future interest have also been given up by the learned counsel for the respondent. For the reasons given above, I would accept the appeal only in so far as to reduce the decretal amount by Rupees 1,350, and dismiss the appeal in all other respects. The cross-objections will also stand dismissed without costs. I would award the respondent half of his appellate costs in this Court.

Misc. First Appeal No. 945 of 1935, Decided on 14th November 1935, from order of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, D/- 8th April 1935.

Rateable Distribution—Decree-holder purchaser—Entire decree satisfied by bid and excess paid by him in Court—Another decree-holder of same judgment-debtor applying for rateable distribution after auction but before excess deposited—Court holding him entitled to share—Order held passed under S. 73 and not under S. 47, Civil P. C., hence not appealable.

A decree-holder purchased the property of his judgment-debtor in execution of his decree. By the amount of his bid the entire amount of his decree was satisfied and he paid into Court the excess of the bid over the decretal amount. After the auction but before the excess amount was deposited in Court or the auction sale confirmed, another decree-holder of the same judgment-debtor made an application for a rateable share in the assets to be realised in execution of the decree of the first decree-holder. The Court held that he was entitled to a rateable share in the full price :

Held : that the order of the Court must be deemed to have been passed only under S. 73, Civil P. C., and not under S. 47 of the Code and consequently no appeal lay : 1935 Lah 302, Disting. [P 181 C.2]

Judgment.—The dispute in this case is between two rival decree-holders against the same judgment-debtor. The appellant in execution of his decree applied for the attachment and sale of the property of the judgment-debtor and purchased the property himself at a Court auction. By the amount of his bid the entire decree in his favour was satisfied and he paid in Court only the excess over the decretal amount, i. e., the difference between the decretal amount and the amount of his bid. In the meantime however after the auction had taken place but before the amount had been paid in Court or the auction-sale had been confirmed, the respondent made an application for a rateable share in the assets to be realised in execution of the decree of the appellant. On the above facts the Court below has held that the respondent is entitled to a rateable share. This order was passed under S. 73, Civil P. C. An objection is taken on appeal by the respondent that no appeal lies. It is conceded by the appellant's counsel that no appeal lies from an order passed under S. 73, Civil P. C., but he contends, relying upon 1935 Lah 302 (1), that in the present case the order must be deemed to have been passed also under S. 47, Civil P. C. The facts of 1935 Lah 302 (1), however, are distinguishable.

In that case the decree of the decree-holder, who had first attached and purchased the property in execution of his decree had been recorded as satisfied and it was after this that an application was made by a rival decree-holder for a rateable share and the first decree-holder was directed to refund the money in Court. It was held that in such a case the judgment-debtor is interested as he is materially affected by the order and therefore an appeal lies. I hold therefore that the order in the present case must be deemed to have been passed only under S. 73 and consequently no appeal lies. The legal point involved is not so clear and is arguable. I am not therefore prepared to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision in the present case. The parties must settle their dispute in a regular suit, if so advised. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Municipal Committee, Amritsar—Defendant—Appellant.

Second appeal No. 804 of 1935, Decided on 19th July 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 1st February 1935.

Punjab Municipal Act (1911), S. 172—Municipality entitled to remove encroachment built without permission—No applicability of Art. 146-A, Limitation Act, to acts of removing encroachment—Aggrieved party can bring suit for damages and not for injunction.

Section 172, Punjab Municipal Act, gives a statutory right to Municipal Committees in the Punjab to remove any encroachment erected without permission, and there is no limitation, in point of time, except that compensation must be paid if the structure is more than three years old. The exercise of a Committee's right under this section is not the same as the institution of a suit for possession; and operation of Art. 146-A, Limitation Act, is limited to such suits. The remedy of an aggrieved party for the unlawful removal of a projection by a local authority is a suit for compensation and not a suit for injunction: 1922 Bom 111, Dissent.; 1925 Mad 64 and 4 I C 828, Foll.; 1919 Cal 807, Disting. [P 183 C 1]

G. R. Khanna—for Respondent.

Judgment.—A thara for some years past existed outside the plaintiff's house in Amritsar. The Municipal Committee, for the purpose of constructing a drain along the side of the street has removed this thara without the consent of the plaintiff. The plaintiff sues for an injunction to compel the Municipal Committee to restore the thara, alleging that she had been the owner of the site under the thara for the last 100 years. The Committee relies on the fact that the structure projects beyond the building line of the street and that the Committee has a statutory power to remove encroachments on the street either under S. 172 or 175 Municipal Act, subject to payment of compensation. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that she was the owner of the site under the thara. On appeal, the Senior Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had acquired a prescriptive right in the thara which had existed at least since 1896 and that the Committee had lost the statutory right of removal, even if it was in fact the owner of the site. The plaintiff's suit has been decreed, and the Committee has instituted a second appeal. There is no proof that the plaintiff ever acquired any title in the site under the thara, otherwise than by prescription, and no projection is shown in a plan of 1883, which has been produced from Municipal records and was prepared by the City Engineer of that time. The first indication of the existence of the thara occurs in 1896. Many Municipal records were destroyed by fire in 1919, so that it is impossible to say whether the thara was built with the permission of the Committee or not.

For the plaintiff's prescriptive title reliance is placed on Art. 146-A, Indian Limitation Act. This provides that a suit by a local authority for the possession of any part of a public street from which it has been dispossessed must be brought within 30 years from the date of dispossession. The trial Court took the view that the mere erection of a thara or a small platform at the side of the street does not amount to dispossession of the Committee, and I am not sure that this view is not the correct one. It is notorious that house-holders and shop-keepers in this part of the country regard themselves as entitled to make use of public streets for the purpose of improving the means of access to their houses or shops. Sometimes the consent of the local authority is obtained and sometimes it is taken for granted; but in either case it is doubtful whether the erection of a small projection on the street, without enclosure or roof, is intended as an assertion of ownership over the site or is meant to oust the Committee from its right of constructing drains along the side of the street or to prevent it from performing the various duties which the maintenance of the public streets entails. It is unnecessary to pursue this question further however since it has been held that the Municipal Committee does not lose its statutory right of removing encroachments from the site of the streets through the acquisition of prescriptive right to resist a suit of the class mentioned under Art. 146-A. It is true that a different view was taken in 46 Bom 335 (1), but this decision merely followed an earlier judgment of the same Court, which was considered to be binding, and one of the judgments delivered in that case gives reasons for doubting the correctness of the earlier judgment.

The view that a Municipal Committee does not necessarily lose its statutory right owing to the provisions of Art. 146-A was taken in 81 I C 894 (2) in which a number of earlier decisions were discussed, and with this decision I respectfully agree. S. 172, Punjab Municipal Act, gives a statutory right to Municipal Committees in the Punjab to remove any encroachment erected without permission, and there is no limitation in point of time, except that compensation must be paid if the structure is more than three years old. The exercise of a Committee's right under this section is not the same as the institution of a suit for possession and the operation of Art. 146-A is limited to such suits. 49 I C 93 (3) has been cited on behalf of the plaintiff, but it is not of assistance, since it was held that the Local Municipal Act did not apply to the structure in dispute. It has been further held in 4 I C 828 (4) that the remedy of an aggrieved party for the unlawful removal of a projection by a local authority is a suit for compensation and not a suit for injunction and this rule appears applicable in the present case, as it does not appear that the Municipal Committee made any tender of compensation before the structure was removed. Under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., I remand the suit to the trial Court for the assessment of the compensation to which the plaintiff is entitled. Return to be made in four months; ten days for objections.

Mt. Mohammad Sultan Begam—Plaintiff—Appellant.

Saraj-ud-Din Ahmad — Defendant—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 2217 of 1929, Decided on 29th June 1934.

(a) Practice—Evidence — Certain question put to witness objected to by other side—Court should record such question and give its ruling whether it is allowed or disallowed—It cannot allow it subject to objection.

Where the counsel for the plaintiff objected to a certain question being put to the witness by the defendant's counsel and the Judge allowed this question to be put 'subject to objection:'

Held: that the proper course for the Court to follow in such cases was to allow the question to be recorded and then to give its ruling whether such question is allowed or disallowed. [P 185 C 2]

(b) Practice—Evidence—Trial Judge should see that scandalous matters are not introduced into record unless they are relevant for proper decision of case.

The trial Judge is not a mere automaton, but is supposed intelligently to control the conduct of the cases in his Court and it is one of his important functions to see that scandalous matters are not introduced into the record unless they are relevant for the proper decision of the case. [P 185 C 2]

(c) Precedents—Judge is bound to follow Privy Council ruling—He cannot follow ruling of his own High Court in preference to Privy Council ruling even though High Court ruling is given subsequent to Privy Council ruling.

It is open to a Judge not to rely upon the Privy Council case on the ground that it is inapplicable; but he is hopelessly in error when he refuses to follow it because it is of a date anterior to his High Court ruling and that he is bound to follow High Court ruling in preference to the judgment of the Privy Council. [P 186 C 1]

(d) Mahomedan Law — Dower — Onus of proving that dower publicly announced was not intended to be paid lies on person asserting it.

The onus of proving that the amount of dower publicly announced was never intended to be paid and that only the smaller amount settled in private was exigible would of course be on the party making the allegation of the fictitious nature of the dower. [P 186 C 2]

(e) Mahomedan Law — Dower — Settled dower must be paid—That such amount is large or beyond means of husband is no reason for decreeing suit for smaller sum.

The settled dower must be paid and the fact that the bridegroom has neither the present means nor expectations to pay the amount of dower or that the amount is inordinately large is no reason whatsoever for the Courts to decree the suit for a smaller sum: 2 All 573 (F B), and 21 All 17, Rel. on. [P 186 C 2 P 187 C 1]

(f) Evidence Act (1872), S. 92—Suit for dower amount mentioned in kabinnama—Defendant pleading that writing was mere sham and was not agreement between parties—Oral evidence to prove such plea—(Per Agha Haidar, J.)—Is not admissible (Per Tek Chand, J.)—It is admissible.

In a suit for dower the plaintiff relied on a kabin nama in which the dower amount was mentioned but the defendant pleaded that the writing was a mere sham and that the amount mentioned therein, was nominal and that no effect should be given to it:

Held: Per Agha Haider, J.—Oral evidence to prove such plea was not admissible as S. 92, is a bar: 1933 P C 178 and 22 All 149 (P C), Rel on. [P 188 C 2]

Held: Per Tek Chand, J.—S. 92 was no bar as S. 92 operates as a bar only when oral evidence is sought to be led to vary or modify the terms of an agreement, but that oral evidence is admissible to prove that the agreement in writing was not an agreement at all, but was only a sham and was not intended to be operative: 22 All 149 (P C) and 1933 P C 178 Disting.; 1927 All 422 Expl.; Case law reviewed. [P 191 C 1]

(g) Mahomedan Law—Dower—Merely because claim for dower has not formed subject-matter of suit, right to recover cannot be said as not existing.

Though the claim for dower has not formed the subject-matter of a suit in a law Court or the demand for its payment has not been made by the wife in the majority of cases, it does not follow that a right to recover it does not exist: 123 P R 1880, Disting.. [P 188 C 2]

(h) Mahomedan Law — Dower — Suit for dower—Mere fact that widow does not go into witness box is not circumstance against her.

If the widow in a suit for dower does not enter into the witness box to prove her dower, this ought not to be treated as a circumstance against her, since Mahomedan ladies are reluctant to give evidence: 19 Cal 689 (P C), Foll.. [P 189 C 1]

(i) Practice—Duty of Court—Court must administer law as it stands.

A Court of justice has to administer the law as it stands and if the public are dissatisfied with that law, it is open to them to have it altered by legislation. [P 189 C 2]

Shuja-ud-Din and Mohammad Monier—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and J. L. Kapur—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—This appeal arises out of an administration suit in which the plaintiff claimed a sum of Rs. 50,000 out of the estate of one Nawab Shuja-uddin Ahmad, deceased, as her dower debt. The Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, decreed the suit to the extent of Rs. 10,000 only and passed the usual decree under O. 20, R. 13, Civil P. C. The plaintiff has preferred the present appeal to this Court in respect of the claim for Rs. 40,000 which has been disallowed. The plaintiff came into the Court on the allegation that she was the widow of Nawab Shuja-uddin Ahmad, the deceased brother of the defendant, who died on 16th April 1928, and that the parties were the heirs of the deceased according to Mahomedan law. After enumerating the properties left by the deceased, the plaintiff alleged that the deceased owed a sum of Rupees 1½ lac to her on account of her dower debt, but she was suing for a sum of Rs. 50,000 only, as the assets of the deceased were not sufficient to satisfy any larger amount. The plaintiff further alleged that she was in possession of properties (a), (b) and (c) as detailed in para. 2 of the plaint by virtue of her dower debt since the lifetime of the deceased, claiming her lien on the said property, and that the rest of the property was in the possession of the defendant. She also claimed that the plaintiff, as the widow and heir of the deceased, was entitled to one-fourth share of the property left by him, after the payment of the debts. She prayed that a decree for the administration of the property left by the deceased, Nawab Shuja-uddin Ahmad, may be passed in her favour, that the administration may be carried out through or under the instructions of the Court and that a decree for partition of the property to the extent of one-fourth share after the payment of the debts due by the deceased may be passed in her favour against the defendant.

The defendant admitted the factum of the death of Nawab Shuja-uddin Ahmad but denied the rest of the allegations. He controverted the allegations contained in para. 5 of the plaint by raising the plea that the plaintiff, on account of her relationship, came to the residential house of the deceased at the time of his death like other guests and, being in collusion with certain other persons who wanted to misappropriate the property of the deceased, gave herself out as the widow of Nawab Shuja-uddin Ahmad. He further pleaded that he was in lawful possession of the entire property left by the deceased. It would thus appear that in the written statement the defendant merely denied the status of the plaintiff as the widow of his deceased brother, and therefore logically enough, repudiated her claim to the amount of the dower. On 12th December 1928, the defendant's pleader made a statement before the Court emphasizing that the plaintiff was not the widow of Nawab Shuja-uddin Ahmad and that, even if it was held that she was the widow and her dower had been fixed at Rs. 1½ lac, his contention was that it was fictitious and the plaintiff therefore was entitled only to "proper dower" which, under the circumstances, may be fixed at Rs. 1,000. I attach some importance to the fact that the plea relating to the fictitious nature of dower was not embodied in the written statement proper, which was filed on 9th August 1928, and it was after some four months that this belated plea was taken and that, too, in the statement of the pleader before the settlement of issues without the plaint being even amended. On the same date the pleader for the plaintiff reiterated before the Court that the plaintiff was the widow of Nawab Shujauddin Ahmad and that the dower of Rs. 1½ lac was not fictitious, nor could it be held to be so in Delhi, where no special legislation on the subject of the curtailment of dower was in force, that the controversy in question was a matter of contract and that the proposed dower of Rs. 1,000 was ridiculous as the parties belonged to a rich and influential family of Nawabs. The lower Court framed the following issues :

1. Is plaintiff Nawab Shujauddin's widow? 2. Is plaintiff one of the said Nawab's creditors? 3. What amount was fixed as plaintiff's dower? 4. Was a fictitious sum fixed as dower? If so, what is the proper dower to which plaintiff is entitled? 5. Is defendant not entitled to raise the plea of fictitious dower having been fixed? (The rest are immaterial for the purposes of this appeal.)

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was the widow of Nawab Shuja-ud-Din Ahmad, deceased, and was also his creditor. He accepted Ex. P-1 and rightly called it the deed of marriage and further admitted that Rs. 1½ lacs was entered in it as the sum "fixed" to be paid as dower. But on the evidence led by the defendant he held that it was never intended to be paid or received in full and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to Rs. 10,000 only as her customary dower. It would thus appear that, while treating Ex. P-1 as the repository of the contract of marriage and a written record of the amount of dower "fixed" by the parties, he altered one of its terms and reduced the amount of dower, on the evidence produced by the defendant, to Rs. 10,000. I may note that the procedure adopted in the course of the trial by the Court below displays deploable solvency. When the evidence of the defence witnesses began before the Court with Hakim Abdul Ghani, D. W. 1, the learned counsel for the plaintiff objected to a certain question being put to the witness by the defendant's counsel. The learned Judge allowed this extremely scandalous question to be put "subject to objection." The proper course for the trial Court to follow in such cases is to allow the question to be recorded and then to give its ruling whether such question is allowed or disallowed. In the present case the Subordinate Judge allowed the question and its answer to be brought on the record, although no specific plea was raised on behalf of the defence even remotely giving rise to the questions sought to be put in the viva voce examination of the defence witnesses. The mischief therefore has been done through the weakness or ignorance of the Subordinate Judge and a lot of unsavoury matter has been improperly and unnecessarily brought on the record of a Court of justice.

The trial Judge is not a mere automaton, but is supposed intelligently to control the conduct of the cases in his Court and it is one of his important functions to see that scandalous matters are not introduced into the record unless they are relevant for the proper decision of the case. There is not a word in the judgment of the Court below as regards the subject-matter of these questions and in this Court the learned counsel, who appeared before us and argued the case at considerable length had no occasion to refer to the points raised by this particular series of questions and answers. In deciding issue No. 4 the Subordinate Judge showed his utter ignorance of the well-understood rules regarding the citation of authorities and the weight which should be attached to them. He observed in his judgment as follows :

The learned counsel for the plaintiff has produced a number of rulings of the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad High Courts, but this Court is bound to follow the Punjab ruling, 804 P L R 1913 (1) at pp. 1021 and 1023 which relates to Khattars of Attock District. 19 Cal 689 (2) is a ruling of 1892, while the said Punjab ruling is of 1913 and is on all fours with the present case.

2. Zakeri Begum v. Sakina Begum, (1892) 19 Cal 689 = 19 I A 157 = 6 Sar 213 (PC).

It was open to the Subordinate Judge not to rely upon the Privy Council case on the ground that it was inapplicable, but he was hopelessly in error when he refused to follow it because it was of a date anterior to the Punjab ruling and that he was bound to follow the Punjab ruling in preference to the judgment of the Privy Council. I may further observe in passing that 304 P L R 1913 (1) is a case under the Customary law governing the Khattar tribe of Attock district and has no bearing whatsoever upon the present case the parties to which belong to an old family of the Mughals of Delhi who are admittedly governed by Mohamman Law. Dr. Shuja-ud-Din on behalf of the appellant naturally accepted the finding of the Court below that the plaintiff was the widow of the deceased and that her dower debt was fixed at Rs. 1½ lac as recorded in the kabinnama Ex. P-1. He however strenuously attacked the finding that the sum of Rs. 1½ lac was fictitious and was never intended to be paid or received in its entirety, both on law and facts.

Before discussing the evidence in the case, I may briefly point out that the Mohamman marriage is a pure and simple consensual contract of Roman Law and, while dower is the consideration of the contract, it is also a token of respect for the wife. Dower has important uses which affect the domestic life of the Mohamman. The law-giver of Islam was anxious to safeguard the wife against the arbitrary exercise of the right of divorce by the husband. He accordingly devised the institution of dower to control that right. Dower also gave a weapon in the hands of the wife so as to protect her from the possible ill-treatment by the husband. If she survived her husband and his other heirs ill-treated her, she would not be thrown into the streets but would be able, apart from her legal share, to enforce against them her claim for dower which must be paid out of the heritage before the assets of the husband are distributed among the heirs. This is the keystone of the Muhammadan law of dower in its purity. Latterly, a practice seems to have grown up in some localities and the real dower, usually a modest sum, came to be settled in private, while an extravagantly large and fictitious amount was announced in the assembly where the marriage had been celebrated, by way of self-glorification (Sma). In such cases the onus of proving that the amount of dower publicly announced was never intended to be paid and that only the smaller amount settled in private was exigible would of course be on the party making the allegation of the fictitious nature of the dower.

In the present case no such practice is proved to have prevailed locally and there is no evidence as to what was the smaller figure privately fixed. On the other hand we have regular kabinnama, Ex. P-1, on the record. It is dated the 21st May 1877, and, after reciting the names of the parties to the marriage contract and the transaction of marriage, it mentions the sum of Rs. 1,25,000 as consideration for the marriage. It is signed by the husband Muhammad Shuja-ud-Din Ahmad with his own hand and is attested and witnessed by no less than 25 persons. The signatures of six of the attesting witnesses have been duly proved and identified by Nawab Sir Amir-ud-Din Ahmad Khan, P. W. 1, Nawab Zia-ud-Din Ahmad Khan was his father's uncle and Nawab Ala-ud-Din Ahmad Khan was his own father. He himself as a young man was present at the time of the marriage ceremony and he further identifies the signatures of Nawab Shuja-ud-Din Ahmad, the bridegroom. We have also the important evidence of Qazi Mohammad Afzal, P. W. 4. He is the son of the scribe Qazi Mohammad Ismail whose signature appears on Ex. P-1. This witness identifies the signature of his father and proves that the document, Ex. P-1, was in his handwriting. The result, therefore, is that apart from the provisions of S. 90, Evidence Act, the kabinnama Ex. P-1, has been amply proved.

It is engrossed on the ornamental paper which was in fashion in those days and there cannot be any doubt as regards its genuineness. The parties are governed by Muhammadan law and, according to that system of law, the settled dower must be paid and the fact that the bridegroom had neither the present means nor expectations to pay the amount of dower or that the amount was inordinately large is no reason whatsoever for the Courts to decree the suit for a smaller sum. In 2 All 573 (3) it was held that

A Muhammadan widow was entitled to the whole of the dower which her deceased husband had on marriage agreed to give her, whatever it might amount to, and whether or not her husband was comparatively poor when he married, or had not left assets sufficient to pay the dower debt.

The learned counsel for the respondent tried to make a certain amount of capital out of the expression "bona fide" which occurs in the opening portion of the judgment delivered by Turner, J. (p. 581) and argued that the said expression showed that it was only the dower which had been intended to be paid and not the dower which was merely announced. I do not agree with this interpretation. To begin with, the other learned Judges, who constituted the Full Bench, do not use this expression and, according to my reading of the judgment of Turner, J., it really means no more than this: that the dower should not have been fixed at a high figure with the object of defeating the claims of the other creditors of the husband. Again, in 21 All 17 (4), the High Court granted a decree for a sum of one crore of rupees and 25,000 gold mohurs as the plaintiff's dower-debt, though the effect was to deprive the son of the late husband of the plaintiff of all his property. The learned Judges fully realized the hardship resulting from the decree and, regretted that the Courts in the provinces subject to their jurisdiction had not been invested by the Legislature with the discretion which has been conferred upon the Courts in Oudh by S. 5 of Act 18 of 1876, empowering them to award to a Muhammadan lady only so much of the stipulated amount of dower as the Courts considered reasonable with reference to the means of the husband and the status of the wife.

They therefore affirmed the judgment which had been passed in favour of the plaintiff, observing at the same time that they had no alternative but to pass a decree for the amount of the dower contracted for, however extravagant that amount might be. It may be observed that the lady who was the plaintiff as well as her husband in the case noted above belonged to the family of the Nawab of Rampur. In the present case also the parties were closely connected with the ruling family of the Nawab of Loharu. Besides there are a number of kabinamas on the record in which the amount of dower had been fixed at Rs. 1½ lac. The dower of the plaintiff's own sister was also Rs. 1½ lac. It must be remembered that the marriage was celebrated at a time when the ancient regime was within the memory of the senior members of this family and of the society in which they lived and moved and, although not exactly rich, the family belonged to the old aristocracy of Delhi and still tried to maintain the traditions of their departed grandeur. Nawab Sir Amir-ud-Din Ahmad Khan, P. W. 1, has clearly stated in his evidence that the dower in his family was generally fixed at Rs. 1½ lac although recently there has been a protest against this practice. It is significant that the husband lived for a period of about 51 years after his marriage, but there is not an iota of evidence on the record to show that he ever demurred to this sum or took any steps open to him under the law to reduce it. It is too late in the day for the defendant to come forward and try to alter one of the terms of a contract which had been solemnly reduced to writing more than 50 years ago and which had been fully accepted by the parties to the marriage during the long period of their wedlock. It was argued by the learned counsel for the appellant that in the present case as the terms of the contract had been reduced to the form of a document, (Ex. P-1) and the said document having been duly proved, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement was admissible as between the parties or their representatives in interest for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms.

This contention finds support in the most recent judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as 35 P L R 1 (5), which came to my notice after arguments in the case had been heard. In that case a mortgage had been executed in favour of A by B. On the same date B executed a lease in favour of A promising to pay an annual sum to A. After the expiry of the term of the lease, A sued B for possession on the basis of his mortgage which he claimed to be a possessory one. There was no handing over of possession by B and no handing back by A. It was held by their Lordships that the mortgagee was entitled to possession as S. 92, Evidence Act, forbids the admission or consideration of evidence as to the intention of the parties or to contradict the express terms of the document. The case reported as 22 All 149 (6) was referred to in the above mentioned authority and the learned counsel for the appellant has also quoted it in support of his contention. In this case on the basis of certain documents executed between the parties the question arose whether they constituted a deed of sale out and out or merely a mortgage by conditional sale and therefore redeemable by the executant. Evidence was led and admitted by the Subordinate Judge for the purpose of proving the real intention of the parties. The High Court substantially affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

It was held by their Lordships that oral evidence of intention was not admissible for the purpose of construing the deed or ascertaining the intention of the parties and that the case must be decided on considerations of the contents of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the document related to existing facts. In the present case the amount of dower which we may call the consideration of the marriage contract was definitely put down as Rs. 1½ lac, in Ex. P-1, rightly described by the Court below as marriage deed. Therefore evidence to subtract anything from this term of the contract would be excluded under the provisions of S. 92. Furthermore, the extrinsic evidence in the case is that the marriage was duly solemnized in an assembly of friends and relations, and ever since the date of the marriage the spouses have lived as husband and wife until the death of the husband in the year 1928. I do not think that their Lordships of the Privy Council intended that the evidence of any mental reservation contrary to the explicit terms of the written agreement could be given, as it would practically reduce S. 92, Evidence Act, to a nullity. The recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted above is quite clear and in my humble judgment correctly interprets the full meaning and import of S. 92, Evidence Act. To hold that it was open to the defendant to lead evidence to prove that the dower which had been fixed was not really payable would virtually have the effect of cancelling one of the essential terms of the contract of marriage, namely the consideration of Rs. 1½ lac.

Assuming for the sake of argument that it was open to the defendant to lead evidence to establish that the dower of Rs. 1½ lac was merely fixed by way of show and that it was never intended to be paid, let us examine the evidence on the record in support of this contention. (His Lordship then examined the evidence and held that the defendant completely failed to prove that the full amount was never intended to be paid. The judgment then proceeded). On the question of dower, he adopted the line of reasoning which found favour with the Subordinate Judge who seems to have been impressed with the idea that, although a number of marriages with dower-debts of Rs. 1½ lac or thereabouts have been quoted, in none of them was the dower paid or a decree of the Court obtained. This, of course, is not quite accurate. Nawab Sir Amir-ud-din Ahmad Khan has quoted at least the cases of his own daughters and of a lady Mt. Akbari Begam, where substantial sums were received by the ladies in settlement of their dower claims. That, the whole amount was not realized is a matter of private arrangement dependent upon various circumstances. Dower is an incident of marriage like divorce and merely because in a certain family there have been no divorces it does not follow that the right to divorce does not exist. In the same manner, though the claim for dower has not formed the subject-matter of a suit in a law Court or the demand for its payment has not been made by the wife in the majority of cases, it does not follow that a right to recover it does not exist. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel for the respondent upon the case reported as 123 P R 1880 (7). In this case the suit was for Rs. 1½ lac as dower debt. A plea was raised on behalf of the defendant that the parties, when they entered into the contract, did not intend that the said contract should be acted upon and that the large amount of dower was only made for show.

The Courts below held that it was proved that the amount of dower was looked upon as no more than a hollow sham and reduced the amount to what the Courts considered to be reasonable. The plaintiff came up in appeal to the Chief Court of the Punjab and the learned Judges held that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to reduce the amount of dower fixed to what they considered a reasonable amount except on proof of custom allowing such reduction, or that the amount fixed was a mere sham and neither party intended that the original contract should be acted upon. If such was the case the proper dower was to be ascertained and awarded to the plaintiff. If the kabinnama was not set aside as wholly invalid, the Court was to decree the whole amount claimed. The case was accordingly remanded. In this case the kabinnama itself was missing and its terms were uncertain. In such a case I cannot understand how any document, which was not before the Court and even the terms of which were uncertain, could be set aside or maintained. There is just a passing reference to S. 92, Evidence Act, in the judgment of Barkley, J., the other Judge being silent on this question. The view of Barkley, J., that evidence was admissible under the first proviso to S. 92, Evidence Act, cannot be accepted as correct in view of the Privy Council judgments of a later date, quoted above. In any view this authority does not affect the present case, for here we have the kabinnama and a mass of evidence in support of its genuineness and binding character and the evidence to the contrary is worthless. It was argued by the counsel for the respondent that the plaintiff herself did not go into the witness box and depose to the amount of dower which was fixed at the time of her marriage. The answer to this criticism is to be found in the case reported as 19 Cal 689 (2), at p. 696 where it is observed that, if the widow does not enter into the witness box to prove her dower, this ought not to be treated as a circumstance against her, since Muhammadan ladies are reluctant to give evidence. Moreover, in the ordinary course of affairs, the marriage ceremony must have been performed in the portion of the house occupied by the males where a large concourse of wedding guests would be assembled. The plaintiff, who at the time of her marriage was a girl of tender years, could not possibly have any direct knowledge of the proceedings in connection with the settlement of dower which were going on in a different portion of the house to which, according to the well-known custom of the class of people to which she belonged, she could not have any access.

All the probabilities of the case are in favour of the plaintiff and I am not surprised that, contrary to the general practice, she was constrained to take the usual course of bringing a suit in a Court of justice to claim her dower against the defendant who has grossly ill-treated her by denying to her even the status of his deceased brother's widow and by reviling the memory of her deceased husband. The law of dower outside Oudh, where there is special legislation empowering the Courts to curtail its amount in suitable cases, sometimes operates harshly in depriving the other heirs of their shares. At the same time in some cases it protects the widow from the cruel treatment which is sometimes meted out to her by the other heirs of the husband. A Court of justice has to administer the law as it stands, and if the Mahomedan public is dissatisfied with that law it is open to them to have it altered by legislation. For the reasons given above, I would allow this appeal, and modifying the decree of the Court below, decree the plaintiff's suit for the full amount claimed. The case will go back to the Court below for the passing of a preliminary decree under O. 20, R. 13, Civil P. C., and for further proceedings according to law. The plaintiff will get her costs throughout from the defendant.

Tek Chand, J.—I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother. I am in complete agreement with him in the view which he has taken of the evidence produced by the parties in the case and the findings which he has recorded on the questions of fact involved. I have no doubt that the kabinnama (Ex. P.1) contained a genuine and bona fide agreement for the payment of dower between the late Nawab Shuja-ud-Din and the plaintiff and the mere fact that the amount mentioned was excessive or much beyond the means of the husband either at the time of the marriage or when he died, does not affect the plaintiff's claim. There is however a subsidiary point on which, with the utmost respect, I feel bound to express my dissent. My learned brother is of the opinion that S. 92, Evidence Act, is a bar to the defendant producing evidence to show that the amount of dower entered in the kabinnama was fictitious and was not intended to be paid. That section lays down that, except under certain specified conditions, evidence of an oral agreement is not admissible to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from, the terms of a written contract. In the present case however it is not for any of these purposes that oral evidence was led at the trial. Here the defendant attempted to prove that there was no real agreement relating to this matter at all, that the writing was from the first a "mere sham," both parties understanding that the amount specified was nominal, and that no effect was to be given to it.

In other words, it was a paper transaction, pure and simple, recorded only for the sake of show, and was not to be acted upon. The distinction between the two classes of cases is well-recognised both in English law as well as under the Indian Evidence Act, and there are numerous decisions of the Courts in India and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council bearing on the point. The leading English case on the subject is 6 E & B 370 (8), where Erle, J., observed that:

The distinction in point of law is that evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, but evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible.

In the same case, Lord Campbell observed that:

No addition to, or variation from the terms of a written contract can be made by parol; but in this case the defence was that there never was any agreement entered into. Evidence to that effect was admissible.

For cases under the Evidence Act, reference may be made to 123 P R 1880 (7), 32 Cal 437 (9), at p. 441, 95 I C 512 (10),

The Privy Council decisions, 22 All 149 (6) and 35 P L R 1 (5), to which my learned brother has referred, are distinguishable and, if I may say so with all respect, do not touch the question. In the first of these cases the question was whether the transaction in dispute was a mortgage by conditional sale, as described in the deed, admittedly executed by and binding on the parties, or whether it was a sale out and out, as was sought to be proved by one of them. Their Lordships held that oral evidence could not be produced to prove in contradiction of the clear terms of the document that it was a sale. In the second case the transaction was described in the deed to be a possessory mortgage, but an attempt was made to prove by oral evidence that it was really intended to be a simple mortgage, and their Lordships ruled that S. 92 was a bar to the production of such evidence. In 3 Rang 106 (12), at p. 125, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, after referring to 22 All 149 (6), brought out the distinction very clearly. He observed that:

As between the parties to an agreement oral evidence of intention was not admissible for the purpose, either of construing deeds or proving the intention of the parties. . . .

But

S. 92 does not fetter the Court's power to arrive at the true meaning and effect of a transaction in the light of all the surrounding circumstances.

Their Lordships held evidence of such "surrounding circumstances" admissible, and after examining it, recorded their finding on the true nature and import of the transaction. The question has been discussed at great length by the Madras High Court in 141 I C 456 (13) (458 et seq) and by the Oudh Chief Court in 136 I C 642 (16), at p. 691-4, and in both these cases, after a review of the authorities it has been held that S. 92 operates as a bar only when oral evidence is sought to be led to vary or modify the terms of an agreement, but that oral evidence is admissible to prove that the agreement in writing was not an agreement at all but was only a sham and was not intended to be operative. The only Indian case, of which I am aware, in which a contrary view has been expressed is 49 All 680 (17) where Ashworth, J., adversely criticised the dictum of Ameer Ali and Woodroffe, J.J., at p. 638 of their book, referred to above. The remark was however obiter and the judgment of the other member of the Bench, Mukerji, J., is silent on the point. Ashworth, J.'s observations have been examined at length and dissented from (and if I may say so rightly) in the Madras and Oudh cases cited above. I am therefore of opinion that notwithstanding the recitals in Ex. P-1, evidence was admissible to prove that no binding and operative agreement had been entered into at all between the parties to pay and receive the amount of dower mentioned therein. As already stated however I agree with my learned brother that the evidence produced by the defendant on this point was worthless, and that the plea has not been established in fact.

Abdul Haq—Judgment-debtor—Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 378 of 1935. Decided on 16th October 1935, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 27th February 1935.

Execution sale—Property sold but sale not confirmed—Confirmation cannot be refused on any other ground except as provided in Civil P. C.—Fact that after sale but before confirmation, judgment-debtor declared to be agriculturist whose property could not be sold held, no ground for not confirming sale.

Once a sale has taken place the Court has no jurisdiction to refuse to confirm it unless the specified objections are taken and sustained. Sale in execution of a decree cannot be set aside merely on the ground that after the date of the sale in fact more than thirty days after the date of the sale but before its confirmation the judgment-debtor was declared to be a member of an agricultural tribe whose land cannot be sold: 1931 P C 33 and 1933 Lah 99, Rel. on. [P 192 C 1]

Ghulam Rasul—for Petitioner.

Fayaz Hassan Shah—for Respondent.

Order—In execution of a money decree the judgment-debtor's land was sold by auction by the Court. It does not appear that any objections under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., were raised to the confirmation of the sale within the prescribed time; but the sale was not confirmed nor was the decree satisfied. On the other hand the question of confirmation was postponed because in the meantime a suit had been brought by a third person to establish his right in the land sold. After the disposal of that suit the case came up before the executing Court for the confirmation of the sale many months after it had taken place, but in the meantime that is to say, a few days before the case was taken up by the executing Court on the question of confirmation of the sale, the tribe to which the judgment-debtor belongs was declared to be an agricultural tribe under the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. An objection was, therefore, taken by the judgment-debtor that, under the circumstances, his land could not be sold and the sale should not, therefore, be confirmed. The executing Court refused to confirm the sale and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal has concurred in this view.

The decree-holder applies to this Court in revision and it is contended on his behalf that once a sale has taken place it can be set aside only under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, such as O. 21, R. 89, on the application of the judgment-debtor accompanied by a deposit of the decretal amount and a percentage for payment to the auction purchaser, or on objection under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale and consequential loss to the person concerned; and that a sale cannot be set aside on any other ground except those specified in the Code. Title of the auction purchaser in the property sold vests from the date of the sale and not from the date of the confirmation of the sale, therefore, though an objection to the confirmation of the sale can be made within thirty days of the sale, the Court cannot refuse to confirm the sale if the objection is made after the expiry of thirty days or does not come within the purview of the specified provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and is sustained by the executing Court. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1931 P. C. 33 (1) once a sale has taken place the Court has no jurisdiction to refuse to confirm it unless the specified objections are taken and sustained. The same view was taken in 13 Lah. 761(2). In my opinion the sale in this case could not be set aside merely on the ground that after the date of the sale, in fact more than thirty days after the date of the sale but before its confirmation the judgment-debtor was declared to be a member of an agricultural tribe. It was contended on behalf of the respondent, the judgment-debtor, that there were objections raised by the decree-holder to the confirmation of the sale on the ground of material irregularity, but the decree-holder has expressly withdrawn these objections before me.

I consequently accept this petition and setting aside the order of the Court below direct the executing Court to confirm the sale and then to proceed with the further proceedings in accordance with law. I leave the parties to bear their own costs of these proceedings.

Tek Chand, J.—In order to understand the facts of this case it is necessary to refer to the following pedigree table :

The property in suit was acquired by Nand Singh who died in 1922 and was succeeded by Indar Singh, son of his pre-deceased son, Asa Singh. Indar Singh died childless in 1931 leaving (1) a widow Mt. Phino (who was ten years of age at that time), (2) his mother Mt. Mango, defendant 1 and (3) four sisters, defendants 2 to 5. As it was thought that the child-widow would re-marry soon, the mutation of the estate was effected in the name of Mt. Mango, mother of the deceased. In May 1933, Mt. Mango gifted the property to her daughters, defendants 2 to 5. The next living reversioner was Gurdit Singh, brother of Nand Singh, and it is common ground between the parties that he consented to the gift.

Makhan Singh, who is a collateral of Indar Singh in the 6th degree, brought the present suit for a declaration that the gift was invalid as against his reversionary rights. The Subordinate Judge held that, as the property was admittedly non-ancestral of the plaintiff and the last male-holder, the plaintiff had no right to contest the alienation made by Mt. Mango, with the bona fide consent of the next heir. In coming to this conclusion the Judge followed a decision of a Division Bench of this Court, reported as 13 Lah 180 (1). The plaintiff has appealed and on his behalf Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan has contended that 13 Lah 180 (1) and the earlier Division Bench ruling, 5 Lah 212 (2) which it followed, were both wrongly decided. After hearing the counsel at length and giving careful consideration to his arguments I see no reason to hold that the view taken in these rulings was erroneous. Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan further argued that the gift was, in any case, invalid, as it had not been established that by this gift Mt. Mango had transferred to the donees the entire estate which she had inherited from her husband. But this point was not taken in the Court below, nor is it mentioned in the grounds of appeal presented in this Court. The question is a mixed question of fact and law and cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time at this stage. As the necessary facts have not been established, no opinion need be expressed as to whether the contention of the learned counsel is legally sound. The appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of certain execution proceedings. Baldeo Das had three sons, Shamair Chand, Sundar Lal and Panna Lal. On 23rd September 1926, Baldeo Das executed a mortgage of a certain shop which we would call X in favour of the present plaintiffs-decree-holders. On the day following the mortgage, Baldeo Das executed a rent-deed in respect of shop X in favour of the mortgagees. On 20th July 1928, a partition was effected between Baldeo Das and his sons in which the property, which forms the subject-matter of the present dispute, was allotted to his two sons, Panna Lal and Sundar Lal. We are not concerned with the property which was allotted to the father and the third son, Shamair Chand. On 26th February 1929, the present plaintiffs, decree-holders, Rama Nand and another, sued Baldeo Das and his sons for a sum of Rs. 680 as arrears of rent of the shop X on the allegation that the rent-deed dated 24th September 1926 was executed by Baldeo Das not only for himself but also for and on behalf of his sons. On 23rd June 1930, this suit was decreed against Baldeo Das alone and dismissed against his sons on the ground that there was no privity of contract between them and the plaintiffs.

The Court observed that it was not necessary to go into the plea taken by defendants 2 and 3 that the shop in suit had fallen to their share in partition and that they did not form a Hindu joint family with Baldeo Das. The decree, however, was not for the full amount, Rs. 680, but for a sum of Rs. 550 being the rent which had accrued due up to the date of partition. The decree-holders took proceedings in execution and the property which on partition between the father and the sons had fallen to the share of the sons was attached. It may be noted here that shop X was not included in the property which was attached. The sons filed objections and two issues were framed: (1) as to the factum of partition and (2) if there was partition whether the shops which had fallen to the share of the sons were liable. The Court held that there was a bona fide partition and further that the property which was allotted to the sons on partition continued to be liable for pre-partition debts incurred by the father. The result, therefore, was that the Court held that the shops were liable only for the debts of the father which had accrued up to the date of partition. Sundar Lal and Panna Lal, defendants 2 and 3, went up in appeal to the District Judge, who in a very unsatisfactory judgment, disposed of the matter by merely referring to the judgment of the trial Court for the discussion of the important question of law raised in the case. Sundar Lal and Panna Lal, objectors, defendants 2 and 3, have come up to this Court in second appeal.

Mr. Achhru Ram very fairly conceded that the property allotted to the sons on partition of joint family property continued to be liable for pre-partition debts of the father. He, however, disputed the propriety of the orders of the Courts below that the decree-holders could proceed against the property which had been allotted to the sons, in execution of the decree against their father in the course of the execution proceedings. He urged that the proper remedy of the decree-holders was to proceed by way of regular suit against the sons and enforce their rights under the Hindu Law up to the extent of the property which had fallen to their share on partition. There cannot be any manner of doubt that, so far as the Punjab is concerned, the law has been definitely laid down that property which has fallen to the share of a son on partition is liable for the debts incurred by the father before the partition, vide 1933 Lah 116 (1). This case contains a reference to a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court, 51 Mad 361 (2). This is a decision by five learned Judges, Coutts Trotter, C. J. and Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., being the dissenting Judges. The majority laid down that a simple creditor of a father is entitled to recover the debt from the shares of the sons after a bona fide partition between the father and the sons. Mr. Achhru Ram, the learned counsel for the appellant, has tried to argue that the Lahore ruling as well as the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court dealt with cases which come to the High Court on regular appeals from decrees and not from appeals which were preferred against the orders of the Courts below in execution proceedings. This is true. But Waller, J. who was one of the majority Judges, had this point in his mind and at p. 369 of the report observed:

The other view is that the only difference partition makes is that a creditor cannot, after it, on a decree against the father alone, proceed against the sons' shares in execution. On principle, I can see no reason why a partition should exempt a son's share from liability for a pre-partition debt for which it was liable before partition.

Apart from the other obiter dictum of this learned Judge, the principle which has been followed for many years in this country and which has been approved of on more than one occasion by their Lordships of the Privy Council, is that so far as possible all matters relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree should be disposed of in the course of execution proceedings wherein matters can be decided in a cheaper and more expeditious manner. This was laid down as long ago as 19 Cal 683 (3), at p. 689. The following classical passage is worth quoting:

It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of S. 244.

1. Jawahar Singh v. Parduman Singh, 1933 Lah 116=141 I C 424=14 Lah 399=34 P L R 291.
2. Subramania Ayyar v. Sabapathy Ayyar, 1928 Mad 657=110 I C 141=54 M L J 726=51 Mad 361 (FB).
3. Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kalidas Sanyal, (1892) 19 Cal 683=19 I A 166=6 Sar 209 (PC).

The present appellants were parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and the question which is now raised by them was left open by the learned Judge who decided the case. I do not see any reason why the plaintiffs-decree-holders should be relegated to a regular suit when the question which was left open by the Judge who decided the case can be raised and disposed of in the course of execution proceedings. I, therefore, affirm the orders passed by the two Courts below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by one Chiragh, a proprietor of Mirpur, against 18 other proprietors of the same village for ejectment, on the ground that the defendants had taken forcible possession of a part of the Shamilat Deh and that thereby they had reduced the area that was reserved for use for common purposes. The suit was brought by Chiragh in a representative capacity on behalf of all the proprietors of the village. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on 25th August 1933. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge on 6th November 1933. A vakalatnama signed by Lala Jagan Nath and Pandit Ram Nath, advocates was filed with the memorandum of appeal. The memorandum of appeal had been signed by Lala Jagan Nath and Lala Tara Chand, advocates. The appeal was actually presented by Lala Tara Chand. On the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondents that the appeal had not been validly presented and could not be entertained on the ground that Lala Tara Chand had never been authorised to sign the appeal or to present it. The learned District Judge by his order dated 5th January 1934, held that the preliminary objection had no force and that the appeal had been validly presented. By his judgment dated 10th January 1934, the learned District Judge accepted the appeal and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court. It was strenuously urged on behalf of the appellant that the appeal before the learned District Judge was not validly presented either by the appellant or his pleader or by any duly authorised agent of his, and that, therefore, in effect there was no appeal before the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge has relied on O. 41, R. 1, in holding that the appeal was validly presented. O. 41, R. 1, runs in the following terms:

Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

It was urged by the learned counsel for the appellant that the provisions of O. 41, R. 1, must be read subject to the provisions of O. 3, R. 1, which lays down that:

Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court required or authorised by law to be made or done by a party in such Court may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognised agent, or by a pleader appearing, applying or acting on his behalf.

It was maintained that the presentation of an appeal amounts to acting on behalf of the appellant and that under the provisions of O. 41, R. 1 read with O. 3, R. 1, Lala Tara Chand could not act on behalf of the appellant. It is true that Lala Tara Chand had signed the memorandum of appeal but no vakalatnama of Lala Tara Chand was ever placed on the record either before or after the presentation of the appeal. In a case reported as 11 I C 387 (1) a pleader filed an appeal in time, but without a vakalatnama, and subsequently, after the period for filing the appeal had expired, a vakalatnama was filed. It was held that the filing of the vakalatnama could not be treated as referring back to the date on which the appeal was filed and that therefore the appeal was barred. The ratio decidendi of the judgment is that the presenting or the filing of the appeal amounts to acting on behalf of the appellant, and on the day that the appeal is presented the person presenting the appeal must be duly authorised to act on behalf of the appellant. In a case reported as 55 I C 271 (2), it was held by a Division Bench of the Patna High Court that the presentation of a memorandum of appeal by a Vakil without any authority in the shape of a vakalatnama is not a valid presentation. In the present case not only was the appeal filed by Lala Tara Chand without any vakalatnama but no vakalatnama in favour of Lala Tara Chand was ever placed on the record even after the filing of the appeal. The learned District Judge has relied on the wording of O. 41, R. 1 and has held that the appeal can be presented to the Court by any person, and that it is not necessary that he should be duly authorized to present the appeal. The language of O. 41, R. 1, however, does not appear to me to be susceptible of this interpretation.

On behalf of the respondents reference was made to 20 Mad 87 (3) and 1932 Lah 373 (4). 20 Mad 87 (3) lays down that the presentation of an appeal petition by the clerk of the appellants' pleader is equivalent to a presentation by the pleader himself when it is signed by him and he is duly authorised. That case is of no assistance to the respondents as it deals with a criminal appeal. Moreover in the present case the appeal was not presented by Lala Jagan Nath's or Pandit Ram Nath's clerk, but by Lala Tara Chand who had duly signed the memorandum of appeal. In these circumstances it cannot be held that Lala Tara Chand, Advocate, was merely an agent of Lala Jagan Nath. By signing the memorandum of appeal he acted independently of Lala Jagan Nath and presentation of the appeal by him cannot be held to be a presentation by an agent or clerk of Lala Jagan Nath. It is unnecessary to consider 1932 Lah 373 (4) as that case has no bearing at all. The learned counsel for the respondents urged that the time for the presentation of the appeal may be extended under S. 5, Lim. Act. This prayer cannot be granted by this Court, as it was for the lower appellate Court to decide whether there was sufficient cause for extending the time for the presentation of the appeal. For the reasons given above, I hold that no appeal was duly and validly presented to the learned District Judge on behalf of the appellant at any time. In these circumstances the judgments of the learned District Judge, dated 5th January 1934, and 10th January 1934, and the decree based thereon must be set aside. I therefore accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge, and order that the memorandum of appeal filed in the Court of the learned District Judge be returned to the respondent for such action as he may be advised to take. The parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

M. A. Majid—for Appellant.

J. L. Kapur, Vishnu Datta for Badri Das and Asad Ullah Khan—for Respondents.

Currie, J.—Two brothers Sardar Khan and Faujdar Khan alias Ghulam Qadir, owned certain property in Lyallpur, Sardar Khan holding two-thirds and Faujdar Khan one-third. On 14th July 1931 Faujdar Khan executed a registered deed of mortgage in favour of his brother Sardar Khan for Rs. 6,000. The mortgage was with possession and it was provided that interest and rent should counter-balance each other, the mortgagee being at liberty to lease the property in any manner he liked. Of the consideration Rs. 4,000 were left in trust with the mortgagee, without adjustment of account to pay off the debt due from the mortgagor to the firm of Barkat Shah-Ram Mal. It was further provided that from the date of the mortgage the mortgagee should be responsible for the interest on the amount due to Barkat Shah. On 27th July 1932 the firm sent a notice to Sardar Khan. No written reply was sent, but it is alleged that Sardar Khan made evasive promises. Eventually he apparently informed the firm that he had received legal advice to the effect that they could not enforce the claim. On 26th September 1933 Sardar Khan gave notice to Faujdar Khan that he had appropriated the money on account due to him. On 30th October 1933 the firm obtained a deed of assignment of Rs. 4,000 from Faujdar Khan conveying to them the right to recover the amount due from Sardar Khan. It was mentioned that interest would be recoverable. On the same day they served a notice on Sardar Khan and on 3rd February 1934 Sardar Khan replied to the effect that the money had been paid to Faujdar Khan. On 2nd February, however, the firm had instituted the present suit. The learned Subordinate Judge, first class, granted the plaintiffs a decree for Rupees 5,220-10-6 with costs against Sardar Khan. Sardar Khan has appealed.

The learned counsel for the appellant has abandoned the defence that the money had been paid to Faujdar Khan. His principal contention is that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act on the ground that what Faujdar Khan had assigned to them was a mere right to sue and not an actionable claim. He further contended that no personal decree could be given against Sardar Khan and that the decree should have been against the property. Finally, it was urged that the interest could not be calculated. As regards the first point, counsel argues that the principles of Ss. 3, 6 (e) and 130 T. P. Act, have been held applicable to this province, and cites 106 P R 1914 (1) which supports his contention. He argues that Faujdar Khan could not have sued for Rs. 4,000 as a debt but could merely have sued for damages for breach of the contract and that therefore he merely possessed the right to sue which could not be transferred by assignment. In support of this argument reference is made to 1925 Lah 548 (2) in which it was held that the right to recover damages for breach of a contract is not transferable. The real question however is whether in the present case Faujdar Khan was merely entitled to sue for damages or whether he could have claimed the payment of the sum of Rs. 4,000. Mr. Majid has cited 47 Mad 698 (3), 43 Cal 59 (4) and 1930 Lah 100 (5). The latter ruling related to a case in which it was sought to recover unpaid balance of consideration in respect of a bond executed by the plaintiff in favour of the creditors and is thus not directly in point. In 43 Cal 59 (4) it was held that a suit for specific performance of a contract to lend or borrow money is not maintainable. In 47 Mad 698 (3), it was held that though it is open to the mortgagor to sue the mortgagee for breach of the agreement to lend money, a right to obtain damages cannot be transferred under S. 6 (e), T. P. Act. Consequently an assignee from the mortgagor of a part of the consideration due for a mortgage, which was not paid by the mortgagee, is not entitled to recover it in a suit against the mortgagee. These two rulings at first sight support the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants. They were both, however, as far as can be seen, cases of simple mortgage and not of usufructuary mortgage. For the respondents Mr. Kapur urges that a usufructuary mortgage stands on a different footing and amounts to a conveyance of interest in land and is not a mere contract to lend money. He contends that in such a case the unpaid consideration is recoverable and the mortgagor is not merely confined to a suit for damages for breach of the contract. In support of this contention he refers to 52 All 761 (6), 1931 Nag 89 (7) and 57 Mad 1074 (8). The two latter rulings are not in point, the Nagpur case relating to a sale, while the Madras case appears to me to be entirely irrelevant. In 52 All 761 (6), the learned Judges remarked at p. 765 :

It has been held in several cases that a right to lend money cannot be specifically enforced. The case of usufructuary mortgage, however, must stand on a different footing, particularly when the possession has been delivered and the stipulation is that the profits are to be set off against the interest. The suit is not really one for the specific performance of a mere contract to lend money but to compel the defendants to perform their part of the contract when they have obtained delivery of possession of the property.

This decision appears to me to be directly in point. The mortgagor in the present case had completed his part of the contract and the mortgagee had failed to discharge the consideration. In my judgment, therefore, the mortgagor had a transferable claim and his assignee was entitled to sue the mortgagee for the amount. Mr. Kapur further argued for the respondents that in any case they were entitled to sue on their own behalf. He relied on 61 Cal 841 (9), but the view taken in that ruling is opposed to that expressed in 16 Lah 118 (10), in which it was held that where no trust had been created in favour of the plaintiff and he was not a party to the contract, the general rule applies, viz. that the contract affects only the parties to it and cannot be enforced by or against the person who is not a party even if the contract is made for his benefit. I see no ground for dissenting from the view expressed in that ruling. In any case the plaintiff never based his suit on that ground. It is clear from the plaint that he based his suit solely on the deed of assignment executed in his favour by Faujdar Khan as in para. 5 of the plaint he stated that the cause of action accrued on 30th October 1933, the date of the sale-deed. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss the matter further.

As regards the appellant's personal liability, it was suggested that the amount was chargeable on the property. Reference was made to 54 P R 1902 (11), but the facts of that case were totally different. They related to a case in which it was held that an agreement by a purchaser of an equity of redemption with his vendor to pay the mortgage (to which the mortgagee was no party) does not create a personal liability on the part of the purchaser, so as to entitle the mortgagee to obtain a personal decree against the purchaser, nor does such an agreement establish an express trust in favour of the mortgagee. Counsel's contention, therefore, in my opinion, is without force. As regards the question of interest, it was argued that this could not be calculated and should not be allowed. The mortgage executed by Faujdar Khan in favour of Sardar Khan, as already noted, clearly provided that the mortgagee would be responsible for the interest due on the debt with effect from the date of the mortgage. The interest claimed is at the rate of 1 per cent per mensem and it is admitted by Faujdar Khan in paragraph 6 of his pleas that that was the agreed rate. Sardar Khan merely denied any liability to pay interest and did not contest the question of the rate. The rate in itself is not unreasonable and I can see no ground for holding that the appellant is not liable to pay interest. In view of the above findings I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Misc. No. 143 of 1935, Decided on 29th October 1935, from order of Coldstream and Bhide, JJ., D/- 27th November 1934.

(a) Lahore High Court Rules and Orders, Vol. 5, Ch. 6-B—Pleader cannot act for any person unless they are empowered under O. 3, R. 4, Civil P. C.—Pleader can plead without power of attorney but must file memorandum of appearance.

The rules framed by the Lahore High Court in their Rules and Orders, Vol. 5, Ch. 6-B, "Powers and Duties of Advocates and Vakils," reproduce generally the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. They forbid any Advocate or Vakil to act for any person in any Court unless he has been appointed by an instrument in writing as required by O. 3, R. 4, Civil P. C. But they do not forbid an Advocate or Vakil to plead on behalf of any person without a power of attorney. An Advocate or Vakil engaged for the purpose of pleading only must, according to these rules, file in Court a memorandum of appearance. [P 199 C 2; P 200 C 1]

(b) Legal Practitioner—Power to compromise is inherent in Advocates in India—Pleader only authorized to appear can compromise—Power of attorney is not necessary.

The power to compromise an appeal is an implied power inherent in the position of an Advocate in India and therefore no power of attorney is necessary to empower a counsel to agree to a valid and binding compromise. The power to compromise may be validly exercised by an Advocate who has been authorised only to appear: 1930 P C 158, Foll. [P 200 C 1]

Achhru Ram and Indar Dev—for Respondents.

Order.—This is a petition submitted by four persons through Mr. Mohammad Alam for review of the judgment of this Court in First Appeal No. 791 of 1930 delivered on 27th November 1934, modifying a decree passed in favour of those four persons by the Senior Sub-Judge at Multan. The four petitioners were the plaintiffs in the suit in which the decree was passed by the Senior Sub-Judge. That decree had ordered that a certain entry in the record of rights of the village to which the parties belong should be amended by the substitution of the words 'abadi deh' for the words 'abadi chah' in the revenue records. Against that decree the defendants in the suit appealed to this Court on 24th April 1930. After an adjournment had been granted on the understanding that there was some chance of a compromise, the counsel appeared before us on 27th November 1934 and declared that the dispute had been compromised and that the parties were agreed that a decree should be passed declaring that the entry in the land revenue records 'abadi chah' which replaced the earlier entry "abadi deh" would not affect the rights of the plaintiffs, whatever those rights were before the new entry was made.

In view of this declaration this Bench accepted the appeal and passed a decree in the terms of the compromise as described to us. It is necessary to notice here that the four petitioners had conducted the suit in the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge as representing a large body of residents of the village Kothe-wala. It is contended before us by Mr. Mohammad Alam on the petitioner's behalf that our judgment of 27th November 1934 should be reviewed on the ground that the petitioners' counsel, Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din had not been authorised by them in writing to compromise on the terms stated to have been agreed upon and incorporated in the judgment of this Court. There is upon the record no instrument in writing authorising Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din to act or appear in the suit or appeal. There is however no doubt that he was the counsel for the petitioners, on whose behalf he had submitted the list of documents which they desired to have printed for the purpose of the appeal, and on whose behalf he appeared before us at least on two occasions. It is not denied that Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din was the petitioners' counsel, and indeed the petition itself refers to him as such. In support of this contention that the absence of any instrument in writing is an error apparent on the face of the record justifying interference in review, Mr. Mohammad Alam has referred us to O. 3, R. 4, Civil P. C., and to the rules framed by the High Court in their Rules and Orders, Vol. 5, Ch. 6-B, "Powers and Duties of Advocates and Vakils."

These rules reproduce generally the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. They forbid any Advocate or Vakil to act for any person in any Court unless he has been appointed by an instrument in writing as required by O. 3, R. 4, Civil P. C. But they do not forbid an Advocate or Vakil to plead on behalf of any person without a power of attorney. An Advocate or Vakil engaged for the purpose of pleading only must, according to these rules, file in Court a memorandum of appearance. On behalf of the respondents it is argued by Mr. Achhru Ram that the power to compromise an appeal is an implied power inherent in the position of an Advocate in India and therefore no power of attorney is necessary to empower a counsel to agree to a valid and binding compromise. In support of this argument he has referred to 57 Cal 1311 (1) at p. 1317 where the Privy Council has discussed the question at some length and given cogent reasons for laying down this proposition. In face of this judgment it must, I think, be held that the power to compromise may be validly exercised by an Advocate who has been authorised only to appear. It follows that Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din was competent to enter into a valid compromise on behalf of his clients even in the absence of a power of attorney. The absence of a power of attorney in such circumstances would be no more than an irregularity which would not affect the validity of the compromise and the decree passed upon it. We dismiss this petition accordingly with costs.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for possession of a certain site measuring 342 3/16 square feet described in the plaint in detail. The trial Court decreed the suit and the defendants went up in appeal. The learned District Judge set aside the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal. The case for the plaintiff was that he had purchased a certain area of land and that the defendants had encroached upon this area. The learned Judge went into the question very minutely and has arrived at the finding which is to the following effect :

In these circumstances it is impossible to hold that the defendants have in their possession any land belonging to the plaintiff, the more so as by no action of his has the plaintiff up to the institution of this suit given any indication of his belief to that effect except in his application to the Committee admitting encroachment and that it is nullified by his subsequent admissions in the plans Exs. D. 8/A, D. 2 and D. 3.

This is a finding of fact and is binding upon this Court in second appeal. The learned counsel for the appellant had however laid emphasis upon the fact that the appeal in the lower appellate Court had been filed beyond limitation and that although the matter had been raised before that Court, no finding has been recorded on the question of limitation. I had remitted the matter to the lower appellate Court to record a finding on the question of limitation thus raised. It was also suggested that, if the appeal were really filed beyond the prescribed period of limitation, the Judge should consider whether the appellants before him could ask for the benefit of S. 5, Lim. Act. The learned Judge has returned the finding which is in favour of the defendants-respondents. The judgment of the trial Court was pronounced on 11th April 1932 and the application for copies was filed on the same day but no deposit was made. He was called upon to deposit a sum of Rs. 10 on 29th April 1932. The money was deposited at once and the copies were delivered on 4th May. The appeal was filed on 31st May 1932. The learned Judge has rightly observed that, for any delay in making payment of the advance fee, it is the Copying Agency which is to blame and not the applicant and that therefore the application should have been held to have been duly made on 11th April 1932. It appears that a wrong practice prevails in the Jullundur District and the litigants do not deposit the necessary sum of Rs. 5 along with the application. In fact it is stated that the money is not accepted by the Copying Agent at that stage. The finding of the learned Judge is attacked by the learned counsel for the appellant by the argument that the Copying Department is the agent of the applicant and therefore if the agent is remiss, the applicant should suffer. There is support for this view in two single Bench cases reported as 104 I C 586 (1) and 35 P L R 713(2). There is also a Division Bench case of the Punjab Chief Court in 9 I C 381 (3).

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal has invited my attention to the rules framed by the High Court as well as by the Financial Commissioners. I have not been able to trace anything in those rules which would lend support to the proposition that the Copying Department is the agent of the applicant. It is true that the Copying Department is directly paid from a fund which represents the receipts from the copying fees, but that is all. I dare say there are other departments of administration which are financed in a similar way, but I cannot understand how the relationship of principal and agent can be established by this mode of payment. A copyist is appointed by the Deputy Commissioner and I suppose he is dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner also. The number of copyists in a particular District is determined by the Commissioner and the qualifications for the post of copyist are laid down by the same authority. I do not see how the applicants for copies, who are a fluctuating body, can be treated as principals and what control can they exercise over the Copying Department, its supposed agent.

With due respect I am not prepared to accept the view laid down in the three cases quoted above, that the Copying Department is the agent of the applicant for copies. In my humble judgment the Copying Department is a department under the control of the Deputy Commissioner and is a branch of the Deputy Commissioner's office. Once this position is established, it follows that no person can be damnified on account of the laches, ignorance or negligence of any official attached to a department connected with the administration of justice. In my opinion the learned Judge has given good and valid reasons for holding that the appeal was within time. The learned Judge has further fortified his decision by giving the benefit of S. 5, Lim. Act, to the defendants-respondents. Now, there are a number of decisions both of this Court as well as of the Allahabad High Court in which it is laid down that, when once a discretion has been exercised in the matter under S. 5, Lim. Act, by the lower appellate Court, the High Court would not interfere. The following cases are typical of the rule, though there are numerous other decisions too, to the same effect. The Lahore cases are 95 I C 565 (4) and 123 I C 83 (5). The Allahabad cases are 111 I C 816 (6), 91 I C 865 (7) and 74 I C 1039 (8). The leading cases, however, of the Allahabad High Court are

8. Ahmad Hussain v. Muhammad Fasiullah, 1929 All 455=74 I C 1039=45 All 432=21 A L J 319.

25 All 71 (9) and 26 All 327 (10), both followed in 102 I C 615 (11).

In my judgment the finding of the Court below, that the defendants-respondents had sufficient cause for not filing the appeal within the period of limitation on account of the erroneous practice prevailing in this District is correct, and must be upheld. I therefore find that the appeal before the lower appellate Court was filed within limitation. On the merits the lower appellate Court has disposed of the case by a finding of fact which is binding upon this Court in second appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 34 of 1935, Decided on 18th June 1935, from decree of Monroe, J., High Court, Lahore, D/- 8th January 1935.

(a) Pre-emption — Owner of agricultural estate—Conversion of agricultural land into building site—Owner is deprived of all privileges which he previously enjoyed.

The term "owner of the estate" as used in S. 15, Punjab Pre-emption Act imports ownership of agricultural land only and as soon as an area of land, which was admittedly agricultural before, is converted into a building site, it at once ceases to be a part of the estate and its owner, therefore, is deprived of all those privileges which he could otherwise enjoy under the law: Case law discussed.

(b) Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913), Ss. 15, 16—Law of pre-emption deals with three kinds of immoveable property—Right of pre-emption differs in respect of them—It indicates that urban immoveable property is placed on different basis than other two.

The law of pre-emption deals with three kinds of immoveable property, viz. agricultural land, village immoveable property and urban immoveable property. S. 15 provides the right of pre-emption in respect of the former two and S. 16 deals with this right in respect of urban immoveable property. The difference in the treatment of both the groups indicates that urban immoveable property was placed on a different basis from the other two classes of property so far as pre-emption was concerned. [P 205 C 2]

Gulam Mohi-ud-Din and Shabbir Ahmad—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Nazir Ahmad—for Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the judgment of Monroe, J. The sole question for determination in this case is, whether an owner of a plot of land which was once agricultural land situated within the municipal limits of a town and was afterwards built upon, can still be deemed to be an "owner of the estate" within the meaning of S. 15 (c), thirdly, of the Pre-emption Act, so as to be entitled to pre-empt the sale of agricultural land situated within the same limits. The trial Judge found that the plaintiff could not pre-empt in these circumstances, and both the District Judge and the learned Judge of this Court have concurred in this finding. The answer to this question is not so easy as it appears to be at first sight. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that by merely building upon a piece of land which used to be agricultural land before, but which, in spite of the building, is still assessed to land revenue and is shown in the revenue papers as bearing a separate khasra number, its owner does not cease to be an owner of the estate, even though the land itself ceases to be agricultural land and assumes the character of "urban immoveable property." The respondent on the other hand maintains that the term "owner of the estate" as used in S. 15, Pre-emption Act imports ownership of agricultural land only and as soon as an area of land, which was admittedly agricultural before, is converted into a building site, it at once ceases to be a part of the estate and its owner, therefore, is deprived of all those privileges which he could otherwise enjoy under the law. On behalf of the appellant, reliance has been placed on 30 P L R 1918 (1), 1933 Lah 213 (2) and 1933 Pesh 33 (3).

1. Salamat Rai v. Kanshi Ram, 1918 Lah 334=45 I C 887=30 P L R 1918.
2. Chanan Din v. Chanan Din, 1933 Lah 213=141 I C 363=34 P L R 227.
3. Faqir Mahomed v. Kala Khan, 1933 Pesh 33=141 I C 643.

In 30 P L R 1918 (1), the land in suit was situated within municipal limits but still remained a part of the estate known as Premgarh village. It was found that the town itself had not extended so far. It was held by a single Judge of the Chief Court that the locality in question still remained a part of the village and did not become a part of the town. It was on this basis that it was further held that the plaintiff who had purchased a small plot of land assessed to revenue must be regarded as an "owner of the estate" within the meaning of the Pre-emption Act. This authority, therefore, is clearly distinguishable inasmuch as in the present case it is not denied that the land on the basis of which pre-emption is claimed is a part of the town. In 1933 Lah 213 (2), the land on the basis of which pre-emption was resisted was situated within the area of Mozang. The plot though described as Qabil tamir (suitable for building) had not yet been built upon. It was also assessed to land revenue. Tapp, J., held that:

The determining factor in such cases was whether the area in question was or was not assessed to land revenue. Its extent, situation and the purpose for which it was brought or to which it may be devoted were absolutely immaterial.

With all respect, we consider that this is too general a proposition of law to enunciate, as in all such cases it will be necessary to determine where the land on the basis of which the right of pre-emption is claimed or resisted, is situated and to which purpose it has been devoted. Even apart from this, as the plot of land dealt with in that case had not been built upon and had, consequently, not assumed the character of 'urban immoveable property', this authority will be of no use to us here.

In 1933 Pesh 33 (3) the land purchased was admittedly situated in a village and so was the land on the basis of which the suit for pre-emption was resisted. That precedent also does not help the appellant. The respondent, on the other hand, has grounded his contention on the following authorities: 73 I C 200 (4), 73 I C 855 (5), 87 P R 1890 (6), 4. Sher Ali v. Kalandar Khan, (1923) 73 I C 200.

5. Mahomed Ali Khan v. Makhan Singh, (1923) 73 I C 855.
6. Kishan Dayal v. Ali Rakhsh, (1890) 87 P R 1890.

42 P R 1906 (7), 57 P R 1906 (8), 90 P R 1907 (9), 84 P R 1910 (10), 109 P L R 1908 (11), 106 P R 1913 (12), 60 I C 580 (13), 1924 Lah 662 (14), 1927 Lah 799 (15) and 1929 Lah 164 (16). The cases of 73 I C 200 (4) and 73 I C 855 (5) are from Peshawar, and were both decided by Mr. Pison, J. C. In both it was held that any portion of an agricultural village may lose its character as such and become, by the force of circumstances, a suburb of a town and such a suburb was to be regarded as a sub-division of a town for purposes of pre-emption. This proposition is not denied in the present case. In fact, as stated above, it is admitted that the property on the basis of which pre-emption is claimed has assumed the character of urban immoveable property. But if these judgments intend to lay down that no agricultural land can exist within the limits of a town we are unable to endorse this proposition, as this will clearly go against the definition of urban immoveable property as given in S. 3, Pre-emption Act.

In 87 P R 1890 (6) the property in dispute consisting of shops and a chaubara was situated in a bazaar in the suburbs of Batala. Plaintiffs claimed pre-emption on the ground that they were co-sharers in Mauza Faizpur within the boundaries of which the land had been entered at the settlement that had taken place sometime before. It was found that the bazaar was built about 1868 on a site which was previously a graveyard adjoining one of the gates of Batala. In these circumstances, it was held by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court that the property should be regarded as situated in a town. The character of the land in suit before us is clearly different from that of the land in the reported case and this authority, therefore, cannot serve as a guide in the determination of the question at issue in the present case. Both 42 P R 1906 (7) and 57 P R 1906 (8) relate to Multan to which place the present suit belongs. In the former case, the subject of consideration was a suburb of Multan City known as "Taraf Ravi", and in the latter, was Mohalla Gidarpur which was a part of Bairum Pak Darwaza, admittedly a sub-division of the city of Multan. Beyond proving that certain suburbs had lately sprung up outside the walled limits of Multan, these authorities do not lay anything which can help us in the disposal of the present case.

In 90 P R 1907 (9), it was conceded that the quarter known as Killa Gujar Singh even to that day constituted a village and contained a village community. It was also found that within its boundaries there existed a fairly large area of agricultural land which was assessed to land revenue and there were also the ordinary village abadi, the ordinary village proprietary body, the ordinary village officers, a record-of-rights, etc.

It also admitted that Killa Gujar Singh in part retained its former character as a village community. It was however held that the land then in suit had for some time past become part and parcel of Lahore city and had lost its character of agricultural land. This judgment does help the respondents to some extent inasmuch as it lays down that even if agricultural land exists in an estate, it is possible for some part of that estate to lose that character or to assume that of urban immoveable property. In 84 P R 1910 (10), the abadi under consideration was the abadi jadid of the old village of Garhi Awan, a suburb of Hafizabad. It was held in that case that the abadi jadid must be looked upon as a subdivision within the meaning of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. It is not clear from the judgment however whether the site sold was assessed to land revenue or not. This authority, therefore, cannot serve as a good precedent in the case before us.

Similarly in 109 P L R 1908 (11), which was considered in 1933 Lah 213 (2), the land on which the claim was based was not assessed to revenue. In 106 P R 1913 (12) the pre-emption suit was in respect of house property in a village. Neither the vendor nor the vendee was a member of the village proprietary body or had any status in the village otherwise than as a house-holder. The pre-emptor was a Jat proprietor and his claim was resisted on the ground that the vendee was an owner of the estate and in these circumstances, his right was equal to that of the pre-emptor. The claim was however decreed. On appeal a Division Bench of the Chief Court made the following observations:

It appears to us quite impossible to give strained interpretation to the term 'owner of the estate' as including owners of houses in the abadi, merely because the abadi may be technically part of the estate. We entertain no doubt that the law was intended to exclude mere house-holders, and we do not even think that a pedantically literal construction of the words 'owner of the estate' would justify an extension or application of the term in a manner which is so clearly opposed to the whole principle upon which the Pre-emption Act is based. To justify such construction we should have to read the words 'owner of the estate' as synonymous with the words 'owner in the estate' and we have no authority for doing so. We think that the proper view is to take the words used in their generally accepted meaning, as understood in Revenue literature and as connoting exclusively what is usually described as the proprietary body of the village.

We are in respectful agreement with this view and these observations will apply with much greater force to the case before us, as here the land on the basis of which the right of pre-emption is claimed, is not even village immoveable property, but urban immoveable property. In 60 I C 580 (13), a single Judge of this Court held that the mere fact that a plot of land is assessed to land revenue would not make it agricultural land, unless it is proved that the plot is occupied or let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture. To the same effect is 1929 Lah 164 (16). This proposition, as has been remarked above, is not denied by the appellant. In 1924 Lah 662 (14), a Division Bench of this Court held that the expression 'village' connotes ordinarily an area occupied by a body of men mainly dependent upon agriculture or occupations subservient thereto. It was further observed that the reported cases contained many instances of rural areas in the vicinity of a town which had ceased to be rural and grown into a suburb of the town, and that such areas had been held to be governed by rules applying to urban properties. These remarks were quoted with approval in 1927 Lah 799 (15), but in neither of the two cases it is clear that the land in suit was assessed to land revenue. We may remark in connection with these judgments that in excluding the possibility of the existence of agricultural land within the limits of towns they go beyond the scope of the Pre-emption Act.

The above analysis of the authorities cited on either side indicates that the trend of authority is in favour of the respondents. Even under the general scheme of the Act, the position maintained by them appears to us to be sound in law. The law of pre-emption deals with three kinds of immoveable property, viz., agricultural land, village immoveable property and urban immoveable property. These terms have been defined in S. 3, Pre-emption Act. 'Urban immoveable property' means immoveable property within the limits of a town, other than agricultural land. 'Village immoveable property' means immoveable property within the limits of a village, other than agricultural land. 'Agricultural land' means land as defined in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900. While dealing with the Pre-emption Act, therefore, we are concerned with these kinds of immoveable property only, namely, (a) immoveable property situated in a town, (b) immoveable property situated in a village and (c) agricultural land wherever it may be situated. S. 15, provides for the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land and village immoveable property, and S. 16 deals with this right in respect of urban immoveable property. This separate treatment of urban immoveable property indicates to some extent that it was intended by the Legislature to be placed on a different basis from the other two classes of property. Moreover, the word 'estate' as defined in the Punjab Land Revenue Act, in our opinion, applies to agricultural lands only and does not include any other class of property. As soon as agricultural land is converted into building sites, whether in a village or in a town, its owner so to say walks out of the estate and ceases to have any connection with it any longer. He establishes a new character for his possession and is, therefore, to be treated on that basis. To hold otherwise will be to go against the spirit of the Pre-emption Act. In these circumstances, we hold that the plaintiff being an owner of urban immoveable property was not entitled to pre-empt the sale of the agricultural land within the limits of the Multan town. We, therefore, affirm the decision of the learned Judge of this Court and dismiss this appeal. In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, we make no order as to costs before us.

Custom (Punjab)—Succession—Ranjhas of Bhalwal Tahsil, Shahpur District — Self-acquired property of father—Married daughters do not exclude 3rd degree collaterals.

Khurshid Zaman—for Appellants.

S. R. Sawhney and Inder Deva—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of the case, which have given rise to the present appeal, have been given in great detail in the remand order of this Court dated 13th November 1934, and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. The parties are Ranjhas by caste and belong to village Midh Ranjah, Tahsil Bhalwal, in the Shahpur district. The only question for determination in this appeal is, whether, according to the custom prevailing among the parties, the appellants, who are the married daughters of Ziada deceased, are entitled to succeed to his self-acquired property to the exclusion of his collaterals in the third degree. The Customary Law of the Shahpur district prepared by Sir James Wilson in 1896, contains the following provisions regarding the rights of daughters and their issue:

Q.—Under what circumstances are daughters entitled to inherit? Are they excluded by the sons or by the widow, or by the near male kindred of the deceased? If they are excluded by the near male kindred, is there any fixed limit of relationship within which such near kindred must stand towards the deceased in order to exclude his daughters?

A.—All Musalmans.

A married daughter in no case inherits her father's estate or any share in it. An unmarried daughter succeeds to no share in presence of agnate descendants of the deceased, or of her own mother; but if there be no agnate descendants and no sonless widow, the unmarried daughters succeed in equal shares to the whole of their father's property, moveable and immoveable, till their marriage, when it reverts to the agnate heirs.

In view of the entries in the riwaj-i-am it was for the appellants to establish that they were entitled to succeed to the property in dispute to the exclusion of the respondents who are collaterals of the last male holder in the third degree. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel for the appellants on four instances which may be examined in detail :

1. Ex. P-7. Mt. Sahiban, a daughter of Mohammad Hayat, caste Jaurah, of Ghazni, Tahsil Shahpur, was given a decree by Sheikh Rukn-ud-Din, Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, on 31st May 1921, to the effect that she was entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to the collaterals. The case was decided in favour of the daughter on the ground that, according to Art. 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, the general custom in the province was that a daughter was preferred to the collaterals as regards the self-acquired property of her father. Reliance was also placed on 1 Lah 365 (1) wherein it was held that by custom a daughter was generally preferred to collaterals in succession to "self-acquired" property of her father. This ruling was also based on Art. 23, Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law. The provisions of the riwaj-i-am were not considered by the learned subordinate Judge nor was any attention paid to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 P R 1917 (2) to the effect that the entries in the riwaj-i-am were a strong piece of evidence, and it was for the party alleging a custom contrary to that contained in the riwaj-i-am to prove such custom.

2. Ex. P-8. This is a copy of an extract from the register of mutations relating to Mauza Sad Rahman in Tahsil Shahpur. It shows that a son-in-law of Amir Ali Shah was allowed by the collaterals to retain possession of the property of Amir Ali Shah on the ground that he was a near relative of the collaterals and the deceased, and had been placed in possession of the property during the lifetime of Ghulam Fatima, the widow of the last male holder. In the present case it has not been alleged or established that the plaintiffs have been married to near relatives, or that any collaterals have consented that they should retain possession of their fathers' property. 3. Ex. P-4. In this case also the daughter of the last male holder was married to a first cousin of hers and her husband was, therefore, allowed an extra share, and the collaterals do not seem to have raised any objection to this arrangement. 4. It was held in 1 Lah 284 (3), that amongst the Sipras of Miana Hazaro, Tahsil Bhera, district Shahpur, a daughter was entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to collaterals of the third degree. The decision was, however, based on para. 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law and it was stated that the general custom of the province was that daughters were preferred to collaterals. This decision is not of much assistance to the appellants as it is well settled now that a party cannot rely on the existence of an alleged general custom to discharge the onus cast upon it in view of the entries in the riwaj-i-am. The above mentioned four instances were the only instances relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellants. We, therefore, hold that the appellant, the married daughters of the last male holder, have failed to establish that they are entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of their father in preference to the respondents. We, therefore, dismiss their appeal. Parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Judgment.—The parties are Jats of village Jugan in the District of Hissar and the question for decision in this appeal is whether in respect of the self-acquired property of a male proprietor daughters are preferential heirs to collaterals. The learned District Judge has held that the daughters have a preferential right to succeed to such property but has granted a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act, to the appellants. In reply to question No. 57 proprietors of different tribes including the Jats stated that daughters had no right to succeed in preference to collaterals either in the case of self-acquired or of ancestral land. The compiler of the riwaj-i-am, however, was of opinion that this reply represented more the wish of the proprietors than actual facts. He gave instances of succession of daughters to the self-acquired property and could find no instance to the contrary in favour of the collaterals. There have been two subsequent cases in the subordinate Courts in which daughters have been preferred to collaterals, and a Division Bench of this Court in 9 Lah 496 (1) did not accept as correct the entry in the riwaj-i-am in the case of Rajput Mussalmans of Hissar. It is significant that the entry relied upon by the appellants is to be found only in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the settlement of 1863 and though there have been two subsequent settlements the entry has not been repeated in the wajib-ul-arz prepared on those occasions. In view of what has been stated above, I have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Additional District Judge that with respect to the self-acquired property among the Jats of Hissar District daughters are preferred as heirs to collaterals. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 278 of 1935, Decided on 8th July 1935, from decree of Sm. C. C. Judge, Lahore, D/- 27th February 1935.

Company—Slight delay in according sanction for transfer of share—Company is not justified in paying dividends to non-members—Company is not liable for damages.

A slight delay in according sanction to a transfer of shares will not justify a payment of dividends to a person not yet entered as a member on the books of the company and such a delay will not make the company liable to an action for damages. [P 208 C 1].

Pratap Singh—for Petitioner.

Basant Krishan—for Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioner purchased certain shares in the Lahore Electric Supply Company and applied for sanction to their transfer on 22nd and 23rd June, and 4th and 29th July 1933. His applications came up before a meeting of the Directors on 5th August 1933, and were accepted. In the meantime, the company had declared a bonus of Rs. 2, on each share on 29th July and this was paid out to the members, whose names appeared on the books of the Company on that date. The petitioner claims that the bonus should have been paid to him as the transfers had actually taken place before the bonus was declared. He sues the company for recovery of the amount thus calculated as due to him, less the amount that he has been able to recover from one of the transferors, or, in the alternative, for damages for the negligence of the company in failing to register the transfers as promptly as might have been done. The Judge of the Small Cause Court has dismissed the suit holding that the money was properly paid to the members whose names appeared on the books of the Company at the time the bonus was declared and that there was no unreasonable delay in having the transfers registered. The petitioner has applied for revision.

There was one meeting of the Directors which took place after the first three applications had been received. This was on 15th July. Apparently the papers came up before the Chairman on that date, but he called for further particulars with the result that the applications were not laid before the other Directors until the next meeting. Counsel for the petitioners has cited a number of authorities to show that the failure to lay an apparently unobjectionable application for transfer before the next meeting may be considered undue delay for the purpose of admitting an application for rectification of the registers of a Company under S. 38, Companies Act. But he has not been able to put forward any authority for the proposition that a slight delay in according sanction to a transfer of shares would justify a payment of dividends to a person not yet entered as a member on the books of the Company, or that such a delay would make the Company liable to an action for damages. It is to be observed that the transferors have not been made parties to the suit. I do not think that there is any justification for interfering with the decision of the Small Cause Court, and I dismiss the application for revision with costs.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiffs brought a suit for possession of a vacant site situate in the abadi of Mauza Rurki Khas, about 9 marlas in area, alleging that they were the owners of the site but that the defendants had forcibly built a chhappar (or kotha) and a khurli about six months before the suit and had also planted a manure-heap there. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and alleged that they had been in possession for over 40 years. The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs were the owners of the site, but dismissed the suit on the ground that they had failed to prove their possession within 12 years of the institution of the suit. On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned District Judge upheld the finding of the trial Court that title was with the plaintiffs, but holding that the defendants had failed to prove adverse possession, as the chhappar in dispute had been constructed seven years before the suit and the khurli was an unsubstantial structure, accepted the appeal and decreed the suit. The defendants preferred a second appeal to this Court but it was dismissed by Abdul Rashid, J., sitting in Single Bench. The learned Judge, following 1930 Lah 608 (1) and 1933 Lah 722 (2), held that on the facts found by the District Judge the case was governed by Art. 144. He however granted a certificate for a further appeal under the Letters Patent.

That the title in the site in dispute is with the plaintiffs has been concurrently found by the Courts below and is no longer disputed. It appears that there was litigation between the parties in 1892 when the question of title was raised and decided in favour of the plaintiffs. A decree for possession was accordingly passed in their favour and it was duly executed, and a dakhnama filed. It has been contended on behalf of the appellants, however, that as in the plaint the plaintiffs had alleged possession and dispossession within twelve years, mere proof of anterior title is not sufficient and that the plaintiffs must further prove that they had been in possession within twelve years of the suit. It has also been pointed out that the cases relied on by the learned Judge in Chambers have since been disapproved by a Full Bench of this Court in 16 Lah 442 (3). This is no doubt true. It was held by the Full Bench that in the two cases cited, the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 39 Mad 617 (4) had been given a much wider meaning than was warranted by the actual decision in that case, and that it is not correct to say that in every suit for possession, where the plaintiff had established his title, it lies on the defendant to prove his adverse possession, even though the plaintiff had come into Court alleging his possession and dispossession. The property in dispute in the case before the Full Bench was a residential house which was found to be in possession of the defendant and it was held that it lay on the plaintiff to establish his possession within twelve years of the suit. It must be held therefore that the present suit is governed by Art. 142 and not 144.

In the case before us however, the property in dispute was a taur, the major portion of which is still a vacant site. It is conceded by the plaintiffs' learned counsel, that in cases relating to vacant sites possession follows title. It is also well-settled that in such cases the mere fact that a trespasser has taken possession of a portion of a vacant site cannot affect the constructive possession of the real owner on the portion not trespassed upon. In such cases, the wrong-doer can by lapse of time gain title only to the area actually possessed by him, and in suits governed by Art. 142, it is only with regard to the portion of the site actually in possession of the defendant that the plaintiff will be required to prove his possession within twelve years. It must be held therefore that qua the portion of the site which is still vacant, the suit has been rightly decreed. As regards the portion actually built upon by the defendants, the plaintiffs must show that this portion was a vacant site within twelve years of the suit, and if they succeed in proving this fact, their constructive possession within the statutory period will be presumed. Whether or not this has been proved in a particular case is a question of fact to be decided on the evidence. In the case before us, the lower Courts have given no finding on the point, but we do not think it necessary to remand the case for this purpose. We have allowed counsel to read to us the evidence, and after hearing him and taking into consideration the nature of the structures and their situation, have come to the conclusion that this portion of the site was vacant and unoccupied until about seven years before the institution of the suit, when the defendants constructed the kotha (or chhappar) on it. Therefore the plaintiffs' possession within twelve years of the suit on this portion also must be held proved.

I would accordingly hold that the suit is not barred by Art. 142 and has been rightly decreed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

of the fact that his counsel had noted on the notice issued to him that he is unable to appear. Under the circumstances the Judge ought not to take the drastic step of dismissing the appeal for default and should restore the appeal. [P 210 C 2]

Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—An appeal before the learned District Judge of Gujranwala, was dismissed for default under O. 41, R. 17, Civil P. C., on 28th June 1934. An application was made by the appellant for the restoration of his appeal, but that application was dismissed on 13th August 1934. The plaintiff has filed an appeal to this Court from the order of 13th August 1934. The District Judge of Gujranwala does his appellate work mostly at the headquarters at Gujranwala but sometimes he goes to Gujrat to hear appeals. There were several postponements of the appeal in question and an order was made on 10th February 1934 fixing 28th June 1934 for the hearing of the appeal by the District Judge at Gujrat and the parties and their counsel were to be informed. On 16th June 1934 there was another order that the appeal would be heard on 28th June 1934 not at Gujrat but at Gujranwala and the parties and their counsel were to be informed by means of notices. By virtue of this order a notice was issued to Mr. Har Gopal, Bar-at-law of Gujrat, counsel for the appellant, whereby he was informed that he should appear on 28th June 1934 at Gujranwala for arguing the appeal. There is an endorsement on this notice by the counsel in these words: "I am engaged only for Sadr Gujrat, dated 23rd June 1934." A similar notice was issued on the same date to the appellant Anant Ram and he was also directed to appear at Gujranwala on 28th June 1934 when arguments were to be heard. The process-server made a report that Anant Ram was not to be found at his house, as he had gone to Jammu and Kashmir on some business and that it was not definitely known when he would come back and, therefore, service could not be effected upon him. The notice was accordingly returned unserved to the Court. This was also on 23rd June 1934. On the date of hearing the appellant was not present either personally or through counsel and, as already stated, the appeal was dismissed for default.

In dealing with the application for restoration the learned District Judge completely lost sight of the fact that a notice had been issued on 18th June 1934 not only to the counsel but to the appellant also and that that notice had been returned unserved as the party could not be found. He has disposed of the application for restoration solely on the ground that, because appellant's counsel had been informed and had not put in appearance, the order of dismissal was justified and the appeal could not be restored. In my opinion, when the District Judge took it upon himself to give notice of the hearing not only to the counsel but also to the party, he ought to have, in ordinary fairness, waited until the notice was duly served upon the party, especially in view of the fact that his counsel had noted on the notice issued to him that he was engaged only to argue the appeal at Gujrat. Under the circumstances detailed above, the learned Judge ought not to have taken the drastic step of dismissing the appeal for default and should have restored the appeal on the application of the appellant. After all, the client had done all that he could be reasonably expected to do and if his counsel refused to appear on his behalf, at least he should have been given an opportunity of being heard after notice had been duly served upon him. I therefore allow the appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge refusing to restore the case and remand the case to the Court of the District Judge to re-admit the appeal and to dispose of it according to law. I make no order as to costs.

Second Appeal No. 1890 of 1931, Decided on 16th October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Shahpur, D/- 8th July 1931.

Custom (Punjab)—Will—Wilson's Customary Law, Ss. 8 and 10—Shahpur District—Sayyeds cannot dispose of property by will on daughter's son.

Among the miscellaneous Musalman tribes including Sayyeds of the Shahpur district, there is no general power of devising property by will in favour of daughter's sons: 1921 Lah 210; 1925 Lah 231; 26 P R 1901; 1933 Lah 158 and 1935 Lah 208, Ref. [P 212 C 1].

Ram Chand Manchanda—for Appellants.

L. M. Datta—for Respondents.

Currie, J.—The facts leading to this second appeal may be briefly stated: One Mardan Shah made a gift of part of his land in 1909 to his daughter's sons, and subsequently, on 14th February 1910 executed two wills in their favour bequeathing to them his entire land after the death of his son's widow. The collaterals sued to contest the gift and obtained a decree in August 1913. About five months after the death of Mt. Jind Waddi the daughter's sons of Mardan Shah brought the present suit for a declaration that they were entitled to the entire property of Mardan Shah on the basis of the wills. Their suit was dismissed and the appeal was also dismissed. The only point to be decided in this appeal is the question whether a Sayyed of the Shahpur district can dispose of his ancestral property by will. In Wilson's Customary law of the Shahpur district the question of wills is dealt with in S. 8 at p. 63. All tribes answered that a proprietor could make a disposition of his property to take effect after his death but it must be made before trustworthy witnesses, and should, if possible, be in writing. Mr. Wilson noted that the custom of making wills was an entirely new one and contrary to the whole spirit of the tribal custom. In answer to Question 2 all tribes stated that so far as the power of bequest existed it was subject to numerous limitations and in no case exceeded the power of gift. We have therefore to refer to S. 10 which deals with the powers as to gifts. The answer to Question 11 is given in considerable detail and in the case of miscellaneous Musalmans, among whom Sayyeds would be included, the answer is to the effect that a father, whether having sons or not, can make to a daughter or sister a gift of part of his immovable property, not exceeding the share that would go to her by inheritance according to the Muhammadan law, but he cannot, without the consent of the agnates, make a gift to such relative of a larger share than this or of any part of the immovable property to a daughter's son, or son-in-law. This answer is entirely opposed to the appellant's claim. Counsel, however, argues that the answer to Question 12 is in his favour as in that question miscellaneous tribes and Awans stated that a proprietor having no son or son's son, can without the consent of the agnate heirs, make a gift of immovable property, ancestral or acquired, to persons not related to him. The answer to that question however deals with the general proposition while we are concerned with the case of a daughter's son which is dealt with clearly and in detail in the answer to Question 11.

The riwaj-i-am is therefore in my opinion definitely opposed to the claim of the appellant, and the question is whether there is any evidence to rebut that presumption. As regards the oral evidence reference was made to P. Ws. 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10. Their evidence is really of no value. The only helpful instances which they mention are instances which are still liable to be challenged in the Courts. While putting forward instances of gifts to daughters none of these witnesses are acquainted with any gift in favour of a daughter's son. Apart from this evidence Mr. Manchanda has referred to certain decided cases with which I will deal seriatim. In 26 P R 1901 (1) the parties were Awans and a will in favour of a daughter's son was upheld, the learned Judges quoting with approval Sir William Rattigan's remark:

The Customary law ordinarily recognises no distinction between the power of making verbal or written transfer of property inter vivos. Nor, semble, where an unrestricted power of transfer is recognised to exist, between a transfer inter vivos and one to take effect after death.

In 1921 Lah 210 (2) a gift to a non-relative among Harrals was upheld on the strength of the answer to Question 12 in the absence of any instances. In 1925 Lah 231 (3), a sale among Tiwanas was upheld on the ground that unrestricted power of alienation was mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz of three Tiwana villages. In 34 P L R 223 (4) in a very brief judgment a gift by a Bhatti (Nangiana) Rajput in favour of persons whom he alleged to be sons was upheld though the donees were held to have failed to disprove that relationship. In 16 Lah 656 (5) a mortgage executed by a Vains proprietor was upheld on the ground that as, in view of the answer to Question 12, a proprietor among the miscellaneous Musalman tribes had the power to make a gift he therefore had the power to make a mortgage. In addition in that case the wajib-ul-arz of the village showed that all the proprietors had unrestricted powers of alienation. From the above it will be seen that the only instance dealing with a will is that discussed in 26 P R 1901 (1). That case related not to Sayyeds but to Awans, a tribe who have exceptionally wide powers of alienation. In my opinion that instance cannot be held to apply to Sayyeds, especially as in the answer to Question 11, S. 10, miscellaneous Musalman tribes gave an answer different to that given by the Awans. Apart from the cases cited, the only other documentary evidence is the wajib-ul-arz of 1858 (Ex. D-3), in which it is stated that:

Pichhlags and the sons of an unwedded wife do not get a share, nor can a daughter get her father's property. If a proprietor gives a part or whole of his land to his daughter or adopted son in his lifetime by means of a Sanad and puts her or him in possession, she or he will certainly get it. If a daughter does not want to marry she will come into possession of her father's property. When she marries, her father's collaterals will perform her marriage. Then she will cease to have any concern with the property; the persons performing her marriage shall own it.

This document shows that there were restrictions on the gift to a daughter and no mention whatever is made of gifts to daughter's sons. To sum up, in my opinion there is nothing to rebut the presumption raised by the answer detailing the restrictions on gifts given in answer 11, S. 10, which must be held to apply to wills in lieu of the answer given to Question 2, S. 8. Those sections read together clearly show that, among the miscellaneous Musalman tribes of the Shahpur district, there is no general power of devising property by will in favour of daughter's sons. In my opinion the appeal was rightly dismissed by the learned District Judge and I would dismiss the present appeal with costs.

JAI LAL, J.

v.

L. Ganpat Rai — Judgment-debtor — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 1060 of 1935, Decided on 14th November 1935, from order of Dist. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 11th March 1935.

(a) Appeal — Jurisdiction — Lower Court entertaining appeal though incompetent to hear it—Appeal lies to High Court on point of jurisdiction.

Where the lower appellate Court has heard an appeal which it was not competent to entertain, it is open to the High Court to set aside the order entertaining the appeal, and therefore an appeal lies to High Court merely on the question of jurisdiction. [P 213 C 1]

(b) Inherent jurisdiction—Court exercising inherent jurisdiction—No appeal lies.

So far as Lahore High Court is concerned no appeal lies from an order passed by a Court in exercise of its inherent jurisdiction under S. 151, Civil P. C. [P 213 C 1]

(c) Landlord and tenant—Refund.— Lessee paying to lessor's decree-holder—Lease failing—Lessee can get refund from decree-holder of lessor.

Where the lessee pays money to decree-holders of the lessor on the basis of a lease which is subsequently set aside and through no fault of his, the lessee has a right to get a refund of the money from the person to whom he paid the money. [P 213 C 1]

Achhru Ram—for Appellant.

Qabul Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—There were three decrees against the same judgment-debtor. They were all being executed and, in the course of the execution proceedings, the judgment-debtor's land was farmed out to the respondent Ganpat Rai who paid the rateable shares to the other decree-holders out of the amount for which the judgment-debtor's land was leased to him. After the death of the judgment-debtor on the suit of a collateral, the lease was set aside having been held to be invalid. Ganpat Rai appealed from the decree of the trial Judge setting aside the lease which had been passed on 17th December 1925. The appeal was dismissed. He presented a second appeal in this Court which also was dismissed on 14th June 1930.

After having failed in all the Courts Ganpat Rai applied for refund to him by the other two decree-holders of the amounts realized by them. This application was made admittedly within three years from the decree of this Court but beyond three years from the decree of the trial Judge, dated 17th December 1925. The Sub-Judge dismissed this application on the ground that it was barred by time and that he would not exercise his discretion under S. 151, Civil P. C., in favour of Ganpat Rai. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge before whom an objection was raised that from an order passed under S. 151 no appeal lay but the District Judge held that an appeal lay to him and finally held that the application was not barred by time and directed a refund by the other two decree-holders to Ganpat Rai. One of the decree-holders who has been ordered to make a refund has appealed to this Court and the objection is repeated that no appeal lay to the District Judge from an order passed by the Sub-Judge on an application under S. 151, Civil P. C. The respondent's counsel also has raised an objection that if it be held that no appeal lay to the District Judge it necessarily follows that no appeal lies to this Court, but there is ample authority that where the lower appellate Court has heard an appeal which it was not competent to entertain, as the order appealed against was not appealable, then it is open to this Court to set aside the order entertaining the appeal, and therefore an appeal lies to this Court merely on the question of jurisdiction.

It is true that there are cases decided in other High Courts that an appeal lies from an order passed under S. 151, Civil P. C., but so far as this Court is concerned it has consistently held that from an order passed by a Court in exercise of its inherent jurisdiction under S. 151, Civil P. C., no appeal lies: therefore the appeal before the District Judge was incompetent. The proceedings however are before me and I consider that this is a fit case in which I should set right the injustice done to the respondent Ganpat Rai by the illegal order passed by the trial Judge. It is obvious that Ganpat Rai is entitled to relief. He has paid money to the other decree-holders on the basis of a lease which has subsequently been set aside and through no fault of his. The interests of the three decree-holders in the lease were identical and it is therefore the legal right of Ganpat Rai to obtain refund of the money now that the consideration has failed. Even if another suit lies it would be unfair to drive him to such a course if relief can otherwise be given to him.

But it is contended by Mr. Achhru Ram for the appellant that the application made to the Subordinate Judge was barred by time. He contends that Art. 181, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, governs the application. This proposition is not denied by the respondent but the question is from what date the time runs for an application made for the refund of the money under the circumstances. The appellant's counsel relies upon a judgment of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported in 56 Cal 61 (1). That case was however dissented from in 1933 Rang 180 (2). It is not however necessary for me to decide in which of the two cases the correct view has been taken. In my opinion in this case the facts are peculiar as the appeal to the District Judge and to the High Court against the decree setting aside the lease was preferred by Ganpat Rai in the common interest of all the three decree-holders, including the appellant. It must therefore be assumed that all the three decree-holders were trying to maintain the lease up to the decision by the High Court, and it was only when they had failed in attaining that object that the right of Ganpat Rai to obtain refund from the other decree-holders came into existence. In these circumstances this case is distinguishable from 56 Cal 61 (1). In my opinion therefore the application was not barred by time, and I set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct that Maghi Mal do pay Rs. 357-11-0 to Ganpat Rai, and Devi Dayal to pay Rs. 123 to Ganpat Rai. Parties to bear their own costs.

Basant Singh—Petitioner—Appellant.

Kartar Singh and others—Objectors—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 1471 of 1933, Decided on 18th June 1935.

(a) Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925), Ss. 8, 7 (1)—Person describing property as private one and not claiming to be hereditary office-holder is not entitled to file petition under S. 8.

A person claiming a property as his private property and investing it with a sectarian character can under no straining of language be described as an office holder attached thereto, much less a hereditary office holder. Moreover, if a person wishes to claim the benefit of the section, he must expressly assert that the place is a Gurdwara and that he holds any hereditary office attached to it. If he does not do so but describes the property as his own private property and never claims to be an office-holder, he is not competent to file petition under S. 8.

(b) Practice—Appellate Court—Evidence already on record—Appellate Court can itself weigh and discuss it and need not remand case for finding on such point.

The appellate Court need not send the case back to the lower Court merely for the purpose of obtaining a finding on the evidence that already exists on the record which the appellate Court itself can weigh and discuss. [P 214 C 2]

Bhagat Singh—for Appellant.

Gurcharan Singh—for Respondents.

Din Mohammad, J.—This is an appeal from the order of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal. It has arisen out of a petition presented by one Basant Singh under S. 8, Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925). A declaration having been made that the place in dispute is a Sikh Gurdwara, Basant Singh has appealed. A preliminary objection has been taken that neither did the petition lie nor does the appeal, inasmuch as Basant Singh is not a hereditary office holder within the meaning of S. 8, Sikh Gurdwaras Act. Under S. 2 (4) (iv) "hereditary office holder" means the holder of an office, the succession to which, before 1st January 1920, devolved, according to hereditary right or by nomination, upon the office holder for the time being. Under S. 2 (4) (i) "office" means any office by virtue of which the holder thereof participates in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein. When a notification is published under the provisions of sub-s. (1), S. 7 in respect of any Gurdwara, a petition can be presented under S. 8 either by a hereditary office holder or by any twenty or more worshippers of the Gurdwara. In order to set the law in motion therefore if the worshippers do not move in the matter, the person moving must be the holder of an office by virtue of which he participates in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals therein and that that office must be one the succession to which before 1st January 1920 devolved, according to hereditary right or by nomination, upon the office holder for the time being.

In the petition presented on 28th October 1921, Basant Singh claimed to be the "owner and possessor" of the Dharamsala. In his statement before the issues, he averred that the place in suit was his residential house and that it was not a Dharamsala. In his statement as a witness for himself the only modification that he introduced was that he asserted that he was a Granthi, but he described the property as the house all the same. It is evident therefore that neither in his pleadings nor in his statement before or after the issues, he claimed to be a hereditary office holder within the meaning of S. 8 read with S. 2 (4). A person claiming a property as his private property and investing it with a sectarian character can under no straining of language be described as an office holder attached thereto; much less a hereditary office holder. Moreover, if a person wishes to claim the benefit of the section, he must expressly assert that the place is a Gurdwara and that he holds any hereditary office attached to it. Not having done so, the plaintiff was not competent to lodge the petition and consequently has no locus standi to present the appeal. Counsel for the appellant has asked for a remand on the ground that the Tribunal has failed to give a finding on this point but, in view of the fact that the petitioner's status was definitely challenged by the objectors on this ground and the parties were represented by counsel before the Tribunal and led evidence on all the points raised, we do not consider it necessary to accede to this request, and send the case back to the lower Court merely for the purpose of obtaining a finding, from the Tribunal, on the evidence that already exists on the record, and which we can ourselves weigh and discuss. We are satisfied that the appellant does not fulfil the requirements of law and accordingly hold that the appeal by him is incompetent.

We dismiss the appeal but, in view of the fact that the Tribunal left that matter undecided, although it was raised before them, we do not burden the appellant with costs of the respondents before us.

Second Appeal No. 1128 of 1935, Decided on 25th October 1935, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 1st April 1935.

Contract—Wager—Nature of transaction—
Court should gather intention of parties from surrounding circumstances besides contract.

In order to determine whether a contract is a wagering contract, the Court will not only look at the terms of the written contract, but also probe among the surrounding circumstance to find out the true intention of the parties. These surrounding circumstances could only be proved by evidence outside the written contract. Courts will have to look behind the form of the contract to the real intention of the parties, which may be gathered from the oral evidence and actual transactions between them: Universal Stock Exchange Ltd. v. David Strachan, (1896) A C 166; 1921 Cal 362 and 1917 P C 101, Foll.; 24 Bom 227, Disting. [P 215 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 670. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging that they were pucca arhtias, that they had been making purchases for and on behalf of the defendants and that, as a result of these transactions a sum of Rs. 670 was due by the defendants to the plaintiffs. A number of points were raised by the defendants on which issues were struck and findings were recorded. In the end the plaintiffs' suit was decreed by the trial Court. The defendants went up in appeal to the lower appellate Court and the appeal was dismissed. The defendants have now come up to this Court in second appeal and have sought to challenge the findings of the Court below only on one issue. This issue arose on the plea that the transactions between the parties were of a wagering character and therefore under the provisions of S. 30, Contract Act, no suit was maintainable for recovery of the sums due under them. The contract between the parties is embodied in a printed document which prominently provides: "It is distinctly understood and agreed by us that actual delivery is contemplated." The case for the defendants was that this provision did not preclude them from leading evidence to show the real nature of the transactions. The lower appellate Court, however, has held that in the face of this clear provision as regards actual delivery no evidence could be given to show that no actual delivery was intended and that the transactions between the parties were of a wagering character.

In appeal counsel for the defendants has argued in this Court that the lower appellate Court was in error in not permitting them to prove from evidence outside the actual written document what the real transactions between the parties were, and that, on the evidence which they have already given, they could establish that the intention of the parties was that no delivery was to be made and that the transactions in suit were mere badni or wagering transactions. Counsel has relied upon 24 Bom 227 (1). In that case also the terms of the contract were incorporated in a printed form. The learned Judges held that, in order to determine whether a contract is a wagering contract, the Court will not only look at the terms of the written contract, but also probe among the surrounding circumstances to find out the true intention of the parties. These surrounding circumstances could only be proved by evidence outside the written contract. To the same effect is the decision reported as 64 I C 809 (2) at p. 813. That was a Letters Patent appeal from the decree of a Single Judge of the Calcutta High Court sitting on the original side and the Division Bench presided over by Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and Sir Ernest Fletcher, after referring to 42 Bom 373 (3), observed as follows:

We have to look behind the form of the contract to the real intention of the parties, which may be gathered from the oral evidence and the actual transactions between them.

2. Bisseswar Lal Kedia & Co. v. Basir Ali, 1921 Cal 862=64 I C 809=33 O L J 533.
3. Bhagwan Das Paras Ram v. Burjorji Rut-tonji Bomanji, 1917 P C 101=44 I O 264=45 I A 29=42 Bom 878 (P O).

The learned Judges referred to the leading House of Lords case (1896) A C 166 (4). These cases support the contention of the appellants. Reliance was placed on behalf of the respondents on 42 Bom 373 (3). This case, however, is of no assistance to the respondents. In fact their Lordships in this case have observed that certain intentions which the defendant pleaded had not been proved and that it had not been shown that there was any bargain or understanding between the parties, either express or implied, that the goods were not to be delivered. It would thus appear that their Lordships were of the opinion that evidence can be led in order to prove the real nature of the transactions. In my opinion the decision of the Court below on this point was erroneous. I therefore set aside the decision of the lower appellate Court on this point and remand the case to that Court to decide the question as to whether the transactions were wagering or not. The question whether the defendants should be allowed to lead further evidence is left to the Court below to decide : it may take further evidence or decide the case on the evidence already recorded. The plaintiffs shall be allowed to lead relevant evidence in rebuttal. The case shall be disposed of by the Court below according to law. The remand is under S. 151, Civil P. C. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal shall be refunded. Other costs shall abide the event.

v.

Puran Das and others—Petitioners—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 323 of 1935, Decided on 11th October 1935, from decision of Sikh Gurdwara Tribunal, Lahore, D/- 16th November 1934.

Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925), S. 16 (2), (3)—No evidence that institution is established by Sikhs for worship—Grants containing no reference to worship—Fact that Sikhs donated to the institution is not sufficient to establish the institution as Sikh Gurdwara.

Where there is no reliable evidence whatsoever to show that the institution in dispute had been established for public worship by the Sikhs and the grants that were made to the institution were by way of charity and contained no reference to any public worship, it cannot be held to be established that the institution was founded for public worship by the Sikhs. Mere fact that the institution was given grants of land by a Sikh Sardar and Sikh Princess and that it was named after a Nirmala Sadh cannot be held to be sufficient to establish that the institution was founded for public worship by the Sikhs. The grants may very well have been made only for charitable purposes. Such institution cannot be declared as a Sikh Gurdwara. [P 218 C 1]

Jhanda Singh and Bhagat Singh—for Appellants.

Indar Dev and Achhru Ram—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—Certain Sikh worshippers presented a petition to the Local Government under S. 7, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, for a dharamsala, situated in the town of Jagraon in the Ludhiana district, and known as Dharamsala Nikka Singh, being declared a 'Sikh Gurdwara'. One Puran Das thereupon presented a counter-petition under S. 8 of that Act claiming that the so-called Gurdwara was really an akhara and was used by him for residential purposes. On the matter coming before the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal the Sikh objectors contended that Puran Das had no locus standi to present a petition under S. 8 and secondly that the institution was in fact a Sikh Gurdwara. Both these issues were however decided against the objectors by a majority of the Tribunal and from this decision they have preferred the present appeal. As regards the question of the locus standi of the petitioners the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants was that according to the petition of Puran Das himself the Dharamsala in question was used by him for his residential purposes, that in the circumstances he could not be said to be an 'hereditary office-holder' and he was therefore not competent to present any petition under S. 8. It is true that the petition was not happily worded, but it was supplemented by a statement of the Mukhtar of the petitioner in Court in which it was admitted that certain Smadhs were worshipped by the Udasis in the dharamsala and that this had been done by the predecessors of Puran Das also. At the time of the arguments also it appears to have been admitted by the learned counsel for the objectors that the succession of Mahantship had been from Guru to Chela and this issue was not seriously pressed. In the circumstances, I see no force in this technical objection.

The main issue between the parties was whether the institution in question was a Sikh Gurdwara. The appellants relied on S. 16 (2), (3), Sikh Gurdwaras Act, according to which it was necessary for them to prove that the institution was established for public worship by the Sikhs and was so used right up to the time of the presentation of the petition. There is no direct evidence as regards the establishment of the institution. The earliest documentary evidence relevant for the purposes of this issue is available from the enquiry made at the time of the first settlement of the Ludhiana District in 1847-51. It appears that 25 ghumaons of land in Jagraon and 4 ghumaons of land in a village called Bardeke in that district had been given as muafi to the institution by Sardar Fateh Singh. A patta relating to one of these grants dated Sambat 1874 (1817 A. D.) was produced (vide Ex. O-13) and this shows that 25 ghumaons in Jagraon town were granted as dharamarth (by way of charity) to Bhai Ram Das and the grantee was enjoined to pray for the welfare and prosperity of the donee. There is no reference in the patta to any institution or any public worship. The patta relating to the other grant of land at Bardeke was apparently not forthcoming. In the course of the enquiry Harsaran Das, who was the then Mahant of the Dharamsala, and several other persons were examined. They all stated that the Dharamsala was used as the resting place by travellers and that such travellers were fed from the income of the muafi land. None of the witnesses examined referred to any recital of the Granth Sahib or any other form of public worship at the Dharamsala.

The learned counsel for the appellants urged that this may have been due to the fact that no direct question was put to the witnesses on this point; but this does not appear to be correct, because there were certain questions put to the witnesses in reply to which reference to public worship, if it existed, might have been expected. For instance, the witnesses were asked for what purpose the land was granted as muafi. But that all that they stated in reply was that it had been granted for charitable purposes: see for example, Exs. P-36, P-37, P-38, etc. In two instances direct questions were apparently put as to what was in the dharamsala, and in those cases the witnesses, namely, Mula, patwari, and Harsaran Das himself stated that there were idols (thakars) in the dharamsala (vide Exs. O-14 and P-30). If the Granth Sahib had been worshipped or recited in the Dharamsala at the time, it seems inconceivable that a reference to it would have been omitted by these witnesses. About the year 1886 Harsaran Das died and enquiry was again made as regards the continuation of the muafi. In the course of this enquiry the witnesses examined, including Puran Das, petitioner, no doubt, stated that Granth Sahib was recited at the Dharamsala; but this was more than thirty years after the enquiry made at the first settlement and it cannot be presumed merely on the basis of the statements of these witnesses that the Granth Sahib had been recited or worshipped at the Dharamsala from the very outset, and that the institution had been established for public worship by the Sikhs.

There was another enquiry made in connection with the Jagir of certain land situated in the village Jalwana in the Patiala State about the same year and during the course of that enquiry also the witnesses stated that the Granth Sahib was being read at the institution. These statements stand on no better footing than those made in the course of the enquiry after the death of Harsaran Das in the Ludhiana District. It may be mentioned however that the pattas relating to the Jagir of land in the Patiala territory, which were produced in the course of this enquiry, also do not show that the institution was originally established for the purposes of public worship. The earliest patta was Ex. P-21, dated 7th Sawan, Sudi 7, Sambat 1842, (corresponding to 1785 A. D.). This merely states that the village Jalwana was given by way of charity to Bawa Sangat Das, Gharib Das (one of the predecessors of Puran Das, petitioner) and Jai Singh, and these grantees were only enjoined to pray for the prosperity of the grantor. The second patta (Ex. O-4) is dated Phagan Badi 5, Sambat 1853 (corresponding to 1796 A. D.).

This refers to the grant of the village Jalwana as well as certain other properties to Bawa Nikka Singh and Nirmala Sadhs. There is no direct reference to Gharib Das or any predecessor of Puran Das in this patta and this document also throws no light on the nature of the institution in dispute at its inception.

Before his death Harsaran Das made a will in the year 1875 by which he appointed Puran Das as his successor. Harsaran Das has given detailed instructions for the guidance of his successor in this will, but there is no reference in it to any recital or worship of the Granth Sahib. If the institution had been established for public worship by the Sikhs, Harsaran Das could not have omitted to refer to the fact in this important document. It will appear from the above that there is no reliable evidence whatsoever to show that the institution in dispute had been established for public worship by the Sikhs. The earliest pattas of land given by way of Muafi or Jagir merely show that these grants that were made to the then incumbents of the institution by way of charity and contain no reference to any public worship. At the time of the enquiry of 1850 also no reference was made by the witnesses to any public worship or recital of the Granth Sahib as already stated. In the circumstances the appellants cannot be held to have established that the institution was founded for public worship by the Sikhs. The learned counsel relied mainly on the fact that the institution was given grants of land by a Sikh Sardar and a Sikh Princess and that it was named after Bawa Nikka Singh who was apparently a Nirmala Sadh; but these facts alone cannot be held to be sufficient to establish that the institution was founded for public worship by the Sikhs. The grants may very well have been made only for charitable purposes as the pattas referred to above indicate, and the reading of the Granth Sahib may have been started by the Mahant in comparatively recent times—possibly with a view to attract worshippers and as a source of income.

It is noteworthy that as a result of the enquiry made in the Ludhiana district at the first settlement, the grant of land in that district was taken to be of a personal character and was limited to the life of the then incumbent only. In addition to these facts, it must also be remembered that the Dharamsala is situated not in a Sikh village but in Jagraon town, which contains a heterogeneous population with a preponderance of banias and traders, and no inference can therefore be drawn that the Dharamsala must have been meant for the use of the Sikhs. The circumstances of the present case are similar to those in 1934 Lah 277 (1), and in that case also, in spite of the fact that the Granth was being read in the institution since 1880, it was held that it was not established that the place had been originally intended for public worship by Sikhs. In view of the above findings it is unnecessary to refer to the oral evidence, which refers mainly to the recital or worship of the Granth Sahib in the Dharamsala in comparatively recent times and is of no help in arriving at any finding as to the origin of the institution. I agree with the conclusion of the majority of the Tribunal that the institution in dispute has not been proved to be a Sikh Gurdwara and would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—On 8th November 1905, one Dogar Singh Jat, who was an occupancy tenant under the Guru of Kartarpur, mortgaged an area of 37 kanals 7 marlas out of his tenancy to Dharamsala Kitni Darwaza through Gurditta Mal. On 18th February 1924, Dogar Singh adopted a stranger, named Gurdial Singh as his son in the Dattaka form and executed a deed of adoption which was duly registered. On 5th September 1925 Dogar Singh executed a deed of release in respect of the whole of his tenancy in favour of the landlord. On 16th September 1929, Dogar Singh died. On 10th August 1931, the Court of Wards on behalf of the then Guru of Kartarpur sued for possession of the land mortgaged to Dharamsala Kitni Darwaza on the allegation that the mortgage was extinguished because Dogar Singh had died without leaving any heirs under S. 59, Tenancy Act. The suit was resisted on the allegation that Gurdial Singh, the adopted son of Dogar Singh, was a male lineal descendant within the meaning of S. 59, Tenancy Act. The trial Judge held in favour of the mortgagee and dismissed the suit. On appeal Mr. Marten, District Judge, held that the adoption was invalid and decreed the claim. On further appeal to the High Court it was conceded that a Jat governed by Customary law could make a full Hindu law adoption as distinct from the customary appointment of an heir. The case was, however, remanded because Mr. Marten had not decided whether a Jat could adopt a non-agnate even with full Hindu law ceremonies. The case was then heard by Mr. Cornelius and he held that the adoption was valid according to Hindu law. The result was that the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court. The relevant riwaj-i-am entry is as follows :

As a general rule the person adopted is selected from collaterals, the nearer collateral being given preference. The selection is made of a person of the same tribe and got as the adopter.

The learned District Judge held that this rule of Customary law was "not mandatory or invariable but merely of an advisory nature." He further held that the plaintiff was not competent to plead that the adoption was invalid because the person adopted was not a collateral and did not belong to the same got as the adopter and that such a plea could be raised only by a person who considered himself to have a better right to adoption than the person actually adopted. I am clearly of opinion that the view taken by the learned Judge on both these points is erroneous. As for the second point, the mortgagee says that he is entitled to remain in possession because Dogar Singh had left a 'male lineal descendant,' and he is, therefore, bound to prove this allegation. He can succeed only if he establishes that the adoption of Gurdial Singh was valid and that the latter was thereby transplanted into the family of the adopter. The landlord in this case has not sued to challenge the adoption. He comes into Court on the allegation that the tenancy has been extinguished, and there is no bar to such a suit on his part. As regards the eligibility of Gurdial Singh there is no doubt that under Hindu law even a stranger can be adopted, but the question is how far Hindu law has been modified by custom in this case. The custom which governs Dogar Singh in this matter is stated in the riwaj-i-am entry mentioned above. This entry cannot be brushed aside with the remark that the rule laid down therein is merely of an advisory nature.

The general rule of custom is stated to be that a person outside the got of the adopter cannot be adopted. It is, of course, open to a person to prove that a stranger could also be adopted under certain circumstances. In the present case no attempt whatever was made to prove such a custom. In 50 P R 1893 (1), which was a case from the Jullundur district, it was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court that generally—creed, tribe and locality apart—when a sonless man in any land-holding group which recognises a power to adopt, asserts that he is competent to adopt a daughter's son or other non-agnate in presence of near agnates, irrespective of their assent, the presumption at the outset is against the power. In 1 Lah 15 (2) it was held that the adopted son, on whom the onus lay, had failed to prove that by custom among Jats of Mauza Manko, in the Jullundur district, the adoption of a brother's daughter's son is valid. 1 Lah 31 (3) was a case from the Hissar District and it was held that the onus of proving that the adoption of a stranger is valid by custom among Jats of that District rests on the adoptee and that the onus had not been discharged in that case. In 94 P R 1913 (4), it was held that according to the custom of Jats in the Jullundur District the defendant, upon whom the onus lay, had failed to prove that by that custom a daughter's son could be validly adopted. In 8 Lah 48 (5), which was a case from the Hoshiarpur district, where the riwaj-i-am was similar to that of the Jullundur district, it was held that a person of a got different to that of the adopter could not be adopted. In Ratigan's Digest of Customary Law, para. 35, remark 1, at p. 69, Edn. 10, it is stated that at any rate for the eastern and central districts of the Punjab the general custom is against the adoption of a person of a different got.

In view of all these authorities and the clear provisions of the riwaj-i-am and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it is idle to contend that the adoption of Gurdial Singh was valid. It was not open to Dogar Singh to ignore the custom by which he was governed merely by adopting the Dattaka form of adoption. The effect of that ceremony would be to transplant the adoptee into the adopter's family but the eligibility of the adoptee would still be governed by Hindu law as modified by custom. It has not even been contended that the custom stated in the riwaj-i-am did not apply to Dogar Singh. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal must succeed and the plaintiff's suit must be decreed. The learned counsel for the appellant also brought to my notice that in another case of the same nature against another mortgagee Gurdial Singh was impleaded as a defendant and it was held on 28th February 1933, that the adoption was invalid, and that there had been no appeal from that decision. It would appear that this decision was given almost a year before Mr. Cornelius decided the case and still no reference was made to it before him. It is doubtful whether under these circumstances the appellant should be allowed to make use of that decision in this Court. It is unnecessary to consider what the effect of that decision would be on this case. I accept the appeal and decree the claim with costs throughout.

There can be a guardian of the separate property of a minor in the joint Hindu family. After the death of the father, the mother is the natural guardian of the separate property of her minor children; and it is only the minor's share in the coparcenary property which cannot be brought under guardianship so long as there is an adult member of the coparcenary alive. Judgment.—The plaintiffs were originally joint owners of the land in dispute along with the defendants or their predecessors. A private partition of this land was carried out during their minority. They now allege that the partition was not to their benefit and seek to have it set aside. Both the lower Courts are agreed that the less valuable part of the land was given to the plaintiffs and that the partition was not for their benefit. The only question which now has to be decided is whether the suit is within time or not; and this depends on whether the partition is to be regarded as a transfer made by a duly constituted or natural guardian on behalf of the plaintiffs. Art. 44, Lim. Act, provides that a suit by a ward, who has attained majority, to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian, must be brought within 3 years of the date of his attaining majority; and there is a finding of fact that both the plaintiffs attained majority more than 3 years before the present suit was brought. The mother of the plaintiffs attended the mutation proceedings and expressed her assent to the partition on their behalf. The trial Court found that the mother was the natural guardian of the plaintiffs under the Customary Law, by which the parties are bound and that the suit was governed by Art. 44. The plaintiff's claim was accordingly dismissed. In first appeal the learned District Judge held that the plaintiffs must be taken as constituting a joint Hindu family, in spite of the fact that they were Rajputs following Customary law, and that there could be no guardian of a joint Hindu family. From this he concluded that the case was not governed by Art. 44. The plaintiffs were accordingly granted a decree against which the defendants have come up in second appeal.

The learned District Judge is in error in supposing that there can be no guardian of the separate property of a minor in a joint Hindu family. After the death of the father, the mother is the natural guardian of the separate property of her minor children; and it is only the minor's share in the coparcenary property which cannot be brought under guardianship so long as there is an adult member of the coparcenary alive. If there is no adult member of the coparcenary, even the joint family property can be brought under guardianship. It is not correct therefore to suppose that the mother could in no circumstances be the guardian of the property of the minor plaintiffs. Under the Customary Law which they follow, they succeeded to the land in suit as tenants-in-common and not as members of a coparcenary body. Under Hindu law their shares will have to be regarded as their separate property, and their mother would be their guardian in respect of this property. Both the lower Courts have accepted the proposition that the mother of the plaintiffs would also be the guardian of their property under Customary Law. This seems to me doubtful, if we refer to the answer to question 24 in Mr. Whitehead's Digest of the Customary Law of the Ambala District. When questioned in 1887, the tribes generally replied that the mother was the next guardian after the father, both of the person and of the property. At attestation however Rajputs denied this and merely gave the mother a right to be consulted by the male relatives. When further questioned, the Rajputs stated that there was no fixed custom when a widow wanted her own brother to act as guardian and that each case was decided on its own merits when a dispute arose. A custom is supposed to be certain; and it seems to me that there is very little certainty about the reply couched in these terms, which seems rather to refer to the conditions under which a minor's land may be transferred than to an act of guardianship.

If there is no special custom however we must revert to Hindu law under which the mother is the guardian of the property of her minor children; and this is actually in accordance with the custom now recorded in the local riwaj-i-am for the Jagadhri Tahsil, where the parties reside. In these circumstances, it appears to me that the mother was the natural guardian of the plaintiffs, whether she be regarded as such under Hindu law or special custom. She must be regarded as the guardian of the plaintiffs, at the time when the mutation took place. It is contended however that a partition cannot be regarded as a transfer. There is some authority for this in 54 I C 146 (1), but this has since been overruled by a Division Bench of the same Court in 72 I C

1. Indoji Jithaji v. K. Rama Charlu, 1920 Mad 20=54 I C 146.

978 (2), and again in 97 I C 70 (3) and it seems now to be generally accepted that a partition is a transfer as defined in the Transfer of Property Act. For these reasons I am of opinion that the lower Court was right in holding that the present suit was barred by Art. 44, Lim. Act, as a suit to set aside a transfer made by a guardian. I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Charanjiva Lal Aggarwal—for Appellant.

Badri Das and Vishnu Datt—for Respondents.

Abdul Rashid, J.—Ghulam Muhammad, an Arain of Chak 243 in Lyallpur district owned two squares of land, Nos. 107/2 and 40/39, as well as some 12 ghumaons at his original home in Ludhiana. On 12th June 1924, he reported that he had gifted the square No. 107/2 to his wife Mt. Bibo in lieu of her dower. When this gift was to be recorded by mutation in the revenue records objection was taken by one Ahmad Khan, who declared that Ghulam Muhammad had contracted to sell this land to him and his brother Ghulam Muhammad Khan and had actually received Rs. 7,000 of the price, that he was in possession of the land under a written lease for 8 years for an annual rental of Rs. 800, and that the gift had been made to avoid performance of the contract. The Revenue Assistant sanctioned this mutation in favour of Mt. Bibo noting in his order that the objectors should seek their remedy in the civil Court. It is not disputed that this square of land along with the other had been leased to Ahmad Khan and his brother in April 1924, and that Ghulam Muhammad had agreed to sell the land to them. On 21st May 1926, Ghulam Muhammad brought a suit to have the gift declared invalid, and he obtained a declaration to this effect, on 16th November 1926, from the Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur. Mt. Bibo appealed to the High Court where, in accordance with a compromise between the parties, Ghulam Muhammad's suit was dismissed on 23rd December 1929. Meanwhile on 31st January 1929, Sampuran Singh the present appellant, had taken square No. 107/2 on a mortgage from Ghulam Muhammad on the strength of the declaration granted by the Sub-Judge. On 1st October 1929

Sampuran Singh sued Ghulam Muhammad to recover a debt of Rs. 1,354-13-0. He was given a decree on 8th March 1930, and in execution of it attached square No. 107/2. The executing Court, however, released the land finding it to be Mt. Bibo's property.

On 9th July 1930 Sampuran Singh sued Ghulam Muhammad and Mt. Bibo in the Senior Sub-Judge's Court for a declaration that the gift of square No. 107/2 by the former to the latter in 1924 was fraudulent and fictitious having been effected to defraud Ghulam Muhammad's creditors. When examined by the Judge Mt. Bibo stated that the gift had been made because otherwise the property could not be saved. Thereupon the Senior Sub-Judge forthwith granted Sampuran Singh the decree he sought. Against this decree Mt. Bibo appealed. The Appeal No. 563 of 1931 was dealt with by a Division Bench of this Court on 24th January 1934, with the result that it was accepted and the case remanded for re-decision after framing the issues arising out of the pleadings. It was pointed out in the judgment that though Mt. Bibo's statement on which the suit had been decreed was somewhat ambiguous it was not inconsistent with her case, that all she meant to say was that her husband was a spendthrift and was wasting his property, and therefore to save the land in dispute it was gifted to the appellant. The Senior Sub-Judge has re-decided the suit in favour of the plaintiff finding that the gift was made with intent to defeat Ghulam Muhammad's creditors. Mt. Bibo has appealed.

The learned Sub-Judge has come to his conclusion that the gift was to defeat Ahmad Khan to whom Ghulam Muhammad owed about Rs. 7,000, that although Ghulam Muhammad may have had property enough to meet his liability at the time, there is a presumption that his object was to defeat future creditors arising from the fact that when he reported the gift to the patwari he was unable to assign any reason for it except that it was in lieu of dower and in order to induce his wife to look after him faithfully (he had some affliction of the eyes), that the gift was stated to be for life only, that possession was never given to Mt. Bibo, that the compromise in the High Court was prompted by Sampuran Singh's suit to recover Rs. 1,354-13-0, that Mt. Bibo's statement that the gift was in lieu of her dower was untrue, and that Mt. Bibo had admitted that it was to save the property. The first question for decision in this appeal is, whether Ghulam Muhammad owed any debts at the time of making the gift of one square of land in favour of his wife on 12th June 1924. The onus of proving that the donor was in debt or in embarrassed circumstances at the time lay heavily on the plaintiff. In my opinion, he has utterly failed to discharge this onus. Wazir Khan, plaintiff's own witness, stated that Ghulam Muhammad was indebted to his uncle Ghulam Ahmad in an amount of Rs. 6,000 or 7,000 before the gift was made. He however added that before the making of the gift Ghulam Muhammad had leased out his two squares of land to Ghulam Ahmad in lieu of the debt.

It is therefore established by the evidence of the plaintiff that Ghulam Muhammad did not owe any money to Ghulam Ahmad on 12th June 1924. Wazir Khan further states that so far as he knew Ghulam Muhammad did not owe any other debt except the debt of Ghulam Ahmad mentioned above at the time of the gift. It is true that Ghulam Muhammad, in his statement before the issues, admitted that when he made the gift he was under a debt amounting to Rs. 4,000 or Rs. 5,000. It appears however that this merely refers to the alleged debt due to Ghulam Ahmad in lieu of which Ghulam Muhammad had leased out his squares of land to Ghulam Ahmad for a period of eight years. It must also be remembered that at the time of the gift Ghulam Muhammad owned one square of land in addition to the square which forms the subject-matter of the present litigation, and that this square was sold to Wazir Khan on 1st June 1928, for Rs. 14,000. He also owned 12 ghumaons of land in the Ludhiana District, a part of which was subsequently mortgaged for a sum of Rs. 7,500. At the time of making the gift therefore the donor was in fairly affluent circumstances in so far as his property was worth at least Rs. 30,000, and he owed Ghulam Ahmad Rs. 6,000 or 7,000 in lieu whereof he had leased his squares of land for eight years. When in June 1928, Ghulam Muhammad sold one square of land for Rs. 14,000, the entire debt due to Ghulam Ahmad, was deducted from the sale price, and the square which had been taken on lease by Ghulam Ahmad was relinquished. In 1927-28, therefore, Ghulam Muhammad cannot be said to have been in embarrassed circumstances. The debt due to Sampuran Singh, defendant, was not incurred till the end of 1928 or the beginning of the year 1929. The debt due to Kartar Singh (P. W. 5) was not contracted till December 1927. It appears that for three years after the making of the gift Ghulam Muhammad did not owe any money to any of his creditors so far as the present record is concerned.

It was pointed out by Tek Chand, J. in 8 Lah 544 (1) that in a case where debts were actually due to the creditor who challenged the gift at the time of the transfer, the intent to defeat or delay creditors will be presumed, whereas if there were no debts due at the time of the transfer and the transferor ran into indebtedness subsequently, the presumption will be regulated by the circumstances of each particular case. It was further observed that a voluntary settlement, by a person who owes no debts at the time, in favour of his children for natural love and affection cannot be set aside merely because some years afterwards it is proved to have the effect of defeating or delaying subsequent creditors. The trial Court has relied on 1924 Mad 779 (2), 1930 All 610 (3), 1930 Lah 217 (4) and 1927 Mad 657 (5). The facts of each of these cases were, however, very different from the facts of the present case. In both the Madras cases a suit had already been filed by the creditor before the alienation, which was sought to be impeached, had taken place. In those circumstances it was held that the alienation could be successfully challenged if it had the effect of defeating or delaying creditors. In the Allahabad case also litigation was actually pending at the time of the alienation in question. In 1930 Lah 217 (4) the following observations were made by Jai Lal, J.:

I have no quarrel with the proposition that it is not necessary for a person, who asserts that a transfer is fraudulent, to prove that he was a creditor on the date when the document was executed or the transfer was made, if there were other creditors in existence who were intended to be defrauded by the transfer, but as I have already stated in the present case, there were no creditors except those who were satisfied out of the funds raised by the plaintiff.

This case is, therefore, of no assistance to the plaintiff. The circumstances established on the present record show that at the time of the making of the gift the appellant's object was merely to make a provision for the future maintenance of his wife. If his object had been to defeat or delay creditors, he would not have impeached the gift in favour of his wife in the year 1926. It was realised by Ghulam Muhammad as well as his wife in 1924 that the former was a spendthrift, and it was in order to safeguard herself against the future improvidence of her husband that the wife secured a gift in her favour. Such a transaction cannot be held to be a transfer made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor. Reference may be made in this connexion to 23 Bom 146 (6) at p. 156 where the following observations occur:

It appears to me that the lower Court of appeal did not correctly apprehend the true nature of the release transaction. The property sought to be protected by the release was admittedly ancestral property, and Vaman's minor son had a half share in it, of which the minor could at any time claim partition. The release was only intended to protect Vaman's one half share against the consequences of his own improvidence. When all existing debts were paid off and settled, Vaman's right to make a voluntary conveyance of the same in his minor son's interest cannot be questioned. Such conveyances are well known in English law, and there have been cases in India also where Courts have given effect to such voluntary conveyances or gifts by a father to his son: 2 All 809 (7). Such transactions do not become colourable merely because, in their ultimate consequences, they may have the effect of protecting the family property against the prospective extravagance of the settlors, or because no adequate consideration is shown to have been paid by the party benefited.

In 26 Bom 577 (8) at p. 585 it was observed that a transaction in favour of a wife cannot be regarded as fraudulent merely because the wife secures a settlement from her husband for the protection of the family and for the correction of her husband's evil habits. A dedication by the husband in favour of his wife can be regarded as fraudulent at the instance of subsequent creditors only if the gift was made with the clear object of defeating those creditors by embarking on a course of reckless extravagance or starting a hazardous business soon after the making of the gift. It was held in 1931 Oudh 134 (9), that when a person executes a deed of waqf in favour of his sons and a subsequent creditor brings a suit for a declaration that the deed was executed fraudulently in order to defeat and delay the creditors, the crucial question is one of intention to defraud the creditors for setting aside the deed at the instance of the plaintiff, and the fact that all the creditors existing at the date of the deed had been paid off before the institution of the suit even though it may not be conclusive, affords a very strong evidence negating the intention to defraud. Kartar Singh undoubtedly stated that in 1927 when he advanced Rs. 1,500 to Ghulam Muhammad he was indebted to several other persons. He could not however give the name of a single one of Ghulam Muhammad's creditors and further added that in 1927 he knew that Ghulam Muhammad could pay all his debts by selling one square of land.

The trial Court has rightly held that the gift must be taken to have been completed on 12th June 1924, and that it cannot be held that a new gift was made to the wife on 16th October 1929, when the compromise deed was written for the purpose of the appeal pending in the High Court. In this view of the matter, we have to consider whether the gift made on 12th June 1924, was a transfer made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, and the financial position of the donor in June 1924 has to be taken into consideration in determining whether S. 53, T. P. Act, is applicable to this transaction. For the reasons given above, I would accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1734 of 1934, Decided on 20th May 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 11th July 1934.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (13 of 1900), S. 6—Mortgages existing on property before coming into force of Act—Mortgages carrying no interest—Subsequent deed after Act to same mortgagee purports to create charge but interest payable under it—Third mortgage held to be no fresh mortgage but only additional charge on property and did not contravene provisions of Act.

The land in dispute had already been mortgaged by two deeds before the Act came into force. The third deed was executed after that Act came into force and unlike the prior mortgages, interest was payable under this:

Held: that the mere fact that the third mortgage carried interest was not sufficient to hold that there was any fresh transfer or interest in the land as the terms of the original mortgage by which interest in the land was transferred to the mortgagee were unaffected and a no new relationship has been brought about by the 3rd deed and as such mortgage was not a fresh one but only an additional charge on the same land and did not contravene the provisions of Alienation of Land Act: 1932 Lah 465 (F B), Foll.; 1921 Mad 514, Appr. [P 226 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this case sued for possession of certain land on the basis of three mortgages executed in his favour on different dates. The first two mortgages were for Rs. 600 and Rs. 400 respectively and were executed in the years 1886 and 1896. These two mortgages are not disputed. The third one was for a sum of Rs. 99 and was executed by a deed dated 4th March 1927. The first two mortgages did not carry interest but the third carried interest at Rs. 2 per cent per mensem. Part of the property was sold on 13th July 1927 for Rs. 5,000 and a sum of Rs. 1,500 was deposited with the vendee for payment to prior mortgagees. Out of this sum Rs. 900 were paid to the plaintiff but the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to a much larger sum on the basis of the third mortgage deed for Rs. 99 which carried interest at Rs. 2 per cent per mensem as stated above. The defendant's contention was that this third mortgage for Rs. 99 was void inasmuch as it contravened the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and also that it could take no effect as against the sale in favour of the defendants which was made by a registered document. The trial Court upheld the objection of the defendant as regards the invalidity of the mortgage under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the learned District Judge however held that the deed for Rs. 99 only created an additional charge on the land and it could not be said to contravene the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. In support of this view it relied on 13 Lah 660 (1). The main point for consideration is whether the view taken by the District Judge is correct.

There is no doubt that the land in dispute had already been mortgaged by two deeds, of the years 1886 and 1896 before the Punjab Alienation of Land Act came into force. The third deed for Rs. 99 only was executed after that Act came into force, but it purports to create only an additional charge on the same land. The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that it is tantamount to a fresh mortgage inasmuch as the previous deeds carried no interest, while the third deed carries interest at Rs. 2 per cent per mensem. This fact in itself does not appear to me to be sufficient to hold that there was any fresh transfer of interest in the land. It was held by Wallis, C. J. in 66 I C 554 (2), that a document which gives immovable property as security for the satisfaction of a debt without transferring any interest in the property, merely constitutes a charge on the property, and is not a mortgage. In the present instance all that was done in 1927 was that a debt of Rs. 99 carrying interest at Rs. 2 per cent per mensem was made a charge on the land in dispute which was already under mortgage with the defendant. The terms of the original mortgage by which interest in the land was transferred to the mortgagee were unaffected. The mere variation as regards interest does not appear to me to constitute any substantial change in the terms of the original mortgage. It was remarked by the Full Bench

If, for instance, the new transaction purports to cancel the earlier one, or contains conditions substantially different from those contained in the original mortgage, or an additional area of land is included in the security, there can be no doubt that the old mortgage is at an end and a new and wholly different relationship between the parties has been brought into existence, to which ex necessitate rei the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act will be attracted. Similarly if the new transaction raises the aggregate mortgage-money to a figure in excess of the value of the land, it will really be a sale, though ostensibly given the form of a mere advance on the old security. In each case, therefore, the Court has to determine the true nature of the transaction, and if it finds that in reality and substance it is a new mortgage or a sale, the transaction will be within the mischief of the Act and the Court will refuse to enforce it.

Bearing these principles in mind it seems to me that in the circumstances of the present case a mere additional term as to interest is not sufficient to justify the transaction of the year 1927 being treated as a fresh mortgage. The next contention urged by the learned counsel for the appellant was that the vendee had notice of the mortgage of 1927 and is therefore bound thereby. On this question the learned District Judge has found after consideration of all the evidence that it is not proved that the vendee had any notice of the previous mortgage. This is a question of fact and the finding of the learned District Judge on the point must be treated as final. I accordingly uphold the decision of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, for the payment by the appellants of Rs. 1,650, the amount of a call on shares in the respondent company together with Rs. 92½ interest and costs. The appellants were share-holders in the company and a call was made on 17th July 1928: the shares were forfeited for non-payment of the call on 15th February 1930 and the company went into voluntary liquidation on 30th June 1930, and by an order of this Court of 11th November 1932, the liquidation was ordered to continue under the supervision of the Court and further proceedings were ordered to be taken in the Court of the District Judge, Ludhiana. The appellants were placed on the list of "B" contributories and having refused to comply with the liquidator's demand for payment, these proceedings were instituted under S. 187, Companies Act, 1913, which gives power to make calls on and order payment thereof by contributories to the extent of their liability for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company and also for the adjustment of the right of the contributories amongst themselves.

The argument for the appellants is that the claim sought to be enforced by these proceedings is for the payment of a debt in respect of these calls and that their claim is barred by limitation; and I think that if the liquidator was forced to rely on the debt created by the call on the shares and the forfeiture of them, this argument would prevail. The argument for the liquidator is that his claim is not on foot of the debt, but is for contribution under S. 156, which it is well-settled, creates a new liability. It cannot be contested that the appellants are within the terms of S. 156: the only question which might have arisen is whether existing members are unable to satisfy their contributions, but the District Judge has gone into the accounts and has found that the liabilities cannot be met from the existing members. In my opinion the appellants are clearly subject to a new liability, created by S. 156, for payment of the amount unpaid on the shares in respect of which they are liable as past members; and they have been called on to pay an amount in respect of this sum in accordance with the Act. The point now raised by the appellants was raised and considered in 38 All 347 (1), where it was said:

We entirely agree with the contention put forward by the appellant's counsel that so far as the recovery of the original debt based upon calls made by the company, which has become time barred, is concerned, the liquidator has no higher right than the company. The company could not sue for those calls; no more can the liquidator.

But it was held nevertheless that the member was liable for unpaid calls and his liability was enforced in summary proceedings under the Act. The only distinction between that case and the present is that the present appellants have ceased to be members by reason of the forfeiture of their shares; but as I have indicated above, in the circumstances of the present case, this fact does not help them. 38 All 347 (1) was noticed by the Privy Council in 54 All 1067 (2), and was followed by a Division Bench of this Court in 1935 Lah 335 (3); the latter case arose in the liquidation of the respondent company and the facts are on all fours with those of the present case. One further point arises whether the appellants are liable for interest: the District Judge has allowed it, applying provisions of the Articles of Association, and if the debt created by the original call were now being claimed, interest would clearly be payable under the contract; but as the liability is created by S. 156, it must be measured by the terms of that section, which limits the claim to the amount unpaid on the shares in respect of which the contributory is liable;

1. Jagannath Prasad v. U. P. Flour and Oil Mills Co. Ltd., 1916 All 317=35 I O 159=38 All 347=14 A L J 349,
2. Hans Raj v. Dehra Dun Mussoorie Electric Tramway Co., 1933 P C 63=142 I O 7=60 I A 13=54 All 1067 (P C).
3. Jagraon Trading Syndicate, Ltd. v. Manakchand Roshan Lal, 1935 Lah 335=156 I O 951.

in my opinion the amount unpaid refers to capital only.

I should like to add that during the arguments there appeared to be some ground for the case presented by the appellants; it was not alleged in the petition that the existing members were unable to satisfy the contributions required to be made by them in pursuance of the Act, and in the argument my attention was not drawn to the finding of the Judge on this point and though there is a reference to S. 156 of the Act in the title of the petition, the frame of the petition as a whole indicates that the amount claimed is the old debt arising from the earlier calls and not the liability created by S. 156. I allow the appeal in part and vary the order by striking out the interest directed to be paid. In view of the partial success of the appeal and the lack of precision in defining the claim, I direct the parties to abide their own costs.

Shamair Chand, D. N. Aggarwal, Ram Chandra and Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Parkash Chandra and Mohammad Amin—for Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—Civil Appeals Nos. 1104 of 1933 and 433 of 1934 may be disposed of together, as they are between the same parties and arise out of two suits which were tried together in the lower Court and were disposed of by the same judgment. The dispute relates to succession to the office of Mahant of an institution of dashnami sanyasis, known as Mandir Mahadev in Mauza Urnai Sangam, Tahsil Thanesar, Karnal district. This institution has attached to it agricultural land in three villages : (i) Mauza Urnai Sangam, (ii) Mauza Jaurasi Kalan and (iii) Mauza Tikri. The last Mahant was Rawan Gir, who died on 1st January 1927. On 5th February 1927 the revenue authorities sanctioned mutation of these lands in the name of Digambar Datt Gir, (who is the appellant in Civil Appeal No. 1104 of 1933) rejecting the claim of the rival claimant, one Narbada Gir. On 14th April 1927 Narbada Gir brought a suit in the Civil Court against Digambar Datt Gir, alleging that he (Narbada Gir) was a chela of Rawan Gir and had been orally nominated by him as his successor. Digambar Datt Gir denied that Narbada Gir was the chela of the deceased Mahant or that the latter had nominated him as his successor. He further pleaded that he was the lawful Mahant having been appointed under a registered will of Rawan Gir, dated 2nd April 1925. This suit proceeded for some time, but before the decision, Narbada Gir died. One Onkar Gir, describing himself as the chela of Narbada Gir and alleging that he had been nominated as his successor by the deceased, applied under O. 22, R. 3, Civil P. C., for being substituted as plaintiff in the suit in place of Narbada Gir. His application was however rejected as time-barred, and this order was upheld on appeal by the District Judge.

Thereupon Onkar Gir instituted a fresh suit against Digambar Datt Gir for possession of the property attached to the Mandir, alleging that he was the successor of Narbada Gir and was the lawfully appointed Mahant. After some months the parties entered into a compromise. Onkar Gir withdrew his claim and admitted that Digambar Datt Gir was the lawful Mahant. In accordance with the terms of the compromise the suit was dismissed on 29th May 1929. In the meantime Bhairon Gir (who is the appellant in Civil Appeal No. 433 of 1934) managed to get possession of the Mandir and the lands in Mauzas Urnai Sangam and Jaurasi Kalan. The land in Mauza Tikri, however, remained in possession of Digambar Datt Gir.

On 14th August 1929 Bhairon Gir instituted a suit against Digambar Datt Gir alleging that he was the gurbhai of Rawan Gir, both of them being the chelas of Khushi Gir who was the Mahant of the institution immediately preceding Rawan Gir, and claiming that on Rawan Gir's death he had been elected Mahant by the village Panchayat and the Sadhus of the dera. He denied that Digambar Datt Gir was the chela of Rawan Gir or that the latter had made any will nominating him as his successor or that the deceased had the power to do so. He further alleged that Digambar Datt Gir had become a nanga sadhu and therefore was not eligible for appointment as the Mahant of a dashnami sanyasi institution. He further averred that the essential qualifications for appointment as a Mahant were: (1) that he should have served the institution, (2) that he should be elected by the Panchayat of village and the Bhik of the Sadhus connected with the institution, (3) that he should be a dashnami sanyasi and should not have become a nanga sadhu, and (4) that he should be the "chela of the institution" but should not be sadhak chela of the late Mahant. Digambar Datt Gir denied the plaintiff's right to succeed, and pleaded that he was the sadhak chela of Rawan Gir, that he had been appointed as his successor by a registered will, dated 2nd April 1925 (Ex. D-1), that though he had once become a nanga and joined the Maha Nirbani Panchaiti Akhara of Allahabad he had reverted to his original status as an ordinary dashnami sanyasi before the death of Rawan Gir, and that according to the custom of dashnami sanyasi institutions his appointment was valid.

On 11th July 1930 Digambar Datt Gir brought a suit against Bhairon Gir for possession of the lands in Mauzas Urni Sangam and Jaurasi Kalan, which were in possession of the latter. The plaint in this suit was identical with Digambar Datt Gir's jawab-i-dawa in Bhairon Gir's suit, and the latter's jawab-i-dawa in this suit was practically a repetition of the plaint in his own suit. The two suits were tried together, and the evidence recorded in Bhairon Gir's suit. After a lengthy trial, the learned Subordinate Judge held that according to the custom prevailing in dashnami sanyasi institutions generally, a Mahant has got the power to nominate, orally or by will, one of his sadhak chelas as his successor, that the nominee succeeds to the gaddi, unless objected to by the Bhik of dashnami sanyasis on the ground of his being a person of bad character; and that in case the last Mahant has failed to make the nomination, the Bhik has the power to elect the Mahant from amongst the chelas of the deceased. He found that it had not been proved that the custom of the institution in dispute was different, or that the panchayat of the village, in consultation with the sadhus attached to the dera, had the right to appoint the Mahant. On these findings, he held that Bhairon Gir was not the lawfully appointed Mahant of the institution and dismissed his suit.

In Digambar Datt Gir's suit the learned Judge held that he was the sadhak chela of the deceased Mahant, that this was not a disqualification, as alleged by Bhairon Gir, and that there was no bar to a nanga sadhu succeeding to the gaddi of a non-nanga dashnami sanyasi institution. He also found that Rawan Gir had executed the will (Ex. D-1) dated 2nd April 1925, reciting that he had two sadhak chelas, Digambar Datt Gir and Digambar Hari Gir, both of whom bore good character and were in every way qualified to be Mahants, and authorising Digambar Ram Gir and Balak Puri, Secretaries of Maha Nirbani Panchaiti Akhara, Allahabad, to select one of them as his successor. The learned Judge held that the deceased Mahant, though competent to nominate his successor, could not delegate the power of nomination to third persons, and that though the aforesaid Secretaries of the Akhara, had selected Digambar Datt Gir for the office, this selection was ineffectual and Digambar Datt Gir could not be held to be the lawfully appointed Mahant of the institution. On this finding he dismissed Digambar Datt Gir's suit also.

From this decision both Bhairon Gir and Digambar Datt Gir have filed appeals to this Court. I shall take up first Bhairon Gir's appeal (Civil Appeal No. 433 of 1934). As already stated, he does not claim to be a chela of the last Mahant Rawan Gir, but alleges himself to be his gurbhai, their common guru being Mahant Khushi Gir. It is no longer denied that on 30th March 1917 Khushi Gir had executed and got registered a will, nominating his chela Rawan Gir as the next Mahant of this Mandir. Khushi Gir died six years later and under this will Rawan Gir succeeded him as the Mahant. It appears that on the death of Khushi Gir, Bhairon Gir claimed to succeed to the gaddi and alleged that, according to the custom of the institution, the right to elect the Mahant rested with the village Panchayat and the Sadhus attached to the dera, but his claim was rejected. He has put forward the same claim once again and has produced no less than 23 witnesses to support his case. We have read their evidence, but are so little impressed by it that we do not think it necessary to discuss it in detail. On matters relating to the past history of the institution and the customs and traditions of sanyasis the witnesses have disclosed hopeless ignorance, and with regard to the alleged election of Bhairon Gir there is little doubt that some of them have deliberately told lies. The so-called Village Panchayat, which, in consultation with the sadhus attached to the dera, is alleged to have elected Bhairon Gir as the Mahant, is described as a body consisting "of the lambardars and other notables of the village," nearly all of whom are Mahomedans. It is inconceivable that they could have had the determining voice in the election of the Mahant of a dashnami sanyasi institution of orthodox Hindus. Some of these lambardars and proprietors stated in the witness-box that their ancestors had gifted to this Mandir the lands in the three villages above-mentioned. No documentary evidence was however placed on the record to support this allegation, and according to the plaintiff's own witnesses the dera was founded more than 200 years ago, when the alleged gifts are stated to have been made. Obviously such an ancient gift cannot be supported by oral evidence of the kind produced by the plaintiff. In my opinion Bhairon Gir has utterly failed to substantiate his claim and I hold that his suit was rightly dismissed. I would accordingly dismiss his appeal (Civil Appeal No. 433 of 1934) with costs.

Coming now to Digambar Datt Gir's appeal we find it proved by overwhelming evidence that he was one of the two chelas of the late Mahant Rawan Gir, the other being Digambar Hari Gir. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point was not challenged before us by the learned counsel for Bhairon Gir, whose objections to Digambar Datt Gir's eligibility for the office of Mahant are: (1) that he was a sadhak chela of the deceased, and that sadhak chelas are ineligible for such appointment, and (2) that he had become a nanga sadhu and therefore could not be appointed Mahant of a dashnami sanyasi institution. After hearing counsel and reading the evidence I have no doubt that both these objections are without force. Indeed, it appears that the defendant Bhairon Gir and his witnesses have no real conception as to what a sadhak chela is and have made meaningless and contradictory statements on the point. They have deposed that it is the choti-cut-chela of the last Mahant who is eligible for appointment as his successor and that his sadhak chela is not so eligible. It is hardly necessary to cite original texts to show that the correct position is just the reverse. It is well known that before a person is initiated into the order of sanyasis he has to pass through two well defined and distinct stages. If he is an adult, he personally, and if he is a minor, his father or, in his absence, his near male relative on his behalf, has to apply to the would-be guru to take him into the fold.

If the request is granted, certain ceremonies are performed with great solemnity. His choti (scalp-lock) is cut, his head shaved, his sacred thread torn, the guru-mantra whispered into his ears, and certain formulae recited by him. On completion of these ceremonies, he becomes the choti-cut-chela of the guru. But he is not a full-fledged sanyasi yet. He has to serve a period of probation, during which both parties have a locus penitentiae; the novice is at liberty to go back into the grihast-ashram, if he or his parents so desire; the guru, if not satisfied with the chela's fitness to lead the austere life of an ascetic or his capacity to undergo the stern discipline of the order, may discharge him. If, however, he has stood the 'test' and has made a firm and irrevocable resolve not to revert to worldly affairs, he is formally initiated after the performance of the prescribed ceremonies, the most important of which is virja-homam. He offers tarpan (oblations) to his ancestors; performs his own shradha as being dead to this world; puts on the sacred thread for a while and then abandons it for ever; and after making circum ambulations round the sacred fire, severs himself completely and irrevocably from worldly affairs. On the completion of these ceremonies he becomes the sadhak chela of the guru, and a regular member of the order of sanyasis. For a detailed account of these ceremonies reference may be made to the "Note on the Customs of the Gosahens" compiled in 1825 by Mr. Warden after a very full and extensive enquiry and printed as Appendix B to the Law and Custom of Hindu Castes by Arthur Steele (pp. 431-446). The ceremonies described in this Note are practically the same as given in Sanyasagrahana puddhati, whose authorship is ascribed to Shri Sankracharya himself, and a translation of which will be found in J. C. Ghose's Law of Hindu Endowments and Religious Institutions, Vol. II, 257 (Edn. 2). See also A. C. Ghos's law of Hindu and Mohamadan Endowments, pp. 340-41, (Edn. 1); Harikishan Kaul's Census Report of the Punjab, 1911, p. 119; Bose's Glossary of Tribes and Castes in the Punjab, Vol. 3, p. 359; Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, Vol. 6, p. 332; and Bhattacharya's Hindu Castes and Sects, p. 381. See also the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in 14 C W N 191 (1) (at 202 et seq). That these injunctions are still followed generally all over the country is established by the evidence of a large number of Mahants of dashnami maths, examined on interrogatories by Digambar Datt Gir in the present case, among whom are :

(1) Mahant Harnarain Gir of Akdalia, district Hoshangabad (C. P.); (2) Mahant Sobhan Gir of Dhamantri, district Amraoti (Berar); (3) Mahant Praganand Gir of Kailash (Bihar); (4) Mahant Maharaja Gir of Chhabina Khera (Udeypur State); (5) Mahant Gyan Puri of Malsar (Baroda State); (6) Mahant Balram Gir of Kalapura, (Baroda City); (7) Mahant Bhabat Puri of Pushker (Ajmere); (8) Mahant Mahesh Puri of Itwari Peith (Nagpur City); (9) Swami Mahadeo Gir of Shivala Ghat, Benares; (10) Mahant Goswami Shiv Nath Puri of Chankarpuri Math (Benares); (11) Goswami Ram Puri of Dhayan Puri Math (Benares); and (12) Mahant Mokand Gir of Dungar Gaon (Hyderabad, Deccan).

These witnesses have also deposed that it is from amongst the sadhak chelas of a Mahant that his successor is, as a rule, appointed, and it is only right that this should be so, for, as stated above, it is only after the performance of the Virja homan ceremony that a person really becomes a sanyasi and thus becomes qualified to be the head of an institution of that order. Digambar Datt Gir has stated on oath—and his statement is corroborated by other unimpeachable testimony that he had been made a sadhak chela by Rawan Gir after the performance of Virja homan and other necessary ceremonies.

This, therefore, instead of being a disqualification, was really his qualification for appointment as the successor of the deceased Mahant. As to the next objection, it is admitted by Digambar Datt Gir that some years after his initiation as a sadhak chela of Rawan Gir, he had become a nanga Sanyasi Sadhu and had lived for some time in the panchaiti akhara of these sadhus at Allahabad. This circumstance, however, does not render him ineligible for appointment as Mahant, for it is proved that he had become a non-nanga again before the death of Rawan Gir. These nangas are dashnami sanyasis who are supposed to have attained a higher degree of freedom from passion and prejudice prevailing in the world, and for this reason they appear in a state of stark nudity as indicating that their "bodies have become like statues" and are no longer susceptible to natural excitement, and that their minds remain engrossed in divine meditation. A sanyasi, who has become a nanga is, however, not bound to remain so forever. If after a time he does not wish to continue under the stricter discipline of the nangas, or undergo the severer austerities required of him as such, he may revert to his original position as an ordinary sanyasi, and on such reversion he becomes eligible for appointment as the Mahant of a non-nanga sanyasi institution. Three such persons who have become nangas and who had succeeded as Mahants in non-nanga sanyasi institutions, have appeared as witnesses in the case, and they and the other witnesses have given instances of nangas succeeding to non-nanga sanyasi institutions as Mahants. Against all these, not a single instance to the contrary has been cited by Bhairon Gir. I hold, therefore, that the objections raised to the eligibility of Digambar Datt Gir for appointment as Mahant are groundless, and agreeing with the lower Court I overrule them.

The next question for consideration is whether Digambar Datt Gir was actually appointed Mahant of the Mandir in dispute. The lower Court has held that according to the custom of dashnami sanyasi institutions generally, a Mahant can nominate his successor from amongst his sadhak chelas and this appointment may be made orally or by will. As stated already, Mahant Khushi Gir had appointed Rawan Gir as his successor by a registered will, and this instance decidedly supports the lower Court's view. Mahant Rawan Gir also executed a will, but instead of making the appointment himself he directed the Secretaries of the Maha Nirbani Panchaiti Akhara of Allahabad to select his successor from amongst his two sadhak chelas, Digambar Datt Gir and Digambar Hari Gir. In accordance with his directions, shortly after his death these Secretaries made the selection in favour of Digambar Datt Gir. One of the Secretaries Digambar Ram Gir (D. W. 8) has appeared as a witness in the case and has deposed that the other chela Digambar Hari Gir was not anxious to become the Mahant and had consented to the selection of Digambar Datt Gir as the Mahant of this institution. Hari Gir has not appeared as a witness in the case, but it is noteworthy that 8 years have elapsed since the death of Rawan Gir, and he has not made any claim to the gaddi. On these facts, Mr. Shamair Chand contends that Digambar Datt Gir must be considered to be the lawfully nominated successor of Rawan Gir. Before coming to a proper decision on the validity of the appointment, however, it seems to us necessary to get further evidence as to the previous history of this institution, as the material bearing on the point on the present record appears to us to be very meagre. As has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 43 Cal 707 (2), at p. 714, citing with approval the well-known case of (1839) 6 S D A (Beng) 262 (3) at p. 268, broadly speaking such institutions divide themselves into three classes: (1) Maurusi, in which succession is in the spiritual line from guru to chela; (2) panchaiti, which are purely democratic institutions, in which a successor is appointed by election by the Bhek; and (3) hakmi where the successor is nominated by the ruling chief, or the party who had endowed the temple.

Indar Nath (P. W. 11), one of the witnesses for Bhairon Gir, stated that the institution in dispute was a panchaiti dera. He is, however, not a sanyasi but a jogi, and is quite illiterate. His evidence is otherwise discrepant and no reliance can be placed on his solitary testimony. Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant urges, on the other hand, that the institution is a maurusi institution, and he states that descent has been from guru to chela. He also states that of the two sadhak chelas of the deceased, Digambar Datt Gir is the senior. The documentary evidence on the record, however, takes us back to three generations only, in which succession has undoubtedly been from guru to chela; Rawan Gir succeeded his guru Khushi Gir, who succeeded his guru Balwant Gir, who is recorded in the revenue papers as the Mahant in 1908. The names of the four preceding Mahants are given as Akshma Gir, Zalim Gir, Guman Gir and Ganesh Gir, but it has not been made clear in what degree of spiritual relationship (if any) each of them stood to his predecessor, and how their appointments were made. In our opinion, there is a lacuna in the evidence bearing on this important point and we feel that it is not possible to come to a definite decision in Digambar Datt Gir's suit without further enquiry. We accordingly remand the case under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., for enquiry on the following issues: (1) Is the dera of Mandir Mahadeo in Mauza Urnai Sangam a maurusi institution, in which succession to the office of Mahantship has been from guru to chela? and (2) is Digambar Datt Gir the senior chela of Rawan Gir?

Counsel for both parties have been directed to cause their clients to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, on 16th December 1935, on which date the parties will file lists of witnesses whom they wish to produce and also file the documents in their possession or power on which they rely. The Court will then fix a date for recor-

Criminal Appeal No. 913 of 1935, Decided on 5th November 1935, from order of Sess. Judge, Montgomery, D/- 15th August 1935.

(a) Criminal Trial—Defence—Alibi should be raised at first chance.

A defence of alibi if true ought to be raised at the earliest possible moment. [P 233 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence in murder case—Prosecution witnesses related to deceased victim—Unless enmity is shown towards accused, evidence of relatives should not be discarded.

In a case of murder the fact that the prosecution witnesses are relatives of the murdered man is no valid reason for discarding their evidence. What would be of importance is that the witnesses had enmity with the accused. Interests of the relatives is undoubtedly to see the true criminal prosecuted; they have no interest in accusing any one falsely unless they have enmity. [P 233 C 2]

(c) Murder—Weapon used to break every limb—Case is of murder.

If weapons like lathis or the blunt side of axes are used in order to break every limb of a man's body and a man dies thereof, it is just as surely murder as if the head had been smashed. [P 234 C 1]

Judgment.—Dilwar was charged with his brother Suja and a cousin Ahmad with murder. The learned Sessions Judge held that Suja and Ahmed had been falsely implicated in the crime and acquitted them: Dilwar, he condemned to death. At first sight it would appear that Dilwar on the finding of the learned Judge would have also to be acquitted on the ground that the same witnesses who had falsely accused Suja and Ahmad were the only persons who gave evidence against him and that therefore as they committed perjury in this matter, their evidence could not be accepted for any purpose in this case. On looking at the record however we find that we cannot agree with the learned Judge as to this finding. The defence which the learned Judge believed, that there was good alibi for both Suja and Ahmad, we cannot accept. The alibi was never raised in the Court of the committing Magistrate and it was only in the Court of the Sessions Judge that the accused raised this defence. In our opinion, this in most cases would be fatal to any plea of alibi. A defence of this sort, if true, ought to be raised at the earliest possible moment. Further, the same defence witnesses are clearly telling lies on the question of the death of Gahra.

In the Court of the committing Magistrate Dilwar merely said that the case against him was due to enmity. In the Sessions Court he raised an absurd story that the deceased died by accident—he pulled a log away from a stack of wood and the other logs fell upon him. This story, in view of the medical evidence, is absurd. Most of the lambardars who were defence witnesses made no statements to the police, and it is impossible to believe that any of them could have made statements to the police. Lambardars knowing, as they must have known that the two accused who have been acquitted had been charged with murder, would have come forward much earlier with their evidence, if it was true. We are therefore not forced to discard the prosecution evidence. As regards Dilwar, who is the only accused now left, there are five eye-witnesses, two of them, at any rate, being only very distantly related to the deceased by marriage. In any event, we have frequently pointed out that in a case of this sort the fact that the prosecution witnesses are relatives of the murdered man is no valid reason for discarding their evidence. What would be of importance is that the witnesses had enmity with the accused. The interests of the relatives is undoubtedly to see the true criminal prosecuted; they have no interest in accusing any one falsely unless they have enmity. We have no reason to disbelieve any of these witnesses. There is also a dying declaration by the accused which was recorded some time after the actual injuries were inflicted. The defence that Dilwar put forward only in the Sessions Court is wholly unbelievable. He says that the dead man was killed by accident, as logs of wood fell upon him; in view of the medical evidence this cannot be believed. The injuries were terrible: almost every bone in the man's body was broken and broken into several pieces. This would not happen owing to the logs of wood falling upon him. We are satisfied therefore that Dilwar is guilty of the offence with which he was charged. It has been argued by counsel that this is not a case under S. 302 as no vital part of the body was injured. We have frequently pointed out however that if weapons like lathis or the blunt side of axes are used in order to break every limb of a man's body it is just as surely a murder as if the head had been smashed. Injuries on the head are deliberately avoided in most cases in order to support such a defence.

The only other point is, whether Dilwar ought to be hanged or not. In this behalf we notice that it is the case for the prosecution, and indeed, it is in evidence, that the deceased had been carrying on with the sister of the accused and that there had been trouble about it. On the night in question the deceased, according to the plan which we have seen, had clearly left his fields to go near the house of the accused where he was actually beaten and killed. In our opinion, it appears that the deceased had gone there in order to carry on his intrigue with the sister of the accused, was found there and beaten to death. In this view of the matter we are justified in reducing the sentence from that of death to transportation for life. We therefore set aside the sentence of death and sentence the appellant to transportation for life: the appeal is otherwise dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 310 of 1935, Decided on 22nd May 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 8th January 1935.

Deed—Construction—Nature of transaction must be decided by looking at substance—Sale cannot be converted into exchange by mere addition of trifling non-pecuniary consideration to price.

The question whether a transaction is a sale or an exchange has to be decided by looking at its substance. A transaction cannot be converted into an exchange merely by the addition of some trifling non-pecuniary consideration to the price so as to defeat the right of pre-emptors: 29 P R 1893 and 1915 Lah 218, Rel. on. [P 234 C 2]

Mehr Chand Mahajan and R. L. Chawla—for Appellant.

Nanak Chand and L. M. Dutta—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption with respect to the sale of an "ahata" for Rs. 900 and a bigha of land valued at Rs. 300. The defendants' contention was that the transaction was an exchange and not a sale and was therefore not subject to pre-emption. This plea was rejected by the trial Court but upheld by the lower Court, which has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal. A preliminary objection is raised that the finding of the learned District Judge that the transaction was an exchange is one of fact and as such not open to challenge. The District Judge has, however, given this finding without considering the relevant and material evidence. It is well-established that the question whether a transaction is a sale or an exchange has to be decided by looking at its substance: cf. 29 P R 1893 (1) and 82 P R 1915 (2). A transaction cannot be converted into an exchange merely by the addition of some trifling non-pecuniary consideration to the price so as to defeat the right of pre-emptors. The contention of the plaintiff in this case was that the one bigha of land was of trifling value and was not even intended to be transferred. The learned Judge of the trial Court held that the land was in fact transferred, but it was of small value and this portion of the consideration was added merely to defeat pre-emptors and that the transaction was in substance a sale. The District Judge has given no finding at all on the question of the value of the land, holding merely that the evidence was uncertain. He accepted the finding of the trial Court that the land was in fact transferred; but this in itself was not sufficient to determine whether the transaction was or was not a sale. The District Judge should have therefore arrived at a finding on the value of the land and then decided in view of all the other evidence whether the transaction was in substance a sale or an exchange.

Judgment.—A suit was brought by Durab on his own behalf and as the next friend of Sultan Muhammad, Mubariz and Sher Muhammad, minors, against Mehr Khan and Sher Muhammad, defendants. In the course of this suit Durab, whose interests were identical with those of the minors, agreed to be bound by the oath of a certain witness, namely Mian Muhammad. Mian Muhammad stated on oath that the plaintiffs had no concern with the land in dispute. On this statement the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. The minor plaintiff now under the next friendship of another person have brought the present suit for a declaration that the decision in the previous suit was not binding upon them owing to Durab, their next friend, having acted negligently, fraudulently and collusively, and that sanction of the Court had not been obtained under O. 32, R. 7, Civil P.

C. The trial Court held that the next friend of the minors did not act negligently or fraudulently in the previous suit but decreed the claim on the ground that the undertaking given by the next friend of the minor plaintiffs in the previous suit that he would be bound by the oath of the witness Mian Muhammad, was tantamount to a compromise and the necessary sanction was not given by the Court under O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C. He therefore held that the compromise and the decree passed on the basis thereof were not binding upon the plaintiffs. The defendants, Meher Khan and Sher Muhammad went up in appeal to the Senior Subordinate Judge. He agreed with the trial Court in holding that the next friend of the minors had not acted negligently or fraudulently in the previous suit. He further held that there was some kind of permission given by the Court before Mian Muhammad took the oath by which the next friend of the minors had expressed his willingness to abide. On these findings he allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have come up to this Court in second appeal.

The learned counsel for the appellants relied upon 186 P R 1889 (1), in which it was laid down that if the next friend of a minor expressed his willingness to relinquish the claim of the minor, should the opposite party take a certain oath this was in the nature of a compromise and that sanction under S. 462, Civil P. C., now O. 32, R. 7, was necessary and that in the absence of such a sanction the minors were not bound. The case was not followed in the Full Bench decision in 18 P R 1891 (2). My own view is that the proceedings, which were taken in the previous case when the next friend expressed his willingness to be bound by the oath of Mian Muhammad, were not in the nature of a compromise at all. It was a method of proof which the next friend had adopted. There was nothing illegal at all in that method. It must be further remembered that the interests of the next friend and the minors were identical. This being so, no sanction, as required under O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C., was necessary. I am supported in this view by the authority of a Division Bench of

Mohsin Shah—for Appellants.

Chiranjiva Lal Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In execution of a money decree passed against the estates of a person who was governed by the Customary Law of this province, the fruits of the trees in the garden have been attached. The District Judge has found that according to the custom governing the parties the heirs are bound to satisfy a decree passed against the estate of the deceased even out of ancestral property in their hands. The question then is whether after the death of the deceased, income from the land left by him which has devolved upon his heirs remains part of his estate or becomes the absolute property of his heirs. In the latter case it would not be attachable and saleable in execution of a decree passed against the estate; in the first case the decree being against the estate, it would be liable to satisfy the decree. No authority has been cited by the appellants' counsel to show that the order of the District Judge holding that the fruit must be deemed to be a part of the estate of the deceased is erroneous. On the other hand, the learned District Judge has followed two previously decided cases. In 1928 Oudh 40 (1), it was held by a Division Bench of the Chief Court of Oudh that rents and profits are legal incidents of immoveable property and must bear the same character as the property itself, and it appears that under circumstances similar to the present case the rents and profits of immoveable property in the hands of a deceased owner which rents and profits had accrued after the death of the deceased after the estate had devolved on his heirs, were held liable for the satisfaction of a decree passed against the estate.

The same view was taken by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 1924 Mad 530 (2). In that case, it was held that income accrued since the late zamindar's death which had come into the hands of the new zamindar can be attached in execution of the decree passed against the zamindar. In this case it having been held that the estate in the hands of the heirs of the original debtor against whose estate the decree was passed is liable for the satisfaction of the decree, it follows that the produce and income of that estate which has accrued after the death of the original debtor is liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of such a decree. The cases cited by the appellants' counsel in which it has been held that a limited owner has full control over the income of the estate in his or her hands or that fruits of trees are moveable property have no bearing on the present case. Here there is no question of any restrictions on the alienation by the limited owner, but the question is whether the income of the estate follows the same rule as the estate itself even when income had accrued after the succession dah opened out in favour of the next heir or whether it becomes the absolute property of the next heir and is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the previous owner. The two authorities cited above are conclusive on the question and accordingly I must dismiss this appeal, but pass no order as to costs because the point was certainly a difficult one.

Judgment. — By a registered deed dated 12th August 1932, Devi Ditta, a Jat of Mauza Hussainpur, Tahsil Nakodar, Jullunder District, 'adopted' as his son, Jowala, who is his collateral in the fourth degree. Diwan Singh and Nand Singh, plaintiffs, who are related to Devi Ditta in the third degree, sued for a declaration that the adoption of Jowala was invalid as under the custom prevailing in the tribe the "adoption" of a remoter collateral is invalid in the presence of nearer collaterals who have not refused to be "adopted." The defendant pleaded that custom did not lay down any such imperative restriction and that the adoption was valid. The Courts below have found for the plaintiffs and have decreed the suit. The District Judge however had granted a certificate to the defendant for a second appeal under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act. The answer to question 69 in Sardar Hotu Singh's Customary Law of the Jullunder District published in 1918 is that:

As a general rule the person adopted is selected from collaterals, the nearer collateral being given preference; the selection is also made of a person of the same tribe and got as the adopter.

In the vernacular Riwajiam of the Nakodar Tahsil prepared in the course of Sardar Hotu Singh's settlement (Ex. P-5), the answer of the Hindu Jats is stated as follows:

As a general rule, first the sons of the real brothers are adopted. In their absence the remote collaterals having regard for nearness are adopted. It cannot be that a remote relation be adopted to the exclusion of a near relation's son. In case a near relation refuses, the son of a remote relation is adopted, but the adopter and the adoptee should be of one and the same tribe, with the condition that the adoptee and the adoptive father should be of one and the same got.

The question for consideration is whether this provision in the answer is mandatory, as alleged by the plaintiffs, or merely indicative, as contended for by the defendants. The riwajiams of several other districts contain similar provisions, which have been the subject of judicial decision during the last fifty years or so. In 114 P R 1889 (1), an identical entry in Walker's Customary Law of the Ludhiana District was under consideration and it was held that the restriction as regards the degree of relationship of the person to be adopted, as stated in the riwajiam, was not of a mandatory nature. 10 P R 1908 (2) was a case from the Amritsar District the riwajiam of which was in very similar terms. Robertson, J., who delivered the judgment of the Division Bench, observed that the entry is clearly only indicative and not mandatory. It is clearly not intended to force a near agnate upon the adopter, who is inimical to him or unsuitable, or unsatisfactory to him for any cause.

This interpretation was followed in 44 P R 1913 (3), in respect of an almost identical entry in the riwajiam of the Gujranwala District. In 7 Lah 117 (4), a somewhat similar answer in the riwajiam of the Gurgaon District was given the same meaning. In the vernacular riwajiam of the Nakodar Tahsil, (Ex. P/5) to which reference has been made already, a large number of instances are cited below the answer to the question, but in not a single one of them was the 'adoption' of a remoter collateral questioned or set aside at the instance of a near collateral. These are merely instances of adoptions of collaterals, which were held to be valid, as against those of sisters' or daughters' sons. The evidence produced in this case does not contain a single proved instance of such an adoption having been held to be invalid. As against this, the defendants have relied upon a decision of a Subordinate Judge, Jullunder, in Ishar v. Chuhar, (Ex. D/2), where the adoption of a collateral of the 6th degree was upheld in a suit which had been instituted by collaterals of the third degree. In that suit the plaintiffs directed their attack mainly against the factum of the adoption and did not question its validity. It is significant that if the custom was so well established, as contended for by the plaintiff-respondents, this obvious plea should not have been taken. The decision of the Subordinate Judge in that case was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge (Ex. D/5). Mr. Badri Das for the respondents has argued that in view of the entry in the riwajiam the onus lay heavily on the defendant-appellants and that the solitary instance cited by them, assuming it to be an instance in point, was not sufficient to discharge the onus. In my opinion this is not a correct view of the matter.

The question here is not one as to the quantum of evidence necessary to rebut a clear entry in the riwajiam, but the real point for decision is the meaning to be given to the entry in the riwajiam. If the entry were held to be mandatory, there can be no question that the evidence produced by the defendants must be held to be insufficient to justify a finding that the onus has been discharged. But if the entry is merely indicative and is to be given the meaning that has been given to similar entries in the riwajiams of the neighbouring districts, I have no doubt that the decision of the lower Courts is incorrect. After giving the matter careful consideration, I am of opinion that the view taken in the previous rulings of the Chief Court and this Court must be followed and the entry held to be merely indicative. I hold that the adoption of Jowala by Devi Ditta was valid by custom and that the plaintiffs' suit has been wrongly decreed. I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. Having regard to all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

It is also alleged that he removed that watch from his car and deposited it with another person in order to make it appear that the watch had been stolen. In investigation, the police came to the conclusion that the report was false and that the watch had been removed by the petitioner himself. The case was accordingly reported to the Magistrate for cancellation. The present petitioner was then challaned under Ss. 193 and 211, I. P. C., and the Magistrate took cognizance of this chalan, recorded the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and framed charges against him. For the petitioner it is contended that in view of S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., the Magistrate's action is illegal and should be quashed. It appears to me that this contention must be accepted. I am clear that the words in this sub-section "in relation to any proceedings in any Court" apply to the case of a false report or a false statement made in an investigation by the police with the intention that there shall in consequence of this be a trial in the criminal Court, and I find support for this view in the case reported as 1929

Sind 132 (1). I therefore accept this petition and order that the proceedings in the lower Court be quashed.

(Firm) Narain Dass-Chela Ram—Decree-holder—Respondent.

Misc. First Appeal No. 543 of 1935, Decided on 20th May 1935, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 20th March 1935.

Execution — Appointment of receiver merely to receive daily earnings of judgment-debtor's theatre after collection and keep accounts, but not to actually collect at doors — Order held was not ultra vires.

Section 51, Civil P. C., prescribes the procedure in execution and lays down that the Court may on the application of the decree-holder order execution of the decree by appointing a receiver. No further restrictions have been placed on the power of the Court in this section, nor has the nature of the property been defined of which a receiver can be appointed. This section will therefore evidently be governed by the provisions of O. 40, R. 1. Hence where the judgment-debtor has a theatre and a receiver is appointed in execution of a decree against the judgment-debtor to receive the earnings collected and keep accounts but not to receive money at the doors, the money so earned is property within the meaning of O. 40, R. 1 and as such the order is not ultra vires, but is just and convenient: *Cadogan v. Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of certain execution proceedings. The decree-holder respondents applied to the executing Court for the appointment of a receiver to collect the gate money of a cinema hall owned by the judgment-debtor. The executing Court allowed this application but with the express reservation that the receiver will not be entitled to manage the show but would merely keep an account of the income and expenditure and deposit the amount daily in the civil Court account. Against this order the judgment-debtor has appealed. Counsel for the appellant contends that such future earnings are not covered by O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C., and that therefore no receiver can be appointed to collect them. In support of his contention he relies on (1894) 3 Ch D 338 (1), 59 Cal 205 (2), 34 C W N 440 (3) and 61 I C 849 (4). In (1894) 3 Ch D 338 (1):

A judgment for debt was recovered against a theatre company. The theatre was subject to a mortgage. The company had no land except the theatre, of which they were lessces and were in occupation, and they were using it for the ordinary purposes of a theatre.

It was held that a receiver could not be appointed at the instance of the judgment-creditor to receive by way of equitable execution the moneys paid by the public for entrance to the theatre. It was however added that a receiver ought to be appointed of the rents and profits of the company's lands by way of equitable execution, without prejudice to the right of any prior incumbrancers, and that the company should be ordered to deliver up possession of the lands to him. In the present case also the hall is under a mortgage with possession and the judgment-debtor is said to have taken it on lease from the mortgagees. Counsel for the appellant contends that that case is on all fours with his and that the gate money received by the judgment-debtor is consequently immune from the operation of O. 40, R. 1. I, however, do not agree with him there.

Under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, a receiver can now be appointed before or after the decree of any property and all such powers as to management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits as the owner himself has, can be conferred upon him. It is no doubt true that in his judgment, Lord Herschell, L. C., has observed that money paid for entrance to a theatre cannot properly be described as rent or profits of the premises, but here, as stated above, the receiver is not entitled to receive money at the doors but is merely entitled to receive the daily earnings after they have been collected. To my mind, the money so earned would clearly come within the definition of property as used in O. 40, R. 1. As soon as the gate money is received and collected for the judgment-debtor, it becomes his property and I fail to see how it cannot be utilized for the benefit of his judgment-creditors either by attachment or through the appointment of a receiver.

In 59 Cal 205 (2), a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that a simple contract creditor, who has no specified charge or no right to be paid out of a specified fund, could not in general ask for the appointment of a receiver. This evidently means that circumstances may exist when such an application can be made and in my view in the present case such special circumstances do exist. In 34 C W N 440 (3), which is an earlier judgment of the same High Court, it was laid down by a Division Bench that the words "just and convenient" did not mean that the Court was to appoint a receiver simply because the Court thought it convenient, but they meant that the Court should make the appointment for protection of rights or prevention of injury according to legal principles. The Judges had made the same observations in that case in regard to a simple contract creditor as have been cited above. On the merits it was remarked that no sufficient case had been made out for the appointment of a receiver. I have already made it clear that this is a special case in which order for the appointment of a receiver is necessary and on this basis, I find that this authority also is of no use to the appellant. The observations made in 61 I C 849 (4), which has been quoted by the appellant in his own favour, rather support the respondent. A Division Bench of the Patna High Court held in that case that:

There is no jurisdiction in a Court to appoint a receiver at the instance of a simple contract creditor unless the creditor establishes a special equity in his favour for such appointment. The appointment of a receiver is an equitable relief and will be only granted on equitable grounds.

The decree in the present case was made on 8th May 1928. The judgment-debtor had undertaken to pay Rs. 75 per mensem and after making thirteen such payments made a default. He does not appear to be in possession of any other property. This hall is under a mortgage with possession of which the judgment-debtor is holding a lease himself. The appointment of a receiver may not be made to coerce a judgment-debtor into discharging his obligation, but I do not see any reason why this power should not be exercised merely because the judgment-debtor finds himself coerced to pay off the decree. S. 51, Civil P. C., prescribes the procedure in execution and lays down that the Court may on the application of the decree-holder order execution of the decree by appointing a receiver. No further restrictions have been placed on the power of the Court in this section, nor has the nature of the property been defined of which a receiver can be appointed. This section will therefore evidently be governed by the provisions of O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C. There also no express prohibition has been laid down against the appointment of a receiver in regard to such property as is involved in this case, and in the absence of any such express prohibition I am not prepared to hold that the order of a Court appointing a receiver to receive these earnings will be ultra vires. I have already made it clear that I treat the collections of the gate money after they have been earned as the property of the judgment-debtor, and in these circumstances I consider that the order of the Court below was quite legal.

Counsel for the appellant further contends that before an order under O. 40, R. 1 can be passed, the Court must be satisfied that the order will be just and convenient. This is no doubt so, but I do not find any injustice or inconvenience to the judgment-debtor in the order proposed by the executing Court. The Senior Subordinate Judge has been quite considerate towards the judgment-debtor and has paid ample regard to his comfort. He has laid down an express condition in his order that the receiver will have no concern in the management of the cinema which will still vest in the judgment-debtor as before. He has also made it clear that the receiver will have no hand in the selection of the pictures to be shown or in any other administrative matter, but will merely confine his activities to the keeping of an account of the income and expenditure. In these circumstances, the order under appeal is neither unjust nor inconvenient. In the result, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 290 of 1935, Decided on 6th June 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 6th December 1934.

(a) Possessory Suit—Plaintiff in possession of property—Defendant having no right therein contesting plaintiff's right to be manager—Suit for declaration by plaintiff and to restrain defendant from interfering with his possession must be decreed.

Plaintiff was admittedly in possession of the Shiwala and the defendant claimed no right therein for himself. He merely contested the plaintiff's right to be the manager. In a suit by plaintiff for a declaration that he is in possession of same and to restrain the defendant from interfering with it:

Held: that the possession of plaintiff was sufficient evidence of title as owner against the defendant and that he was entitled as against the present defendant to a decree declaring that he was in possession of the property and restraining the defendant from interfering with him in the management thereof: 20 Cal 834 (P C), Foll. and 78 P R 1902, Appr. * (b) Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Failure of succession to trusteeship—Right of management reverts to founder and follows line of inheritance from founder and not merely descends to his heirs—Obiter.

Obiter.—On the failure of the succession to the office of the trustee the right of management reverts to the founder and follows the line of inheritance from the founder and not merely descends to his heirs. Hence though a daughter's son's son is not an heir of the founder he is still in the line of inheritance from the founder and as such the management devolves on him: 32 Cal 129 (P C), Foll.

Judgment.—The facts leading to this second appeal may be briefly stated. One Lachhi Misar died and on 27th July 1876, Mt. Radhan, the widow of his brother, obtained a succession certificate. She sued Dhari Mal, a son of Mt. Atman Devi, sister of Lachhi Misar, for a house and obtained a decree on 23rd March 1878. This house is now in possession of the plaintiff-appellant Dia Parkash who according to the pedigree table given in the judgment of the lower appellate Court is the great-grandson of Mt. Radhan's daughter Mt. Bishan Devi. On 10th November 1880, Mt. Radhan executed a deed of endowment in which she recited that according to the will of Lachhi Misar she had constructed a temple and a well and assigned two shops for the maintenance thereof. Two trustees Mohan Lal and Maharaja Mal were appointed. Mohan Lal has been long deceased and we are not concerned with him. Maharaj Mal continued to act after the death of Mohan Lal and the plaintiff's father Labhu Ram brought a suit against him which however was dismissed. Maharaja Mal then died and the present defendant-respondent is his son Bhana Mal. The plaintiff Dia Parkash sued for a declaration against Bhana Mal, that he was in possession of and entitled to the management of the temple and property, and asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering in the management. His suit was decreed by the trial Court, but on appeal the Senior Sub-Judge (with special appellate powers) held that the plaintiff being a daughter's son's son was not, under Hindu law, the heir of Mt. Radhan. He accordingly dismissed the suit. He did not decide the question whether the founder of the institution was Lachhi Misar, as contended by the defendant or Mt. Radhan.

Before me it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that this decision is wrong, and that in any event the plaintiff being in possession was entitled to a decree. It will be convenient to take the second contention first as the appeal must succeed on this ground. It is contended that as the plaintiff is in possession he is entitled to the declaration as against the defendant who claims no interest in the management. Admittedly the plaintiff is in possession of the Shiwala though he alleges that owing to interference on the part of the defendant the tenants of the shops refused to attorn to him. The trial Court recorded a clear finding to the effect that the defendant had been guilty of interference and this finding was not attacked in the grounds of appeal presented before the Senior Sub-Judge. The only ground that could be suggested as raising the point in any way is ground No. 1 which runs that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant and the suit should have been dismissed on this preliminary ground only.

This clearly does not relate to the finding of the trial Court and that finding therefore must be accepted. For the appellant reference has been made to 78 P R 1902 (1) and 20 Cal 834 (2). In the latter ruling at p. 842 their Lordships remarked that the possession of the plaintiff was sufficient evidence of the title as owner against the defendant.

That remark would apply to the present case. The plaintiff is admittedly in possession of the Shiwala and the defendant claims no right therein for himself. He merely contests the plaintiff's right to be the manager. There are descendants of Mt. Atman Devi, the sister of Lachhi Misar, but they are not parties to the present suit though one of them appeared as a witness. Similarly the tenants of the shops are not parties to the suit and nothing which is decided in this suit would affect the rights of any other parties. It appears to me therefore that while it is impossible to give the plaintiff a decree declaring that he is of right entitled to the management of the property as a descendant of Mt. Atman Devi, he is nevertheless entitled as against the present defendant to a decree declaring that he was in possession of the property and restraining the defendant from interfering with him in the management thereof. This however must be construed as in no wise limiting the right of the defendant to take any legal action which he might be entitled to take under S. 92, Civil P. C., or otherwise in the event of mismanagement of the property. To this extent I accept the appeal and grant the plaintiff-appellant a decree. As regards the first point it is admitted that on the failure of the succession to the office of the trustee the right of management reverts to the founder and his heirs (Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, Para. 421). Mr. Kishan Dayal for the appellant contends that the management of the institution devolves on the ground that he is too remote in descent to be considered an heir under Hindu Law.

Admittedly, the present plaintiff as a daughter's great-grandson would not be an heir to Mt. Radhan though he is in the line of inheritance. Mr. Kishan Dayal has referred to 32 Cal 129 (3) at

p. 131, where their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that the management and control of the property follows "the line of inheritance from the founder." He contends that this expression is distinguishable from the words "heirs of the founder." No direct authority has been cited by counsel on either side, but the contention of Mr. Kishan Dayal has considerable force and the decision of the Senior Sub-Judge appears to me to be erroneous and based on too narrow an interpretation of the law. It is however unnecessary to record a definite finding on this point, which is not free from difficulty as in view of my finding on the question of possession the appeal must succeed. As the defendant has throughout contested the plaintiff's claim he will pay the costs throughout.

Immoveable Property—Flour mill is not immoveable property.

Flour mill, as such, can change hands and be removed from one place to another and so it is not immoveable property within the meaning of S. 2 (6) of the Registration Act: 25 Bom 659, Foll. [P 242 C 2; P 243 C 1]

Judgment—In this case the sole question is whether a particular flour mill in which the insolvent holds a share was immoveable property within the meaning of the term as used in the Registration Act and, therefore, the registered mortgage in favour of Kahan Chand, though of a later date, ought to have priority above the hypothecation in favour of Girdhari Shah which is of an early date. The flour mill, as we are aware, is a heavy machine consisting of large pieces of iron and other metals. It is brought from distant places by rail and is carted away to the place where it is to be fixed and worked. It is attached to the ground by means of nails and bolts and other appliances so that it may remain in a proper position. It can also be transferred by sale or otherwise after it has been used, and in that event it is removed from the spot where it was fixed by unfastening the nails and bolts to be re-fixed once again at another place and this may go on. In short the flour mill, as such, can change hands and be removed from one place to another; on the other hand a house which is attached to the earth, cannot be removed from its site as such, and fixed in another place. It will have to be demolished first and then the masonry and the timber or iron work can be removed by ordinary means of transport, but it would not be the house itself, as we understand the expression. Furthermore, we cannot ignore the fact that in the present case the insolvent was the lessee of the premises and his interest in the land leased to him and on which he had established the flour mill was limited in point of time. Ordinarily speaking, therefore, it does not stand to reason that he would erect a permanent structure on the land on which he was merely a tenant for a limited period. In my opinion the Court below rightly followed the law as laid down in 25 Bom 659 (1). In view of the law laid down in that judgment, and with which I entirely agree, I affirm the order of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Decree—Setting aside of—Defendants filing separate applications to set aside ex parte decree—Decree set aside against one defendant only—Decree being indivisible held should be set aside against all.

A trust deed was alleged to be executed by two defendants who were sued on the basis of the trust. An ex parte decree was passed against both. Separate applications to set aside ex parte decree were made by both the defendants. The decree was set aside as against one while the application of other was dismissed. The defendants challenged the validity of the trust deed itself. On revision:

Held: that if the decree against one were allowed to stand and the suit was allowed to proceed against the other, it might result in two inconsistent decrees. The decree was one and indivisible and so under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., the decree should be set aside against all the defendants. [P 243 C 2]

Kishan Dayal—for Petitioner.

Order.—A suit was brought against Nanak Chand and Kastur Chand, who are father and son, on the basis of a trust deed said to have been executed by them. An ex parte decree was passed against both of them on 20th July 1932. The father applied to have the decree set aside on 3rd August 1932, and the son applied separately on 4th August 1932. The trial Court dismissed both the applications on 20th February 1933. The learned District Judge accepted the appeal of the son and set aside the decree against him, but he dismissed the appeal of the father. A petition for revision against the order dismissing the appeal of the father has been filed to this Court. It has been urged that the learned District Judge has failed to consider the proviso to O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., which lays down that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against one defendant only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also. The question for consideration is whether the decree is or is not of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against one defendant only. It has been urged before me that the validity of the trust deed relied on by the plaintiffs is not admitted and if the decree against the father stands and the suit is allowed to proceed against the son, it may result in two inconsistent decrees. The decree is one and indivisible, and complications may arise if it is allowed to stand against the father and not against the son. 24 All 383 (1) and 25 Cal 155 (2) support the position taken up by the petitioner. This Court can interfere in revision because a clear provision of law seems to have been ignored by the learned District Judge.

I accept the petition and set aside the ex parte decree against the father also. No order as to costs.

Civil Ref. No. 6 of 1935, Decided on 9th October 1935, from decision of Dist. Judge, Attock, D/- 2nd October 1934.

(a) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 4 (7)—Mukarridar—Person paying rent for land held by him is a tenant even though a Mukarridar.

The question whether a Mukarridar comes within the definition of a 'tenant' should be decided on the condition on which the land is held by him. Where a person holds land on payment of rent it would be sufficient to bring him within the definition of the term 'tenant.'

(b) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 4 (1)—Land—Option given to lessee to build on land—No building constructed—Land still remains 'land' under Act.

The mere option given to a person to erect building on land leased to him is not sufficient to take the land in dispute out of the definition of that term in the Punjab Tenancy Act when in fact no building has been erected thereon.

(c) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 100—Case triable by Revenue Court, heard and decided by civil Court—Proper issues and evidence recorded—Parties not prejudiced—Case should not be remanded but decree should be registered as one of Revenue Court.

According to S. 100, Pun. Ten. Act if it appears that a suit is determined in good faith and that the parties are not prejudiced by the mistake as to jurisdiction, the decree can be registered as that of a Court having jurisdiction. Where proper issues are framed and the whole evidence is recorded it is not necessary in the interests of justice to remand the case, as S. 100 gives discretion to Lahore High Court to register decree as that of a Revenue Court in such cases.

Order.—This is a reference by the District Judge of Attock under S. 100, Pun. Ten. Act, recommending that a certain decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, from which an appeal was preferred to him, be registered as a decree of a revenue Court inasmuch as the suit was cognizable by a revenue Court. The material facts may be briefly stated as follows:

The plaintiff Tola Ram Singh took a lease of 28 kanals 6 marlas of land as a Mukarridar from two persons named Chanpir and Ghulam Hussain on 18th February 1919. According to the terms of the lease the plaintiff was entitled to sink a well and use the land for agricultural purposes or in the alternative to erect buildings thereon. The rent was fixed at Rs. 3 per kanal. Subsequently on 14th May 1925 Chanpir and Ghulam Hussain mortgaged the 'right to receive the rent' in favour of the plaintiff. On 24th July 1930 Chanpir and Ghulam Hussain transferred the land to the defendant Fazal Ahmad by virtue of a deed of exchange and the latter thereupon issued a notice to the plaintiff alleging that the plaintiff was keeping the land uncultivated and was therefore liable to ejectment. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was in possession of the land on a permanent lease as a Mukarridar and that he was not liable to ejectment. As regards the deed of exchange on which the defendant Fazal Ahmad relied the plaintiff alleged that it was champertous and against public policy and was therefore void. The suit was originally filed in a revenue Court but the revenue Court held that it was triable by a civil Court.

In the civil Court the question of jurisdiction was again raised but the Senior Subordinate Judge held that the suit was cognizable by a civil Court and decided on merits in favour of the plaintiff. From this decision an appeal was preferred to the District Judge who took a different view on the question of jurisdiction. He came to the conclusion that the suit as originally framed was rightly held to be cognizable by a civil Court but that inasmuch as certain issues between the parties which it was necessary to decide were triable only by a revenue Court, the plaint should have been returned for presentation to a revenue Court, as required by proviso to sub-s. 3, S. 77, Pun. Ten. Act. The learned District Judge was however of opinion that the suit had been tried in good faith and there had been no prejudice to the parties and he has therefore recommended under S. 100, Pun. Ten. Act that the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge be registered as a decree of a Revenue Court.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that the view of the learned District Judge that the suit was triable by a revenue Court was not correct; it is urged that the plaintiff being a Mukarridar does not come within the definition of a 'tenant' that Fazal Ahmad is not a landlord within the definition of that term and that the land in dispute also does not fall within the definition of 'land' in the Punjab Tenancy Act. As regards the first point it is admitted that there are certain rulings of the Punjab Chief Court in which it has been held that a Mukarridar is a tenant though of a higher status. It is however contended that owing to the amendment of the Punjab Tenancy Act in the year 1925 these rulings are no longer good law. All that was however done in 1925 was to define the term 'Mukarridar' in S. 4, Cl. 20. Some other sections of the Punjab Tenancy Act were also amended and 'Mukarridars' were classed as 'occupancy tenants' for the purposes of those sections. They have, however, not been excluded from the definition of a tenant under Cl. 5, S. 4 as certain other persons have been; for example an inferior land owner, a mortgagee of the rights of a landlord and so on. It seems to me that the question, whether a Mukarridar comes within the definition of a 'tenant' will have to be decided on the conditions on which the land is held by him. In the present instance it appears from the lease dated 18th February 1919 that the land was taken by the plaintiff from Chanpir and Ghulam Hussain on payment of Rs. 3 per kanal as rent and this would, in my opinion, be sufficient to bring him within the definition of the term 'tenant.' The contention of the term in the Punjab Tenancy Act does not appear to me to have any force. Only 'the right to receive the rent' had been mortgaged by Chanpir and Ghulam Hussain in favour of the plaintiff. Their other rights as 'landlords' were still with them and these were all transferred to Fazal Ahmad. The mortgage arrangement was only of a temporary character and but for that special contract Fazal Ahmad would be the person entitled to receive the rent from the plaintiff. The definition of the term 'landlord' in the Punjab Tenancy Act is as follows:

'Landlord' means a person under whom a tenant, holds land, and to whom the tenant is, or but for a special contract, would be liable to pay rent for that land.

It has been found by the learned District Judge that there had been a valid transfer of the land in favour of Fazal Ahmad; in the circumstances, it seems to me that he comes within the definition of a 'landlord.' The last point urged was that the land in dispute does not fall within the definition of that term. The term 'land' is defined as follows:

'Land' means land which is not occupied as the site of any building in a town or village and is occupied or had been let for purposes subservient to agriculture, or for pasture, and includes the sites of buildings and other structures on such land.

In the present instance it is true that the plaintiff was given the option to build on the land but it is admitted that as a matter of fact no building has yet been erected thereon. The mere option given to the plaintiff is not, in my opinion, sufficient to take the land in dispute out of the definition of that term in the Punjab Tenancy Act. The learned counsel for the plaintiff did not dispute the fact that certain issues relating to the conditions of the tenancy did arise between the parties and these issues would clearly be triable by a revenue Court under Cl. (1), sub-s. 3, S. 77. The suit was therefore rightly held to be cognizable by a revenue Court in view of the proviso to sub-s. 3, S. 77. The last point for consideration is whether the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge should be registered as that of a revenue Court or whether the suit should be sent for retrial to the Senior Subordinate Judge as contended by the learned counsel for the defendant. According to S. 100, Punjab Tenancy Act if it appears that the suit was determined in good faith and that the parties have not been prejudiced by the mistake as to jurisdiction, the decree can be registered as that of a Court having jurisdiction. All that the learned counsel for the defendant has urged is that the revenue Courts are considered to be in a better position to decide cases relating to land and, as objection to jurisdiction was taken at the outset, the case should be sent back for retrial. It was, however, admitted that the proper issues had been framed and the whole evidence had been recorded. In the circumstances it does not appear to me necessary in the interests of justice to remand the case to the Senior Subordinate Judge. S. 100 gives discretion to this Court to register the decree as that of a revenue Court in such cases. The defendant will, of course, now get a decision by a revenue Court on appeal, and that seems to be sufficient to meet the ends of justice.

As the whole evidence has been recorded it will be putting the parties to unnecessary expense if the case were ordered to be tried de novo.

I accordingly accept the recommendation of the learned District Judge and direct that the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge be registered as that of a revenue Court and that the appeal presented to the learned District Judge be returned for presentation to the Collector. The question of jurisdiction was not free from difficulty and I therefore make no order as to costs in this Court.

Judgment.—The firm Nanhemal Jankidas instituted a suit against the Punjab National Bank Ltd., for recovery of Rs. 1,15,875 being principal and interest claimed by them to be due on a deposit made with the bank. The bank admitted liability for Rs. 1,03,000 and paid that amount in Court. They, however, disputed liability for the rest of the plaintiffs' claim which apparently represented interest on the principal amount deposited with them after a certain date. The trial Court decreed the suit with costs against the Bank. The result was that the decree-holder firm recovered from the Bank the balance of their claim and Rs. 3,411 as costs of the suit as awarded by the trial Court to them. The Bank preferred an appeal to this Court which was accepted by a Division Bench on 15th March 1933. This Court dismissed the suit with costs throughout and provided that the costs would be calculated on the amount in dispute between the parties, namely Rs. 12,875 and not as in the lower Court's decree on Rs. 1,15,875. This means that the decree of the trial Court awarding costs of the suit to the plaintiffs was set aside and the plaintiffs were to pay the costs of the defendants in the trial Court and also in the High Court on Rs. 12,875. The Bank then applied for the recovery of their costs and for the restitution of the amount paid by them to the plaintiffs but it seems that they did not mention Rs. 3,411 costs on the original suit which they had paid in execution of the decree; they merely claimed restitution of Rs. 12,875. The trial Judge directed that the amount claimed by the bank be paid to it and this order was complied with.

It appears, therefore, that the Bank has already recovered the principal amount of the decree, that is Rs. 12,875 paid by them to the plaintiffs. They have also recovered the costs awarded to them but they have not recovered the costs paid by them to the plaintiffs on the amount sued as awarded by trial Court. It is obvious that they are entitled to claim restitution of this amount of costs under the decree of this Court, but Mr. Shamair Chand, counsel for the respondents, the plaintiff firm, in supporting the order of the trial Judge rejecting a further application made by the Bank claiming restitution of the amount paid by them to the plaintiffs as costs, contends that this Court did not intend that there should be a restitution of these costs and also that an application for restitution does not lie in view of the fact that a previous application for restitution was made and granted by the Court below. By raising this last contention the learned counsel seeks to bring into operation the principle of res judicata to applications for restitution and incidentally to applications for execution of decrees. A further minor point is raised that in the application for restitution, by some curious mistake, the Bank claimed restitution of Rs. 2,853-12-0 instead of Rs. 3,411 and they are not entitled on this appeal to claim restitution of the larger amount. I may at once say that there is force in this last contention. The Bank did not claim restitution of the full amount of Rs. 3,411, no doubt by some accidental mistake, still on this appeal I am unable to direct restitution of a larger amount than what they claimed in the Court below. With regard to the first objection that the decree of this Court did not direct restitution of the costs recovered by the plaintiffs, all that is necessary to say is that the judgment of this Court is quite clear on the point and there can be no doubt that the decree of the Court below was set aside and the suit was dismissed with costs throughout. It is obvious that as a result of this judgment the plaintiffs were bound to return to the defendants whatever they received in excess of the amount found to be due to them.

On the question of res judicata the learned counsel has cited some authorities, as for instance, 8 Cal 51 (1); 6 All 269 (2); 14 Lah 409 (3) and other cases which take the same view as cases mentioned above. In all these cases it has been held that where the execution of the decree has been allowed to proceed without any objection by the judgment-debtor which was open to him and which he had opportunity to make, in such proceedings he is not entitled to raise such objection in subsequent execution proceedings as the principle of res judicata debars him from doing so. I am unable to see that the law laid down in these cases has any application to restitution or even to an application for execution of a portion of the decree. If it had been the case that the Court in the first instance held that the appellant bank was not entitled to obtain restitution of the amount now in dispute or the bank had taken it into account when calculating the amount due to it and received the net amount thus due according to such calculation, then there might have been some force in the objection of the respondent's counsel that the Bank should be held to be estopped from claiming the amount now in dispute. But no application, directly or indirectly, was made on the previous occasion to recover the costs which had been illegally realised by the decree-holder. The learned counsel for the respondents has not been able to controvert the proposition that an execution of a decree for money can be had for a portion of the decretal amount in one Court and for the rest in another Court. The same principle would apply to applications for restitution as in this case. In my opinion there is no ground for holding that the present application is barred by res judicata and that, therefore, the bank is not entitled to apply for restitution of the costs paid by it to the respondent firm.

I accept this appeal and set aside the order of the Court below dated 28th January 1935 and direct that the application of the bank for restitution of Rs. 2,853-12-0 on account of costs and interest thereon at six per cent per annum from the date of payment till realisation be entertained by the Court below and the case proceeded with in accordance with law. There will be no order as to the costs of these proceedings either in this Court or in the Court below.

Criminal Appeal No. 1341 of 1934, Decided on 8th January 1935, from order of Sess. Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, D/- 28th August 1934.

Where the Magistrate does not comply with one of the requirements of S. 164, Criminal P. C., namely, that a confession shall not be recorded unless upon questioning the person making it, the Magistrate has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily, this defect cannot be cured under S. 533, Criminal P. C., because the confession cannot be said to have been 'duly made,' viz., in accordance with law. The record of the confession cannot, therefore be admitted in evidence under S. 80, Evidence Act. The consequence of non-compliance with the provisions of S. 164 is that the record of the confession cannot be admitted in evidence under S. 80, Evidence Act, without further proof. The admissibility of evidence is however governed by the Evidence Act; and under S. 21 an oral confession by an accused person is relevant subject to the provisions of Ss. 24 to 29. The confession must, in such a case, be proved by the testimony of the Magistrate who heard it. If he did not record it at all, he would obviously have to rely on his memory alone. If he did record it, but not in accordance with law and consequently the record is rendered inadmissible under S. 80, he can still use it to refresh his memory when in the witness-box. The adverse party can then call upon him to produce the document and cross-examine him thereupon. If the confession was read out to the accused and was admitted by him to be correct and was also signed by him, it can perhaps be regarded as a confession in writing and can be proved by the prosecution under S. 21, Evidence Act. [P 249 C 2; P 250 C 1]

 (b) Criminal Trial—Confession—Initial presumption—Confessions not regularly recorded should not be admitted into evidence unless it is proved that it does not offend provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act.

In the case of a confession recorded according to law, there is an initial presumption that it does not offend against S. 24, Evidence Act, but, if, on a consideration of the direct and circumstantial evidence in the case, it does appear to the Court that the confession was obtained by any inducement, threat or promise such as is referred to in the aforesaid section it will be held to be inadmissible. In the case of a confession not recorded according to law, no such presumption arises and it is apparently the duty of the prosecution to satisfy the Court that the confession does not contravene the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act, before it can be admitted. [P 250 C 1, 2]

 (c) Criminal Trial—Confession—Weight to be attached—Confessions classified into five classes—Amount of weight to be attached to each class is different—Court, with due regard to cumulative effect of evidence, should decide weight to be attached to any confession.

Confession made to a Magistrate can be divided into five classes: (1) Those recorded with all the formalities prescribed by Ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. C. (2) Those imperfectly recorded, but where the defect is cured by S. 533, Criminal P. C. (3) Where the defect is not cured and confession is proved by the testimony of the Magistrate. (4) Where the Magistrate refuses to record the confession of an accused person produced before him for that purpose but hears it. (5) Where the accused appears before a Magistrate of his own accord and makes an oral confession.

Confessions falling under classes 1 and 2 are recorded under great precautions and should, therefore, obviously carry more weight than those falling under the remaining classes. A confession under class 3 would be less weighty because some of the precautions prescribed by law were not observed. A confession under class 4 should have very little weight unless the Magistrate can explain to the entire satisfaction of the Court why he refused to act under Ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. C. The weight to be attached to a confession under class 5 would depend entirely on the circumstances under which it is made. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the amount of weight to be attached to a particular confession. This is a matter for the Court to decide in each case on consideration of cumulative effect of the entire evidence in the case.

Judgment.—On the 30th April 1934, at midday, Bakhshan, accused, appeared at the Jampur Police Station in the Dera Ghazi Khan district with a superficial cut wound $2\frac{1}{4}'' \times \frac{1}{2}'' \times \frac{1}{2}''$ on his throat and reported that towards the small hours of the morning he was going in the company of Mt. Ghulaman whom he had abducted six or seven months before when they were waylaid by her husband Jumma and his friends, Ghulam Hussain, Kalu and Qadra, who carried her away after having wounded him with a knife. He was sent to the hospital and Allah Ditta, Head Constable, accompanied by Mir Hazar Khan, tracker, constable, and Khan Chand Sarbrah, Zaildar, went to the spot indicated in the above report as the scene of the occurrence. No marks of any struggle were found there, but the dead body of Mt. Ghulaman was found under a Jal tree close by. Hazar Khan noticed the track of a man and a woman coming from the Bakainwala well to that place and the track of the man alone leaving the place and proceeding to Shahanwala well, then to Bakainwala well and thence to the Jampur road where it was lost. The footprints on these tracks were clearly identifiable in spite of a slight drizzle which had taken place in the interval and some of these were properly covered. The place where the dead body was found was in the jurisdiction of the Kot Chhutta Police Station and the investigation was therefore taken up by the Sub-Inspector in charge of that police station.

On 1st May 1934, a track identification parade was held and Ghulam Hussain, Kalu and Qadra were made to walk with several other men but the track of none of those men was found to tally with the track of the man who had accompanied the woman to the Jal tree and had left her there. On the following day another parade was held when the accused was made to walk with a few other men. His footprints were picked out by the tracker as corresponding to the man's footprints which had been preserved. The woman's footprints were found to be those of the shoes on the feet of the corpse. The accused was then questioned about the matter and expressed his willingness to make a statement. He was promptly produced before a second class Magistrate who was specially empowered to record confessions and made a confession to the effect that he had abducted Mt. Ghulam six or seven months before, had kept her concealed at various places but found it impossible to do so any longer, that he was taking her on the night in question to restore her to her people, that she strongly objected to this and threatened to have him prosecuted if he did so, that he thereupon killed her with a razor and then tried to commit suicide but succeeded only in inflicting a superficial cut on his throat and that he then went and made a false report as stated above. After making this confession the accused dug out a razor which was buried near the Jal tree. It was on examination by the Chemical Examiner and the Imperial Serologist found to be stained with human blood. The accused was then sent up for trial. He pleaded not guilty and denied having made any confession. He said that he had been beaten by the police and that his thumb-mark was obtained on a statement recorded at the dictation of the Sub-Inspector. The prosecution case rests on: (a) the confession; (b) the track evidence; and (c) the recovery of the razor at the instance of the accused. The track evidence is particularly reliable in this case as it furnished the first clue against the accused and showed the falsity of the first information report. It receives support from independent evidence which goes to show that the accused went first to the Shahanwala well and then to the Bakainwala well after the occurrence.

The evidence on point (c) consists of the statements of Din Mohammad Khan, Zaildar, P. W. 6, and Ghulam Mohammad Khan, Sub-Inspector, P. W. 16, which we have no reasons to disbelieve. A defence witness stated that a razor was picked up from the spot on 30th April 1934, but he is a relation of the accused and his testimony is not entitled to any serious consideration. As for the confession, it has been contended that it is not admissible in evidence because the Magistrate who recorded it did not question the accused in order to ascertain whether it was being made voluntarily. The Magistrate appeared as a witness and stated that before recording the confession he had warned the accused that he need not make a confession and that if he made one it might be used as evidence against him. At the foot of the statement the following certificate was appended :

I had clearly explained to Bakhshan that he need not make the confession, and that, if he did, his confession would be used against him as a piece of evidence. I am sure it has been obtained without resort being had to force or compulsion. The confession was made in my presence and within my hearing. It was read out to him and he admitted it to be correct. And this is the statement, entire and correct, made by Bakhshan.

It is clear that the Magistrate did not comply with one of the requirements of S. 164, Criminal P. C., namely, that a confession shall not be recorded unless upon questioning the person making it the Magistrate has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily. This defect could not be cured under S. 533, Criminal P. C., because the confession cannot be said to have been 'duly made', viz., in accordance with law. The record of the confession cannot, therefore, be admitted in evidence under S. 80, Evidence Act. This being so, the question arises whether the confession can be proved as an admission under S. 21, Evidence Act. There has been some conflict of judicial opinion on this point but the view of this Court with which we entirely agree, has consistently been that Ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. C., merely prescribe the mode of recording a confession and do not in any way affect the provisions of the Evidence Act regarding the admissibility of a confession heard by a Magistrate. S. 164, Criminal P. C., authorises a Magistrate to record a confession but does not make it incumbent upon him to do so, nor does it enact that, if a confession is not recorded in accordance with the provisions of that section, the evidence given by the Magistrate to prove the confession shall be inadmissible. The consequence of non-compliance with those provisions is that the record of the confession cannot be admitted in evidence under S. 80, Evidence Act, without further proof. The admissibility of evidence is governed by the Evidence Act and under S. 21 of that Act an oral confession by an accused person is relevant subject to the provisions of Ss. 24 to

29. The confession must however be proved by the testimony of the Magistrate who heard it. If he did not record it at all he would obviously have to rely on his memory alone. If he did record it, but not in accordance with law and consequently the record is rendered inadmissible under S. 80, he can still use it to refresh his memory when in the witness-box. The adverse party can then call upon him to produce the document and cross-examine him thereupon. If the confession was read out to the accused and was admitted by him to be correct and was also signed by him, it can perhaps be regarded as a confession in writing and can be proved by the prosecution under S. 21, Evidence Act. In the present case the confession was thumb-marked by the accused after it was read out to him and was admitted to be correct. In any case, the Magistrate stated that Ex. P. D. was a correct record of the statement made by the accused and the document was read out in Court. The Magistrate gave evidence three months and 25 days after he recorded the confession and could not be expected to remember what the accused had stated. He could only testify to the effect that the statement made by the accused was contained in the record prepared by him.

We are therefore of opinion that the confession has been properly proved. It is clear that this confession cannot be excluded under Ss. 25 to 29, Evidence Act. S. 24 is the only section which need be considered. That section makes a confession irrelevant if it appears to the Court that it was caused by any inducement, threat or promise, having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority, and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings, against him. In the case of a confession recorded according to law there is an initial presumption that it does not offend against S. 24, but, if, on a consideration of the direct and circumstantial evidence in the case, it does appear to the Court that the confession was obtained by any inducement, threat or promise such as is referred to in the aforesaid section it will be held to be inadmissible. In the case of a confession not recorded according to law no such presumption arises and it is apparently the duty of the prosecution to satisfy the Court that the confession did not contravene the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act, before it can be admitted. The points that go to show that the confession in this case did not contravene those provisions are: (1) The accused was not suspected till the track evidence definitely seemed to connect him with the crime; (2) the confession was made soon after the track evidence was obtained; (3) there was no opportunity for any torture and the accused made no complaint of any kind before the Magistrate; (4) there is no allegation that the confession was the result of any inducement, threat or promise, proceeding from a person in authority; (5) when the accused was faced with the track evidence he must have felt that a denial of guilt would be of no avail.

For these reasons we are satisfied that S. 24, Evidence Act, is no bar to the admissibility of this confession. The next question for consideration is, whether we believe the confession to be true. This question will arise even in the case of a recorded confession admitted under S. 80, Evidence Act. In the present case the circumstances under which the confession was obtained furnish the best guarantee of its truth. The wound found on the throat of the accused was superficial and the medical officer who examined it was inclined to think that it was self-inflicted and not caused by an adversary in the course of a struggle. This wound and the injuries found on the deceased could have been caused by the razor which was produced by the accused himself. These facts coupled with the excellent motive mentioned in the confession and the track evidence not only go to show the truth of the confession but furnish the corroborative evidence which prudence requires in the case of a retracted confession. It has been urged that an oral confession proved by the testimony of the Magistrate who recorded it, even if admissible in evidence, should not have the same value as a confession recorded under all the safeguards which were considered to be necessary by the legislature. As an abstract proposition this is perhaps unexceptionable, but still the exact weight which is to be attached to a particular confession, whether recorded in accordance with law or not, would depend on the facts of each case. Confessions made to a Magistrate can be divided into five classes: (1) Those recorded with all the formalities prescribed by Ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. C.; (2) those imperfectly recorded but where the defect is cured by S. 533, Criminal P. C.; (3) where the defect is not cured and the confession is proved by the testimony of the Magistrate; (4) where the Magistrate refuses to record the confession of an accused person produced before him for that purpose but hears it; (5) where the accused appears before a Magistrate of his own accord and makes an oral confession.

Confessions falling under classes 1 and 2 are recorded under great precautions and should, therefore, obviously carry more weight than those falling under the remaining classes. A confession under class 3 would be less weighty because some of the precautions prescribed by law were not observed. A confession under class 4 should have very little weight unless the Magistrate can explain to the entire satisfaction of the Court why he refused to act under Ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. C. The weight to be attached to a confession under class 5 would depend entirely on the circumstances under which it is made. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the amount of weight to be attached to a particular confession. This is a matter for the Court to decide in each case on consideration of the cumulative effect of the entire evidence in the case. In the present case we agree with the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors that the confession corroborated as it is by the other evidence referred to above fully proves the guilt of the accused. The murder was committed in a brutal manner and there are no extenuating circumstances in the case. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

(Firm) Jowala Das Govind Ram—Appellant.

Thakar Das—Respondent.

First Appeal No 810 of 1932, Decided on 1st July 1935.

(a) Charge—Mortgage suit—Bank claiming prior charge in pursuance of prior deed of good faith by mortgagors—Bank not claiming equitable mortgage—Document itself held could not create charge.

A mortgage suit involved certain properties. A bank claimed that a charge prior to the mortgage was created in their favour by the execution of a 'deed in good faith' executed in favour of the bank by the mortgagors and which comprised the properties mortgaged. It was not the case for the bank that the deed of good faith created an equitable mortgage in their favour:

Held: that for the purposes of the suit it was not possible to distinguish between a charge and an equitable mortgage and since the document was not relied on as creating an equitable mortgage it could not itself create any charge on the properties mentioned therein.

(b) Mortgage—Equitable—Essentials of.

To establish a mortgage by deposit of the title deeds, it is necessary to prove (1) a debt, (2) a deposit of title deeds and (3) an intention that the deeds shall be security for the debt.

(c) Mortgage—Equitable—Creation of—Title-Deeds must be documents creating title and not merely evidencing title.

It is necessary to distinguish between documents creating title and documents evidencing title, and it seems desirable to restrict as far as possible to the former category the deeds, the deposit of which can validly create an equitable mortgage.

(d) Mortgage—Equitable—Deposit of jama-bandi copies—No equitable mortgage is created—Equitable mortgage sought to be created by deposit of receipts and mutation copies—Clear evidence that no better document available is necessary—Receipts must definitely relate to property to be charged.

In no circumstances can the deposit of a mere certified copy of a jamabandi entry constitute an equitable mortgage. In order that receipts and certified copies of mutations should be capable by their deposit of creating a valid equitable mortgage, it would be necessary that there should be clear evidence that no better document of title was available, and in the case of receipts it should also be established beyond doubt that the receipt produced definitely relates to the property to be charged.

Badri Das and J. L. Kapur—for Appellants.

Iqbal Singh, M. A. Majid and Shuja-ud-din—for Respondent 1.

Sale, J.—On 3rd August 1926, Thakar Das and Mathra Das jointly executed a registered mortgage deed in favour of twenty-two firms to secure a debt aggregating to Rs. 80,000. It appears that Thakar Das and Mathra Das had also had dealings with the Imperial Bank of India, Lyallpur Branch, and on 31st August 1926 the Imperial Bank served a notice on all the twenty-two mortgagees, with information to Thakar Das and Mathra Das, that some of the properties covered by the registered mortgage deed in their favour, were already mortgaged to the Bank.

Following the disclosure of these facts, a complaint of cheating was brought against the mortgagors, Thakar Das and Mathra Das by some of the firms concerned in the registered mortgage. As a result of this complaint, there was a compromise which was embodied in a fresh agreement between Thakar Das-Mathra Das and their mortgagees dated 12th September 1927. Subsequently the mortgagors again defaulted, and the twenty-two firms sued to recover Rs. 55,625 principal and interest on the revised agreement. During the pendency of this suit, the Imperial Bank applied to be impleaded as a defendant on the ground that a portion of the mortgaged property in suit was the subject of a prior charge in their favour. The Bank produced a document Ex. D-27 printed at p. 73 of the paper book entitled a "Deed of Good Faith" dated 9th May 1925, by which Mathra Das, acting as a proprietor of the firm Thakar Das-Mathra Das, deposited for safe custody with the Bank certain title deeds and other documents as "a guarantee of good faith." The documents thus deposited included five of the properties subsequently mortgaged to the twenty-two plaintiffs. These are Nos. 7, 8, 9, 12 and 13 in the schedule of the deeds attached to this "Deed of Good Faith." The Bank however did not claim that this transaction amounted to the creation of an equitable mortgage. The case for the Bank is, as was made clear by the evidence of Mr. Seton, printed on pp. 18 and 19 of the paper book, that an equitable mortgage by the deposit of title deeds was created subsequently by Mathra Das on 12th May 1926, as evidenced by the Title Deed Register Ex. D. 3-38 printed on pp. 76 and 77 of the paper book. The relevant entries in this Title Deed Register include documents relating to properties Nos. 7, 8, 12 and 13 of those mentioned in the schedule attached to the Deed of Good Faith, but there is no document relating to item No. 9 "Three shops at Lyallpur."

The lower Court has held that this Deed of Good Faith dated 9th May 1925 created a charge on the properties mentioned therein, and that the transaction evidenced by the Title Deed Register Ex. D-3/38 dated 12th May 1926, created an equitable mortgage in favour of the Bank. Since both these transactions were prior to the registered mortgage deed in suit in favour of the plaintiffs dated 3rd August 1926, the Senior Subordinate Judge held the Bank to be a prior mortgagee, and in granting the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 55,625 with costs and interest against the mortgagors Thakar Das and Mathra Das, directed that the property covered by their mortgage should, in default of payment, be sold subject to the claims of the Imperial Bank in respect of the five properties therein included. This decree has not been contested by the mortgagors Thakar Das and Mathra Das, but the plaintiff-mortgagees, appeal against the finding of the trial Court that the property mortgaged to them is subject to a charge held by the Imperial Bank. It may be mentioned here that during pendency of the suit in the lower Court, the Imperial Bank obtained on 19th January 1930, a decree against Mathra Das and Thakar Das on the basis of their equitable mortgage, but the plaintiffs in the present case were not a party to that suit. The question for determination in this appeal is whether the Imperial Bank of India are prior mortgagees in respect of the five properties mentioned. For facility of reference I append a comparative statement [See page 253] relating to these five properties showing their description in the particulars filed with the plaint, the corresponding entries in the Bank's Deed of Good Faith and Title Deed Register, and the relevant documents stated to have been deposited by Mathra Das as mentioned in the Title Deed Register of the Bank in order to create an equitable mortgage. I shall refer to these properties by the serial number given in column No. 1 of this statement. The two main points, the decision on which will determine this appeal, are (1) whether there is any proof of an intention by Thakar

Das and Mathra Das to create an equitable mortgage in favour of the Bank and (2) whether the documents deposited with the Bank in this connexion were "title deeds" sufficient to create an equitable mortgage.

As already stated, it is not the case for the Bank that the Deed of Good Faith dated 9th May 1925, created an equitable mortgage. It appears that the only importance that Mr. Majid on behalf of the Bank attaches to this document is the fact that it includes properties Nos. 1-9 described as three shops at Lyallpur, which is omitted from the list of documents said to have been deposited by way of equitable mortgage with the Bank on 12th May 1926. For the purposes of the present suit it is not possible to distinguish between a charge and an equitable mortgage, and since the document of 1925 is not relied on as creating an equitable mortgage, I am unable to see how this document can itself create any charge on the properties mentioned therein. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that in so far as the document of 1925 can be said to transfer an interest in immoveable property, it is inadmissible for want of registration. It is possible that for this reason the bank has not chosen to rely on this document as creating an equitable mortgage. But in any event the question whether it is or is not admissible for this purpose does in the circumstances arise. I am of opinion, that whatever may have been the real intention of the parties in executing the Deed of Good Faith in 1925, it cannot now be relied on to create any charge in respect of the properties mentioned therein, and since it is not the case for the bank that it created an equitable mortgage, its only relevancy is to throw light on the question of the intention of the parties with respect to the deposit of title deeds in May 1926.

To establish a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, it is necessary to prove (1) a debt, (2) a deposit of title deeds and (3) an intention that the deeds shall be security for the debt. The existence of a debt as between Mathra Das-Thakar Das and the Imperial Bank is abundantly proved and had not been contested. The deposit of certain documents with the intention to create an equitable mortgage as security for a debt is proved not only by the correspondence that passed between the parties, but also by the evidence of the Bank's officers coupled with the factum of deposit of documents with the Bank in May 1926. It is true that Mathra Das has now prevaricated in his evidence on this point, but this prevarication is explained by the complaint of cheating which had been brought against him by some of the plaintiff mortgagees and subsequently settled by an agreement. The finding of the lower Court that Mathra Das did intend to create an equitable mortgage with the Bank on 12th May 1926 has not been challenged in appeal by Mathra Das himself, and I agree with the trial Court in holding that Mathra Das and Thakar Das did intend to create an equitable mortgage on 12th May 1926, by depositing with the Bank the documents mentioned in the last column of the comparative statement already recited. But since no mention was made in May 1926 of the deposit of any documents in respect of property No. 1 (the three shops at Lyallpur) it follows that the Bank cannot claim any priority as mortgagees in respect of this property.

It remains to consider how far the documents deposited in respect of properties Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 are "title deeds" within the meaning of S. 58, T. P. Act. Of the relevant documents, only one, an original sale-deed relating to property No. 3, is unquestionably a title deed. The other documents consist of certified copies of mutation entries, jamabandi entries and receipts. The nature of the documents which constitute title deeds for the purpose of creating an equitable mortgage has been exhaustively discussed in a Division Bench ruling of this Court cited as Civil Appeal No. 2208 of 1929. The question in that case was whether a copy of a sale-deed and a certified extract of an entry from a jamabandi were documents of title, the deposit of which would create a valid equitable mortgage. The question was answered in the negative by separate but concurring judgments of the learned Judges. We are not here concerned with the question whether a copy of a sale-deed is a document of title; but the decision in that case is material so far as the question of certified extracts from the jamabandi entries are concerned.

Bhide, J., observed in this connexion :

Certified copies of extracts from jamabandis are available to any one on payment of fee. I do not see how the possession of an extract from a jamabandi by a creditor could support an inference that the owner intended to create a lien on the property to which the copy relates. It would be difficult to lay down any precise definition of a title deed or a document of title, but bearing in mind the nature of an equitable mortgage, I am inclined to think that the documents to be deposited must be original documents, by which title to the property in question is conferred on the mortgagor or his predecessors-in-interest. It might be said that it may happen that a person may not be in possession of any such document at all, though he may be in a position to prove a good title by the production of other documents such as certified extracts from a jamabandi or copies of the original deed. But this seems to be hardly a good reason for holding that an equitable mortgage may be created by the deposit of such copies. It seems to me that if the debtor is not in a position to deposit documents of title from which an intention to create a mortgage could be reasonably inferred, the only result will be that he will not be able to effect an 'equitable' mortgage. But this will be no great hardship, especially in this province, where even oral mortgages are permissible. Equitable mortgages in India, unlike those in England, stand on the same footing as legal mortgages, cf. 31 P R 1916 (1), 11 Lah 564 (2), and to hold that such mortgages can be effected even by the deposit of copies, would be to open the door wide to fraud and perjury of the worst type.

The observations of Dalip Singh, J. in his judgment are also apposite:

In India, where there is no distinction between equitable and legal estates and in this province in particular, . . . it would to my mind be grossly inequitable and would open the door to the greatest frauds, if equitable mortgages were allowed to be created by deposit even of portions of title deeds as appears to have been held in England or by documents evidencing title as contended by the learned Counsel for the Bank. The extraordinary nature of this contention would appear when one realises that copies of jamabandis are available to an applicant by payment of the necessary fees to a Patwari. Any number of such copies might be obtained. Even after an alienation had been made of the property, it is a well-known fact that some time elapses before the mutation is sanctioned and any correction made in a jamabandi. It will thus be open to any fraudulent person to obtain an unlimited number of copies of a jamabandi shortly before an alienation of the property and then to proceed to make equitable mortgages of the property by the deposit of these copies with different persons. It is difficult to see why such a procedure should receive the sanction of the Courts of law.

I am in agreement with these observations of the learned Judges. It is apparent that in order to restrict the scope of the doctrine of equitable mortgages as applicable to this province and to prevent frauds, it is necessary to distinguish between documents creating title and documents evidencing title, and it seems desirable to restrict as far as possible to the former category the deeds, the deposit of which can validly create an equitable mortgage. I am of opinion that in no circumstances can the deposit of a mere certified copy of a jamabandi entry constitute an equitable mortgage. For this reason, it is clear that property No. 5, viz., the site for the construction of a bungalow at Lyallpur the alleged mortgage of which is supported by merely a jamabandi entry, must be excluded. Turning now to the question of receipts and certified copies of mutations, it is urged that it would be unreasonable to exclude such documents, if no true document of title is available to the debtor. But to make such documents admissible for the purpose, it would be necessary, in my opinion, that there should be clear evidence that no better document of title is available and in the case of receipts, it should also be established beyond doubt that the receipt produced definitely relates to the property to be charged. No such evidence has been offered in the present case. The receipts cited as documents of title in support of items 2 and 4 are printed at pp. 120 and 121 of the printed record. They do not describe the property to which they are supposed to relate, nor has any evidence been called to connect them with any particular property. Consequently, I am unable to hold that they are documents of title for the purposes of this case.

Properties Nos. 2 and 4 are also supported by mutation orders. Now these properties are situated in the Canal Colony of Lyallpur and are said to have been purchased from Government at a public auction. It is a matter of common knowledge, which has not been contradicted in this case, that in auction sales of colony sites in the Canal Colonies, conveyance deeds are usually granted by Government, or at any rate, are available, if desired. The procedure is described in paras. 342 to 346 of the revised 1934 edition of the Punjab Colony Manual. There is no evidence in this case that sale deeds or sale certificates were not granted. On the contrary in the case of the mutation, Ex. P. 24 at p. 140, it is specifically mentioned in the column under head 'Nature and date of transfer' that the sale was effected under a sale certificate. It has not been explained why this sale certificate was not produced as the true document of title. In these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that the extracts from the mutation register produced in this case are valid documents of title for the purpose of creating an equitable mortgage. Properties numbered 2 and 4 must, therefore, also be excluded. The result is that properties bearing serial Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 5 in the comparative statement attached to this judgment must be excluded from the lien claimed by the Bank. Property No. 3 remains, consisting of one house in Montgomery Bazar. This is the only case in which an unquestionable title deed, viz., an original sale-deed, was deposited with the Bank. It is conceded on behalf of the appellant that if, as I hold, an equitable mortgage in favour of the Bank is established, the Bank is entitled to priority in respect of this property.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal to the extent of declaring that the decree granted in favour of the plaintiffs against defendants 1 and 2 is subject to the charge of the Imperial Bank only in respect of the house in Montgomery Bazar, Lyallpur, comprising 12 marlas 166 square feet, numbered III in the particulars of the mortgage deed described in the plaint.

As the appellant has only been partially successful I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

It follows that the cross-appeal presented on behalf of the Bank in respect of costs only fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Shera—Convict—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 628 of 1935, Decided on 13th September 1935, from decision of Dist. Mag., Multan, D/- 24th April 1935.

(a) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 376, 377—Cases should be tried by Magistrates with S. 30, Criminal P. C., powers.

Cases of rape and unnatural vice should, as far as possible, be tried by Magistrate with S. 30, Criminal P. C., powers, so that if circumstances call for a heavy sentence, then the same may be given up to the outside limit of seven years. [P 256 C 2]

* (b) Penal Code (1860), S. 377—Crime committed with violence—Sentence of whipping in addition to penal servitude is proper.

Where a person commits an unnatural offence after using violence and under most revolting circumstances, a sentence of whipping, in addition to penal servitude, is eminently right and proper. [P 256 C 2]

M. Tufail for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Order—This case has been very properly submitted to this Court by the District Magistrate for enhancement of the sentence. The accused, who is aged 22 years, caught hold of the complainant, who is aged about 12 years, and after using violence committed unnatural offence upon his person under the most revolting circumstances. The accused was tried by a first class Magistrate for the offence under S. 377, I. P. C. The Magistrate, who seems to have very strange ideas about this particular form of crime and also about his own duties as a Magistrate, has imposed the ridiculously light sentence of six months' imprisonment upon the accused.

I have expressed the opinion in my judgments on more than one occasion that cases of rape and unnatural vice should, as far as possible, be tried by Magistrate with S. 30 powers, so that if circumstances call for a heavy sentence, then the same may be given up to the outside limit of seven years. This however, was not done in the present case, and all that I can do is to enhance the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment. I am also of opinion that it is a case in which whipping would be eminently right and proper. I order, therefore, that in addition to the sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment, the accused be given thirty stripes, provided the medical officer certifies that he is physically fit to undergo this particular form of punishment. I understand that the accused has already served out his sentence. He shall be arrested and sent to jail to serve out the rest of the sentence and shall be whipped as already indicated.

First Appeal No. 2197 of 1934, Decided on 22nd November 1935, from preliminary decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Rawalpindi, D/- 30th August 1934.

Company—Reference to arbitration—Reference in writing and according to provisions of Arbitration Act—No appeal lies from award—Reference to arbitration by Court—Appeal does lie from such award.

Section 152, Companies Act, applies to those cases only in which a Joint Stock Company by written agreement refers to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act, any dispute between itself and any other company or person. [P 258 C 1]

In a case where the reference to arbitration is not by written agreement of the parties, but is made by the Court in a pending suit, the arbitrator has to submit his report to the Court which has to pass a decree in the suit in accordance with the terms of the award or pass such other order in accordance with law as it thought fit. A decree on such award is open to appeal in the ordinary course. Such a case does not come under S. 152, Companies Act. [P 258 C 1]

Judgment.—On 11th March 1919, Mt. Damodri, defendant 1, mortgaged a house and a shop to Prithmi Chand, defendant 2, and Hari Chand, father of defendant 3, for Rs. 15,000 agreeing to pay interest at 9 per cent per annum with yearly rests. In 1922 by consent of the mortgagor and the mortgagees the shop was sold and the sale proceeds were paid to the mortgagees in part payment of the amount due to them. On 9th January 1925 the mortgagees transferred their mortgagee rights to the plaintiff, the Punjab and Kashmir Bank Ltd., for Rs. 16,485 which was found to be the amount due on that date. On 22nd November 1932, the plaintiff Bank instituted a suit for recovery of the amount due on foot of the mortgage, impleading the original mortgagor and the mortgagees as defendants. After some proceedings the parties presented an application to the Court praying that the suit be referred to the arbitration of Bhagat Lachhmi Narain pleader. The Court granted the prayer and the case was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator gave his award on 1st August 1934 holding:

(1) That the sum of Rs. 20,680 was due to the plaintiff Bank on foot of the mortgage on the date of the suit, (2) that defendants 2 and 3 would be liable for any deficiency in case the amount decreed is not raised by sale of the mortgaged property or other property of defendant 1, the liability of defendant 3 being limited to the assets of his father in his hands, and (3) that the costs of the suit on the amount decreed will be paid by defendant 1.

Neither party filed any objection to the award, and on 30th August 1934 the learned Subordinate Judge entered judgment for the plaintiff in accordance with the award, and passed a decree in terms of O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C., fixing 5th January 1935, as the date for payment of the amount found due. In accordance with this judgment a decree-sheet was prepared, declaring that the amount due to the plaintiff on account of principal, interest and costs calculated up to 5th January 1935 was Rs. 21,466-8-0 and ordering that if the defendant paid this amount into Court on or before 5th January 1935, the plaintiff shall deliver all documents relating to the property to the defendants and re-transfer the property to them free from the mortgage, but if such payment was not made on or before the aforesaid date, the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, shall be sold. The plaintiff has appealed urging that there has been miscalculation of the amount due as stated in the decree-sheet, the correct amount payable on 5th January 1935 being Rs. 3,246-1-6 in excess of that given therein, and praying that future interest at the contractual rate should also have been allowed.

A preliminary objection is taken by counsel for the respondent that no appeal lies. It is pointed out that one of the parties to the suit is a Joint Stock Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, and under S. 152 (3) of that Act all arbitrations, to which one of the parties is such a company, must be taken to have been held under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, and as decrees passed in accordance with awards given under that Act are not appealable it must be held that no appeal is competent in the present case. This contention is obviously without force. S. 152 applies to those cases only in which a Joint Stock Company by written agreement refers to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act any dispute between itself and any other company or person. In the present case the reference to arbitration was not by written agreement of the parties, but was made by the Court in a pending suit. The arbitrator had to submit his report to the Court which had to pass a decree in the suit in accordance with terms of the award or pass such other order in accordance with law as it thought fit. Such a decree is clearly open to appeal in the ordinary course. In these cases, the reference, or the award passed thereon, is not made under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act and S. 152, Companies Act, has no applicability to it. I overrule the objection.

On the merits the learned counsel for the respondent admitted that there has been a miscalculation. There is no reason why interest at 9 per cent with yearly rests should not have been calculated till 5th January 1935, the date fixed for payment by the Court. This amount comes to more than Rs. 27,000. But as the plaintiff in the appeal asked for enhancement of the decretal amount by Rupees 3,246-1-6 only, apparently calculating simple and not compound interest, a decree for more than that amount cannot be passed. There is no reason why future interest should not be allowed at such rate as the Court thinks reasonable. We think simple interest at 6 per cent per annum to be ample and allow future interest at that rate. We accordingly accept this appeal and modify the decree of the lower Court so as to declare that the sum due on 5th January 1935 was Rupees 24,712-9-6 and not Rs. 21,466-8-0 as stated in the decree of the lower Court. We also order that a clause be added to the decree that the plaintiff shall get future interest at 6 per cent per annum on the above amount from 5th January 1935 till payment. Costs of this appeal shall be paid by defendant 2 to the appellant.

First Appeal No. 1737 of 1930, Decided on 31st October 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 27th May 1930.

Sodhi Khatri of Lyallpur District are not governed in matters of alienation by the principles of Punjab Customary Law, but are governed by their personal law, i. e., Hindu law: 84 P R 1898; 50 P R 1895; 110 P R 1906 (F B); 1922 Lah 122; 43 P R 1911 and 1916 Lah 204, Ref. [P 261 C 1]

J. N. Aggarwal and S. L. Puri—for Appellants.

Jhanda Singh and A. N. Chona—for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—Plaintiffs in this case sued for a declaratory decree to the effect that three mortgage-deeds executed by defendant 1, Harbans Singh, in favour of defendants 2 to 4 and the father of defendants 5 to 9 were void and unenforceable against the plaintiffs for various reasons, all of which do not now concern us. The pedigree table of the plaintiffs is printed at p. 2 of the paper book and is given below:

It was not contested before us that Pritam Singh, minor, plaintiff 4, is the only one of the plaintiffs who might possibly be entitled to maintain this suit. The alienations are by Harbans Singh and are as follows: (1) A mortgage-deed dated 9th July 1924 for Rs. 7,500, printed at p. 127 of the paper book, by Harbans Singh in favour of defendants 2 to 4 and Lachhman Singh, father of defendants 5 to 9. (2) A mortgage-deed between the same parties for Rs. 16,800 dated 18th June 1926, Ex. D-11, printed at p. 131. (3) A mortgage-deed dated 9th June 1928 for Rs. 23,100, Ex. D-12, printed at p. 156, by Harbans Singh in favour of defendants 3 and 4.

It is admitted that mortgages 1 and 2 have merged in mortgage 3 and the only real contesting defendants are defendants 3 and 4 and the father of defendants 5 to 9. The issues are given at p. 13. The only issues which now concern us are : (1) Whether the plaintiff 4 is entitled by custom to contest the alienation made by his uncle Harbans Singh; and (2) if so, whether the alienations are for consideration and necessity.

The other issues were decided in favour of the defendants and they have not been agitated before us in appeal. The trial Court held that it was proved that the parties who are Sodhi Khattris, actually residing in a village in Lyallpur District, but who allege that they came originally from village Malla in Ludhiana District, are governed by custom and not by Hindu law and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to question the alienation. On the question of consideration and necessity he held that except for a small sum, neither consideration nor necessity was proved for the transactions.

The first question agitated before us in appeal by the defendant-mortgagees is the question whether the plaintiff has succeeded in proving that the tribe is governed by custom at all. It was conceded before us by the learned counsel for the respondents that the initial onus lies on the plaintiff as the parties are Khattris, who are high caste Hindus, and therefore presumably would follow their personal law, unless proved to the contrary. The riwaj-i-am does not help us in the case because Sodhis form so insignificant a portion of the population of Ludhiana District that, it appears, they were not questioned in that district at all. The plaintiff however urges and has sought to prove by oral evidence that he is connected with Sodhi Khattris who reside in Ferozepore District, and that his ancestors originally came from a village called Guru-Ja-Kotha in that district and settled, or acquired land, in Malla in Ludhiana. His claim therefore is that the Sodhis of Ferozepore District are governed by custom and that his family which came from Ferozepore District must be presumed to have brought their custom along with them. The plaintiff has also sought to prove from the pedigree table his descent from Guru Ram Das, one of the ten Sikh Gurus, and incidentally to prove his connexion with the family known as the Guru Har Sahai family, among whom there was a case reported as 50 P R 1895 (1). I may say at once that the attempt of the plaintiff to prove any connexion with this family is not established in my opinion. The only witness on the point is one Nanak who claims to be the mirasi of the family. He no doubt has produced a pedigree table which, he alleges, was prepared by himself with the assistance of his father and certain bahis which he has not produced in Court. Now, while it is well known that the mirasis do recite these pedigree tables, and if the family were connected with Guru Ram Das, such a connexion would be valued and known; it is also known that the mirasi's evidence (oral) can be very easily secured, and that unsupported by any documents it must be scrutinised with the greatest care. In this particular case the witness admitted that there were bahis or books from which he had prepared the alleged pedigree table, but he did not produce the said bahis. In other words, the best available evidence was not produced in the case and the solitary statement of the witness unsupported by any other material cannot, in my opinion, be held to establish the pedigree table claimed by the plaintiff.

On the other hand however I consider that having regard to all the circumstances, though the oral evidence by itself might not be very convincing, the plaintiff may be said to have succeeded in establishing that his family came originally from Ferozepore District. Malla is a village no doubt situate in Ludhiana District, but it is within three or four miles of the Ferozepore border. The boundaries of a district are more or less arbitrary things created for purposes of administrative convenience. There is no rebuttal of the evidence of the plaintiff that his family came from Guru-ka-Kotha in Ferozepore District to the village Malla. On the other hand I do not consider that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving which of his family were the first to acquire land in Malla, other than his grandfather Indar Singh. Indar Singh was in military service and it appears that he acquired some land in village Malla, Athur and Risalpur in Ludhiana District as well as acquired some land by Government grant in the Lyallpur District. It is not clear how much land in Malla belonged to the family before Indar Singh made his acquisition there. One witness states vaguely that the father of Indar Singh had also acquired some land in village Malla, but the nature and extent of this acquisition is left totally vague.

The question therefore is whether the plaintiff on whom the onus lay has succeeded in proving that Sodhis of Ferozepore District generally follow custom, in the sense that alienations of ancestral property by them can be controlled by their reversioners. On this point there is no riwaj-i-am again qua the Ferozepore District. It is correct that Sodhi Khatri were one of the tribes that were questioned during the preparation of the riwaj-i-am of that district, but the question of the right of reversioners to control alienations of ancestral property does not appear to have been put to any tribe at all and therefore the riwaj-i-am being silent on the point cannot be said to be of any help. The learned counsel for the respondents contended that as it was stated in the beginning that the Sodhi Khatri of the district were questioned and as it was also mentioned in the preface that the Sodhi Khatri were governed by custom, it must be presumed that they were governed by all the incidents of what is known as "Punjab Agricultural Custom." The fact of the Sodhis being governed by custom is based however apparently on two rulings alone. These rulings will be duly considered later. The fact that Sodhis were one of the tribes questioned does not appear to me to meet the situation when as a matter of fact no inquiry was made on this particular point from the tribe concerned. The learned counsel for the respondents was therefore constrained to rely on the oral evidence and on certain rulings.

The oral evidence consists of five witnesses, Sodhis, who appeared and stated that they were governed in matters of alienation of ancestral property by custom and that such alienations could not be effected without valid necessity. They do not appear to be very clear as to what valid necessity was or what degree of reversioners could control the alienations.

The age of the first witness Lachhman Singh (P. W. 1) was 40. The age of the second witness Gurbachan Singh was 26; the age of the third witness another Lachhman Singh, was 40; the age of the fourth Harbans Singh was 52, and the age of Gurbaksh Singh was 25 years. The witnesses do not appear therefore to be necessarily men likely to know of the existence of any tribal custom, nor, with the exception of Gurbachan Singh, P. W. 2, and Gurbaksh Singh, P. W. 5, are the men of particular status. One and all however assert that the custom of the Sodhis is the same throughout the province and they make no distinction whatsoever as to the custom of any particular family. Not one of them is able to give any instance where the custom alleged was successfully asserted. The oral evidence by itself is not, in my opinion, sufficient in the absence of any instances to establish the proposition alleged.

There now remains only to consider the rulings relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents. These begin with 50 P R 1895 (1). In that case it was held that Sodhi Khatri belonging to a particular family, which had had a somewhat peculiar career and which had acquired whole villages and adopted according to the ruling the rule of primogeniture, had succeeded in proving that alienations among them could not be effected without valid necessity. Several members of the family and several old and disinterested persons of respectability appear to have supported the custom alleged in that family. Upon that the learned Judges who decided that case held that it was established that alienations could not be effected without valid necessity among that group of Sodhi Khatri. As already stated the connexion of the present plaintiff with that family is by no means established. Even if the pedigree table alleged by Nanak Mirasi were to be accepted, the plaintiff does not belong to that family at all but is only remotely connected with it as a collateral descended from one Pirthi, the common ancestor.

The next ruling relied upon was 84 P R 1898 (2). Here the matter of custom or Hindu law was not in issue so far as the Chief Court was concerned, but the learned counsel relies on the fact that Hindu law was not pleaded originally. This no doubt is so, but in the absence of anything more, it cannot be held to prove that the custom was so well known that it was not contested for that reason. One of the Judges who was a party to 84 P R 1898 (2) was also a party to the decision in 50 P R 1895 (1), and no doubt he interpreted the decision in 50 P R 1895 (1) to apply to all Sodhi Khatri of Ferozepore. But this extension does not seem to be warranted by the judgment itself. Moreover that ruling was based on the fact that according to the then prevailing view the primary rule of decision was custom under the Punjab Laws Act. This view has since been overruled in 110 P R 1906 (3) and the overruled decision has been affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 Cal 40 (4). These rulings do not therefore, in my opinion, prove the plaintiff's contention.

The last ruling relied upon was 4 L L J 64 (5). Here it was held in a case which arose in the same family as that of 50 P R 1895 (1), that Hindu law did not apply to the family, following the ruling reported as 50 P R 1895 (1). This again, for reasons already stated, does not to my mind help the plaintiff at all. Moreover there are rulings, 43 P R 1911 (6) and 35 I C 471 (7), where Sodhis were not proved to follow custom in Ludhiana and Ferozepore Districts respectively. The result is that I would hold, in disagreement with the trial Court, that the plaintiff on whom the onus lay has failed to establish that the Sodhi Khatri of this family or tribe are not governed in matters of alienation by the principles of Punjab Customary Law. It is common ground that if Hindu law applies the plaintiff has no case as Harbans Singh, alienor, was separate and had no male issue. I would therefore accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. It is not necessary in this view to decide the question of consideration and necessity, but in view of all the circumstances I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Parkash Chand, Pran Nath Mehta and J. L. Kapur—for Appellants.

Nihal Singh—for Respondents.

Skemp, J.—This appeal has arisen from the following facts: Bhag Singh, a Dhillon Jat of Mauza Kaka Karyala, Tahsil Tarn Taran, gifted 7/8ths of his land to Teja Singh, the gift being effected by means of a mutation on 7th August 1926. The gift was made to Teja Singh as the adopted son of Bhag Singh. Bhag Singh died on 29th March 1929, and on 22nd June 1929 the mutation of the remainder of Bhag Singh's property was effected in favour of Teja Singh. On 15th April 1930 the plaintiffs, the real brother and nephews of Bhag Singh, brought a suit alleging that Teja Singh was not the adopted son of Bhag Singh, but was the son of one Mt. Tabo, who was the mistress and not the wife of Bhag Singh. They denied the factum of adoption, and they denied its validity if the factum was proved. There was a further dispute on the point whether the land was ancestral, but it is now conceded that Bhag Singh's land was ancestral.

The Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar framed issues dealing with the following main points: (1). Whether the suit was time-barred. (2). Whether Teja Singh was adopted by Bhag Singh, and (3). if so, whether the adoption was valid. He found that the suit was within time as far as the gift was concerned but was barred in reference to the mutation. He further found that Mt. Tabo was the wife of Bhag Singh, that Bhag Singh had adopted Teja Singh and that the adoption was valid by custom among the Dhillon Jats of the Tarn Taran Tahsil. He dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs have appealed.

Three points have actually been argued before us: (1). Was Mt. Tabo the wife of Bhag Singh? (2). Was Teja Singh actually adopted by Bhag Singh? and (3). Was the adoption valid by custom? On the first point the defendants produced a large number of witnesses who say that Mt. Tabo was left a widow, her husband Gajja Singh dying long ago. Buta (P. W. 2), one of the plaintiffs' witnesses, states that he died 50 years ago. The plaintiffs' witnesses go on to say that after his death Mt. Tabo came to live in the house of Bhag Singh and bore him several children, four daughters and a son, who died in infancy. One of the daughters died, and the other three are Mt. Aso, Mt. Santo and Mt. Harnamo. Mt. Harnamo, the youngest, is the mother of Teja Singh. Some of the plaintiffs' witnesses have stated that Mt. Tabo never lived in Bhag Singh's house but he used to visit her. But the fact of their having several children cannot be ignored and it is very improbable that if they were not married she would have lived with Bhag Singh who is a lambardar and an owner of a large area of land. The defendants relied in this connexion on some documentary evidence. They relied on certain extracts from Pandas' books from Hardwar, but after hearing arguments we are of opinion that these particular entries are inadmissible in evidence. Two witnesses were called, Ram Prasad, a semi-blind old man, aged 70, from whose custody the books were produced, and his clerk Balmokand. Neither of them wrote the entries in question and neither of them could say by whom they were written. Ram Parshad himself said he never saw Bhag Singh.

It therefore appears that these particular entries are inadmissible. But in the death certificate of Mt. Tabo, dated 21st May 1914, she is described as the wife of Bhag Singh. Taking all the facts together and the presumption of marriage which arises from long cohabitation I would hold it proved that Mt. Tabo was the wife of Bhag Singh. (His Lordship then examined the evidence on the factum of adoption and held that it was proved. The judgment proceeded.) On the third point, the validity of adoption, the riwaj-i-am of the Amritsar District is in favour of the respondents. This is so, both in the first riwaj-i-am of the year 1865 and the riwaj-i-am prepared at the last settlement of 1914. For the first riwaj-i-am, see Answer 14 of that document printed at pp. 86 and 87 of the paper book. This recites that a male owner can adopt the son of any other Jat (except from the Bal sub-caste) without regard to collateralship, nearness or remoteness of relationship, and without regard to the boy being his daughter's son or otherwise. This document refers to the Dhillon got of the Jat caste in the Amritsar District. In Craik's Customary Law, 1914, the general custom is stated differently. Answer 86 says: A daughter's or sister's son is not eligible for adoption, except among Dhillon Jats of Tarn Taran and Mughals of all the three tahsils. The parties here are Dhillon Jats of Tarn Taran Tahsil and the riwaj-i-am is in favour of the defendants. Hence according to the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council, 45 P R 1917 (1) and 10

1. Beg v. Allah Ditta 1916 P C 129=38 I C 354

Lah 86 (2), the onus is on the plaintiffs to show that the adoption was invalid.

To discharge this onus they have produced a good deal of oral evidence. Thirteen Dhillon Jats have come forward to say that among their got a daughter's son cannot be adopted and four of them are lambardars; on the other hand it is quite easy to produce interested testimony of this kind and not one of them has quoted any instances. The defendants have also produced a considerable number of oral witnesses and from their evidence the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has found that four instances are proved—see p. 43 of the paper book. The plaintiffs also relied on certain judgments and have placed three copies on the record, but all three are instances not of adoption but of gift. Two of them (Civil Appeal 159 of 1899 and Civil Appeal 193 of 1901 before the Divisional Judge of Amritsar) were considered in a Division Bench judgment of the Chief Court, 85 P R 1907 (3). This found that among Dhillon Jats of the Tarn Taran Tahsil the validity of an adoption of a daughter's son had been established. This judgment referred to two other cases which were subsequently printed, one as 86 P R 1907 (4) and the other as 2 P W R 1907 (5). In all these three Chief Court cases it was held that among Dhillon Jats of the Tarn Taran Tahsil a daughter's son could be adopted. There are also two judgments on this record one of a Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, and one of the District Judge, Amritsar, in both of which the same conclusion has been reached.

We have also been referred to 128 I C 310 (6) in which a Division Bench of the High Court held that among Dhillon Jats of the Amritsar Tahsil the adoption of a daughter's son was not permitted by custom. In this case no instances based on documents appear to have been cited; the judgment proceeds on the onus as laid down in the riwaj-i-am and definitely states that precedents of the neighbouring tahsil of Tarn Taran and the neighbouring district of Hoshiarpur are not relevant. This case therefore is to be distinguished. For the above reasons I would reject the appeal with costs.

Custom (Punjab) — Alienation—Chanauli, Dist. Ambala—Non-proprietor can dispose house site.

Tek Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The dispute in this case is about the site of a house in village Chanauli in the Tahsil of Rupar, District Ambala. The site is situated in the abadi of the village and a house stood on it previously. It was owned by one Banna, a Brahmin of the village, who admittedly was a non-proprietor, the appellants being the proprietors of the village. The respondent claims title to the site by virtue of two deeds of sale from Mt. Malan and Mt. Dwarki. Both these ladies are widows of collaterals of Banna. It appears that at the time of the two sales some male collaterals of Banna also were alive who would have been entitled to inherit half the land sold with Mt. Malan and Mt. Dwarki respectively. Arjanand would have inherited the land jointly with Mt. Malan. He, however, has died sonless. It is at the same time significant that none of these men have at any time objected to the sale of the site by Mt. Malan and Mt. Dwarki. The learned District Judge on the above facts has found that whereas Mt. Malan and Mt. Dwarki were admittedly some of the collaterals of Banna they passed a good title to their respective vendees in the site, as presumably, in his opinion, the only persons who could object to sales by them were the remaining collaterals. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the vendee of the site against the proprietors, the appellants. The suit was for possession. It was defended on various grounds. The title of the plaintiff was denied; it was asserted that by custom the non-proprietors in this village were not entitled to sell the sites of their houses and that the defendants had been in adverse possession of the site for more than 12 years. All these questions have been decided against the defendants by the District Judge and on this appeal it is contended that they have all been wrongly decided. On the question of custom the appellants have secured a certificate from the learned District Judge under S 41, Punjab Courts Act.

I have heard counsel at length and am of opinion that there is no ground for interfering with the decree of the learned District Judge. He has held that the title of the plaintiff in the land in dispute has been proved by virtue of the sales by Mt. Malan and Mt. Dwarki. The defendants as proprietors could only succeed by proving that by custom the sales were invalid and, therefore, the land reverted to them. This they have failed to prove according to the conclusion of the District Judge, which I shall examine presently. The District Judge also has held that the defendants have failed to prove their adverse possession of the land. This is a finding of fact which cannot be attacked in second appeal. This disposes of the question of limitation as well. The real question that requires determination is whether the conclusion of the District Judge that no custom exists in this village whereby the non-proprietors are precluded from disposing of the sites of their houses is erroneous. The present wajib-ul-arz of the village admittedly contains no entry in favour of the defendant-appellants. The previous wajib-ul-arz did. It may be mentioned that the absence of the entry in the present wajib-ul-arz is probably due to the fact that in the current settlement no entries are made relating to the site of the village. The District Judge has stated that there have been twenty alienations of sites by non-proprietors in this village, including three Court sales, and there has been absolutely no contest by the village proprietors. The appellants' counsel has criticised all these instances in this Court but has admitted that there are certainly eleven instances of undisputed alienations. With regard to the remainder alienations his criticism was that some of them were in favour of near relations by non-proprietors.

With regard to the others he contended that the consideration was too small to draw the attention of the proprietors. If the respondent's case had stood on the alienations of the latter description alone there would have been good ground for the appellants to contend that the custom propounded by the respondent has not been established. But as the learned District Judge says there are more than twenty alienations and not a single instance to the contrary has been quoted by the appellants. I am unable, under the circumstances, to hold that the District Judge has reached an erroneous conclusion. Ghanauli is described as a fairly big village with a good number of shops. It is inhabited by different classes of persons so that the original tribal bond has been broken by the alienations that have taken place. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

*Amolak Ram Kapur—*for Appellants.

V. N. Sethi for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Rangi Lal, J.—Four persons, namely Mohammad, Karam Illahi, Ghulam Mohammad and Nur Khan were charged with the murder of one Sher Zaman. The first two have been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., and the remaining two have been acquitted. Mohammad has been sentenced to death and Karam Ilahi to transportation for life. They have appealed through Lala Amolak Ram Kapur who has addressed us at great length on their behalf. The case of Mohammad is also before us for confirmation of the capital sentence. The case for the prosecution is briefly as follows. Mohammad accused had a liaison with Mt. Mulk Bano, wife of Sher Zaman deceased. Nur Khan is a brother of Mohammad; Ghulam Mohammad is a distant relation and Karam Illahi is a friend. The deceased and his father had made complaints to Mohammad's father about Mohammad's misconduct, with the result that Mohammad was driven out of the village and went to live in village Bhagvi, ten miles away. A month later he sent a love message through Karam Ilahi who made use of one Mt. Hassan Jan for conveying it to Mt. Mulk Bano. This became known and Mt. Hassan Jan and Karam Ilahi both got into trouble. Some time later on the night between 2nd and 3rd October 1934, Sher Zaman was cruelly murdered when he was going from his house in the village to his bakh. He received three incised wounds, two punctured wounds and a contused wound on the head, an incised wound $6\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1\frac{1}{2}''$ on the neck and a stab wound in the abdomen. He was missed on the following day, but no search was made for him. On 4th October 1934 his dead body was found in the dry bed of a stream and a report was made to the police at 11-30 a. m. It was stated therein that the four accused were suspected of the crime. A Head Constable promptly came to the spot and arrested Karam Ilahi, Ghulam Mohammad and Nur Khan. Karam Ilahi produced a shirt and a pair of trousers from his house and they were on examination found to be stained with human blood. Ghulam Mohammad produced a knife and two pieces of bamboo stick from a pond. They were also found to be stained with human blood. Mohammad was not found in the village, but was arrested next morning at Bhagvi. He was then wearing a shirt which was found to have human blood on it.

The prosecution evidence against the appellants can be classified and discussed as under:

(1) The testimony of certain wajtakkar witnesses. This has been disbelieved by the learned Sessions Judge and has not been relied on before us by the learned counsel for the Crown. It is therefore unnecessary to refer to it.

(2) A tracker constable is said to have identified the footprints found near the scene of the occurrence with the footprints of the four accused. The prints were of shoes and the tracker was a constable. The learned Sessions Judge was, in my opinion, justified in holding that the track evidence was of very small value.

(3) Extra judicial confessions said to have been made by Mohammad to Subedar Ahmad Khan, P. W. 20, and to Aulia Khan, P. W. 16. Ahmad Khan stated that on the evening of 4th October 1934, he heard that Sher Zaman had been murdered, that Mohammad was one of the four culprits named, that on the following morning he sent for Mohammad and questioned him about the matter, that the latter confessed after a little hesitation that he, Karam Ilahi, Ghulam Mohammad and Nur Khan had murdered Sher Zaman, that on hearing this confession the witness made over Mohammad to Aulia Khan and Fazl Chaukidar and himself went to village Naka, one mile away and brought the Assistant Sub-Inspector and made over the accused to him. Aulia Khan stated that Mohammad confessed in the same terms to him and Fazal, after he had been placed in their custody by Subedar Ahmad Khan. He however contradicted Subedar Ahmad Khan on an important point. According to him, the accused remained in his custody from the morning of 5th October 1934 to the morning of 6th October 1934 when the Assistant Sub-Inspector came and took charge of the accused. It has however been proved by unimpeachable evidence that Mohammad was arrested by the Assistant Sub-Inspector on the morning of 5th October 1934. The dead body of Sher Zaman was not found till 4th October 1934 and it cannot therefore be said that Aulia Khan was under any mistake when he made the above statement. He has, in my opinion, clearly told a lie and his statement in regard to the confession said to have been made to him cannot, therefore, be relied on with confidence. Fazal was not produced by the prosecution. Ahmad Khan admitted that before Mohammad confessed to him he was told that if he told the truth, it would be to his advantage.

This was clearly an inducement and the point that arises for consideration is whether it proceeded from a person in authority. Ahmad Khan is a retired Subedar and is the agent of Sardar Mohammad Akbar Khan, who is apparently a big landlord in the village. Mohammad accused is a tenant of Sardar Mohammad Akbar Khan. It is, therefore, beyond dispute that Ahmad Khan held a position of considerable authority in the village which is in no way inferior to that of a Zaildar. There are several cases in which it has been held that a Zaildar is a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24, Evidence Act: vide inter alia 14 P R 1911 Cr (1) and 34 I C 642 (2). In 12 Pat 241 (3) and 1929 Oudh 272 (4), the manager of a big estate was held to be a person in authority. The learned counsel for the Crown doubts the correctness of these rulings and contends that a Zaildar or a person holding a similar position can be said to be a person in authority, only if the police is close by and that person can be said to be an agent of the police. I am not prepared to give such a restricted meaning to the expression 'person in authority' as used in S. 24, Evidence Act, and to dissent from the rulings referred to above. Anyhow, I am not satisfied in this case that the Sub-Inspector was far away when the confession is said to have been made. It is alleged that he was at village Naka which is about a mile from Bhagvi when Ahmad Khan came and informed him about the confession. It has not been explained why he stayed at Naka. The investigating officer at Dhok Silo, where the crime was committed, must have issued orders on 4th October 1934 for the arrest of Mohammad at Bhagvi. Taking all these facts into consideration, I am of opinion that the confession is inadmissible under S. 24, Evidence Act.

(4) It is alleged that before the arrival of the police in village Dhok Silo the remaining three accused had confessed to Mohammad Khan Zaildar. His evidence on this point is as follows:

In consequence of some information obtained from him (Ilam Din), I went to Dhok Silo. I called Ghulam Mohammad, Nur Khan and Karam Ilahi accused. On my inquiry, all the three accused confessed separately before me that they had committed the murder along with Mohammad accused and that they also admitted that they had thrown the dead body into the kas Chiranwala. . . . I did not tell the accused that the police would torment them and so they should tell the truth. I did not threaten the accused when questioning them. I told the accused, however, that one of them might possibly gain advantage if they all confessed. We have to say so in order to get something out of them. No one else was present when the confessions were made to me.

If it is believed that the witness has given a true account of what happened, it is somewhat doubtful whether he can be said to have given each of the accused such an inducement as would give him grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making the confession he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. I am, however, of opinion that the statement is much too vague and it would be unsafe to rely on it in proof of an extra-judicial confession. It is by no means certain that the witness has stated exactly what he said to the accused and what each accused said to him. It is not known in what order each accused spoke and whether each of them made an independent statement or not. It does not appear how the murder was committed and what part each accused took in the commission of the crime.

(5) The recovery of a blood-stained shirt from the person of Mohammad is certainly an incriminating circumstance but is of little value by itself.

(6) The recovery of blood-stained garments from the possession of Karam Ilahi also tends to incriminate him, but cannot by itself be the basis of a conviction.

(7) It has been established by satisfactory evidence that Mohammad had a liaison with Mt. Mulk Bano and thus had a motive for killing Sher Zaman. The other accused had no such motive.

The above discussion makes it clear that if the confessions are excluded, the remaining evidence is by no means sufficient to support the convictions. It is not clear how the learned Sessions Judge distinguished the case of Gulam Mohammad from that of Karam Ilahi if he believed the confessions to be true. The accused merely denied the charge and produced no defence. For the reasons given above, I am of opinion that the case against the appellants has not been proved beyond doubt. I would therefore give them the benefit of the doubt and acquit them.

Second Appeal No. 1791 of 1926, Decided on 14th October 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 14th January 1926.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Village Basi Kalan, Hoshiarpur District—Non-proprietors can sell or mortgage their houses.

Ghair maliks of Basi Kalan of District Hoshiarpur have power to mortgage and sell their houses. [P 267 C 2]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Town—Distinguishing features of town from village, explained.

Where a certain place is occupied by a heterogeneous population with a preponderance of non-agriculturists and the culturable area is very small and there are two regular bazars with many shops and there is a hospital, schools for boys and girls, a post office, such place is a town and not a village: 1921 Lah 121 and 1920 Lah 888, Ref. [P 268 C 1]

Bhide, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession of a house situate at Basi Kalan in the Hoshiarpur district. Plaintiff alleged that the house had been sold to him by one Bhulla by a deed dated 2nd November 1921, but that he had been dispossessed by the defendants. The defendants pleaded that Bhulla was a non-proprietor and had no right to sell the site of the house and that the plaintiff had in fact never got possession of the house. The issues framed were as follows:

1. Was Bhulla (deceased) an owner of the property in dispute? O. P. on the plaintiff.

2. If Bhulla (deceased) was a ghair malik, have the ghair maliks of Basi Kalan power to mortgage and sell their houses? O. P. on plaintiff.

3. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled? O. P. on plaintiff.

The case was fought out as a test case and a mass of oral and documentary evidence was produced in Court as well as before a commissioner, who was ordered to make a local inquiry. The trial Court eventually decided the issues in favour of the plaintiff and the decision was confirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge. From this decision the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants on a certificate granted by the learned District Judge on the question of custom involved in issue 2. The learned counsel for the appellants raised certain preliminary objections, viz., that the learned District Judge had relied on certain documents which were not on the record, that the inquiry before the local commissioner was irregular and that a material issue with respect to the defendants' alternative plea as regards the abandonment of the house by Bhulla had not been framed. The learned counsel was however unable to say what documents relied on by the District Judge were not on the record. As regards the local inquiry all that the learned counsel had to urge was that the local commissioner had not sent up a proper report and that certain documents produced before the local commissioner could not be properly treated as evidence in the case. But here too he was unable to say which evidence produced before the local commissioner had been relied upon by the Court and materially affects the decision. As regards "abandonment," the plea was apparently never seriously pressed and the point does not appear to have been argued before the learned District Judge. If the appellants had attached any importance to this plea, they would certainly not have failed to get an issue framed on this point, when they were treating this case as a "test case," and making every effort to defeat the plaintiff's claim. I see therefore no force in any of the preliminary objections. On the merits, the learned District Judge has found that (i) the defendants were estopped from challenging the right of Bhulla to alienate the house; (ii) that Basi Kalan was a town and there was no restriction on the power of non-proprietors to alienate their houses and (iii) last by that even if Basi Kalan were to be considered to be a village, the defendants had failed to prove any custom, restraining non-proprietors from selling the sites of houses occupied by them.

The learned District Judge has dealt with all these points in the course of an elaborate judgment but it seems to me that point 2 is perfectly clear and this appeal must fail on that point alone. The learned District Judge's finding that Basi Kalan is a town is based on a number of facts found by him, which cannot be challenged in this second appeal, e.g., that Basi Kalan is occupied by a heterogeneous population with a preponderance of non-agriculturists, that the culturable area is only about 639 kanals, that there are two regular bazars with about 220 shops, that there is a hospital, schools for boys and girls, a post-office and so forth. It is not easy to give any precise definition of a town, but as pointed out in 62 I C 808 (1), and 55 I C 520 (2), the presence of a substantial market and the avocations of the bulk of the population are usually attached considerable importance in determining whether a place is a town or a village. In view of the facts found by the learned District Judge I do not think his conclusion that Bassi Kalan is a 'town' can be said to be vitiated by any error of law, and the finding must, therefore, be accepted as final for the purposes of this appeal. If Bassai Kalan is a town there can be no presumption as to the existence of any such custom as is alleged by the appellants. Not only this, but the wajib-ul-arz of the village also seems to be against them. Para. 19 of the wajib-ul-arz of 1908 (p. 449 of the typed record) reads as follows:

There is no miscellaneous income in this village. Though this village is owned by us on behalf of Khan and others, proprietors, shown at No. 5 of the Tarij papers yet every proprietor and non-proprietor living in this village is the owner of his house. There is no income on account of rent of houses or miscellaneous income from anybody.

1. Mansa Ram v. Joti, 1921 Lah 121=62 I C 808.
2. Shankar Das v. Mathra Das, 1920 Lah 388=55 I C 520=56 P L R 1920.

The learned Counsel urged that this provision only meant that the non-proprietors were owners of the materials of the houses occupied by them. But this interpretation seems to be clearly opposed to its plain language. The word used in the provision is 'makan' and not 'malba' and both the proprietors and non-proprietors have been put on the same footing as regards the ownership of their houses. The provision clearly appears to me to mean that although the town is owned by the defendants, they have no longer any interest in the houses occupied by the non-proprietors and they derived no kind of benefit or income therefrom. The learned Counsel also referred to certain agreements taken by the defendants from certain non-proprietors at the time of occupation of vacant sites. But these appear to be clearly in the nature of exceptions when the defendants have sought to protect their rights for the future by taking special agreements. If there was any general custom in the village restricting the powers of the non-proprietors to alienate their houses, there would have been no necessity to take these agreements at all. In view of the above facts this appeal must, I think, fail and I would accordingly dismiss it with costs.

First Appeal No. 400 of 1933, Decided on 4th April 1935, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Gujrat, D/- 28th November 1932.

(a) Principal and Agent—Duties and liabilities of agent—Director of bank acting as agent—Suit against him is governed by Art 90, Lim. Act.

Where director of a bank acted in a transaction as an agent of the bank, the suit against him is a suit by a principal against an agent to which Art. 90 applies: 1923 Lah 58; 1927 Lah 433, Dissent.; 1924 Lah 435, Foll.; Case law discussed. [P 269 C 1]

K was munim of H, a director of a bank. K's application for loan from bank was supported by statement as to his business and property known by H to be untrue and that the loan was in reality taken for the benefit of H's firm and the receipt of the money was entered in firm's books. The bank sued K for money but he had been adjudicated a bankrupt during the pendency of the suit:

Coldstream, J.—The suit from which this appeal arises was instituted on 12th March 1932 by the Peoples Bank of Northern India against Muhammad Ali and Har Gopal who were members of the Local Board of the Bank at Gujrat, Muhammad Ali being Chairman of the Board, to recover Rs. 5,000 with interest from the defendants as damages for loss suffered on account of their negligence and fraud in sanctioning a loan of Rs. 5,000 ostensibly in favour of one Karam Singh, on 21st January 1927. The plaintiff's case was that Karam Singh who was impleaded as a defendant pro forma was at the time Munim of the firm of Gur Sahai-Dhere Shah of which Har Gopal was a member, that his application for the loan was supported by statements as to his business and property known by the other defendants to be untrue, and that the loan was in reality taken for the benefit of Har Gopal's firm. The Bank had sued Karm Singh and obtained a decree for Rs. 6,026 against him on the basis of a promissory note undertaking to repay Rs. 5,000 with interest at 9 per cent, but Karm Singh had been adjudicated a bankrupt during the suit and all that could be recovered was Rs. 226-6-9. The Sub-Judge, 1st class, who tried the suit found it proved that Har Gopal had committed a fraud as alleged, but dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by limitation, the case being governed in his opinion by Art. 36, Lim. Act. The Bank has appealed. Har Gopal died pending the appeal and his two sons have been impleaded as his representatives. The first ground of appeal taken in the memorandum has not been pressed before us and the only points for decision by us are whether the suit is barred by limitation, whether Har Gopal acted fraudulently and negligently as alleged by the plaintiff and whether a decree can be passed executable against the estate of Har Gopal in possession of his sons.

In applying Art. 36, Lim. Act, the learned Sub-Judge has relied upon 71 I C 899 (1) which was followed in 8 Lah 167 (2). Neither of these decisions related to a suit, the decree appealed against in each case having been passed in proceedings upon an application under S. 235, Indian Companies Act. In both these cases it was held by this Court that an application to recover compensation from an ex-director of a company in respect of an alleged act of misfeasance or breach of trust was governed by Art. 36, Sch. 1, Lim. Act. A case on all fours with the present one is 5 Lah 27 (3). That was an appeal against a decree passed in a suit brought by the Bharat National Bank against the Chairman of its local directorate in Hoshiarpur to recover advances made in bad faith. It was held that in each case it is a question of fact as to whether the director whose acts are brought into question was in the circumstances of that particular case, in the position of a trustee, a partner or an agent to the company or to the body of share-holders; and that as in the case before the Court the defendant in acting as the Chairman of the Local Board of Directors, was, so far as the transaction in respect of which he had been sued, acting as agent to the Bank, the provisions Art. 90, Lim. Act applied.

1. Bank of Multan v. Hukam Chand, 1929 Lah 58=71 I C 899.
2. Bhim Singh v. Official liquidator, Union Bank of India, 1927 Lah 433=100 I C 907=8 Lah 167=28 P L R 863.
3. Daulat Ram v. Bharat National Bank, 1924 Lah 435=79 I C 740=5 Lah 27.

It was remarked by the learned Judges that the only question argued in the Bank of Multan case (1) which had been referred to in argument was whether Art. 36 or S. 10 applied. Eforde, J., who delivered the judgment was party to the later judgment in 8 Lah 167 (2). In deciding in that judgment that an application under S. 235 was barred under Art. 36, Lim. Act, he distinguished the Bharat National Bank case (3) from the Multan Bank case (1) on the ground that the latter was an application under S. 235, Companies Act, and the former a suit by a principal against an agent, and observed that the question of limitation governing an application under S. 235, Companies Act, had not been fully dealt with in the Bharat National Bank case (3). In concurring with Eforde, J., Harrison, J., added that the application disclosed nothing beyond misfeasance, malfeasance and non-feasance and that the liquidator had so defined and limited his position as to make it impossible to substantiate the contention that the application would be governed by any Article other than Art. 36.

The view adopted by this Court in 71 I C 899 (1) and in 8 Lah 167 (2), that an application under S. 235, Companies Act, is governed by Art. 36, was dissented from by the Bombay High Court in 54 Bom 226 (4). Marten, C. J., and Patkar, J., in separate judgments held, in agreement with the Allahabad Court's judgment in 47 All 669 (5), that a misfeasance application under S. 235, Companies Act, was governed by Art. 120, Lim. Act, as the claim made was not one independent of contract, to which Art. 36 would apply, and as Arts. 115 and 116 would not apply where there was no specific breach of a specific contract made by one or more individuals with the person making the claim. The applicability of Art. 90 was not considered.

The Allahabad Court also declined to follow the Multan Bank case (1) and Bhim Singh's case (2) on this point when the questions what articles of the Limitation Act governed applications under S. 235, Companies Act, and from what date in such cases the limitation would run, came before a Full Bench in 1933 All 789 (6). Previous decisions of the Court had been that a misfeasance application under S. 235, Companies Act, was governed by Art. 120. Mukerjee, J., adhered to the view that the only article applicable was that article, and was of opinion that limitation would start from the winding up order. The conclusion reached by Sulaiman, C. J., with whom King, J., concurred, was that an application under S. 235, Companies Act, would be governed by that article of the Limitation Act which would be appropriate according to the relief sought had the application been a suit brought for seeking the same relief on behalf of the company, and that the starting point for limitation would vary with the particular article which applied to the facts of the case. The judgments of the different High Courts on the question, what article of the Limitation Act governed misfeasance applications, were reviewed in 1933 by the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in 1933 Sind 103 (7). His view was that Art. 36 could not apply to such an application, the misfeasance not being independent of contract and that Art. 115 was applicable to the facts of the particular case before him. I have referred to all these judgments because they are of interest as showing that the view taken in the Multan Bank case (1) and Bhim Singh's case (2) on which the learned Subordinate Judge has relied has been rejected by other High Courts as authority for any other proposition than that where limitation for an application under S. 235, Companies Act, begins to run from "the time when the right to sue accrues," it will run from the time of the malfeasance.

It appears to me clear from the wording itself of sub-s. (3) of S. 235, Companies Act that it cannot be laid down that any particular Article of the Limitation Act, will apply to all applications under the section. As pointed out by Sulaiman, C. J. in 1933 All 789 (6), the application might ask for a relief, which, had it been a suit, would have been governed by Art. 90 or Art. 115 or Art. 116, or if no special Article was applicable, by Article 120. The Division Bench judgment in 5 Lab 27 (3) has not been overruled by this Court so far as I am aware. In my opinion it applies fully in the circumstances of this case. In the present case there can be no doubt, in my opinion, that Hargopal acted in the transaction, under consideration as an agent of the Bank. The suit against him was a suit by a principal against an agent to which Art. 90, Lim. Act, applied and was, therefore, not barred by time. That Har Gopal acted dishonestly in sanctioning Karam Singh's application for the loan is proved beyond any doubt by the evidence in the case which makes it clear that the application was presented in bad faith by Karam Singh who was munim of Har Gopal's firm Gur Sahai-Dhera Shah (Gur Sahai is Har Gopal's brother and Dhera Shah was his father) and took the money for the firm with the connivance of Har Gopal. The application form misrepresented the applicant's circumstances to the knowledge of Har Gopal. The plea that the loan was sanctioned upon a recommendation by the Local Manager was false. Karam Singh in his jawab-i-dawa stated that the receipt of the money was entered in the firm's books. The firm admittedly kept the usual account books and they were with the firm. The account books have been withheld.

It is contended on behalf of Har Gopal's son that the principle actio personalis moritur cum persona precludes the survival of the right to sue against them. There is, however, no doubt that a remedy for a wrongful act which was not a mere tort but a breach of a quasi contract, done by a deceased person, can be pursued against his legal representatives where property belonging to another person has been appropriated by the deceased and added to his estate, see 17 C W N 5 (8). Such an action is not one excluded by S. 306, Succession Act. The money ostensibly lent to Karam Singh was added to Har Gopal's joint family estate and is recoverable therefrom. For these reasons I would accept this appeal so far as Har Gopal's representatives are concerned and, setting aside the judgment appealed against, grant the appellant a decree for Rs. 5,250 and costs throughout executable against the estate of Har Gopal in the possession of his sons.

Coldstream, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the Peoples Bank of Northern India to recover a sum of Rs. 2,143-13-1 from Fateh Ali on the basis of a promissory note for Rs. 1,600 executed by him in favour of the Bank. It was alleged by the Bank that in sanctioning the loan the local directors of the Gujrat branch of the Bank namely, Har Gopal, Muhammad Ali and Gian Chand, had acted dishonestly and these persons were impleaded with Fateh Ali as defendants. Muhammad Ali and Gian Chand did not contest the suit. Fateh Ali admitted his liability for the debt. The Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, passed a decree against Fateh Ali for Rupees 2,143 13 1 with costs. He dismissed the suit against the local directors, as barred by time, holding that the Article of the Limitation Act applicable was Art. 36. As regards the conduct of the directors, he found it proved that they had been guilty of neglect but had not been so wilfully negligent or fraudulent as to be personally liable for Fateh Ali's debt. The Bank appealed to the District Judge of Gujrat against the Subordinate Judge's decision regarding limitation and the liability of the local directors. The learned District Judge agreed with the trial Court in holding that the suit was one governed by Art. 36, Lim. Act, following 8 Lah 167 (1), and dismissed the appeal. At the same time he recorded a finding that all three local directors were equally guilty of wilful negligence, remarking that if the suit against them had been within time, he would certainly have held them jointly and severally liable for the loss suffered by the Bank.

The Bank has now come to this Court on second appeal and it is contended before us that the District Judge's decision on the point of limitation is incorrect, the Article of the Limitation Act, applicable being Art. 90 as was recently held by this Court in Civil Appeal No. 400 of 1933 (2). That judgment decided another appeal by the Peoples Bank of India in a case in which the Bank had sought to recover from Har Gopal the present respondent the amount of a loan which, according to the Bank had been dishonestly sanctioned by him and the other local directors of the Gujrat Branch of the Bank. The question what article of the Limitation Act would govern a suit of that kind was considered by the present Bench and the judgment set forth our reasons for holding that the proper article to apply would be Art. 90. There is nothing in the circumstances of the present case to distinguish it, so far as the question of limitation is concerned, from the case there dealt with. I would accordingly reverse the decision of the District Judge on this point and hold that this suit was within time, the misconduct itself complained of having occurred within three years of the institution of the suit.

The finding by the District Judge, that the conduct of the three local directors was such as to render them liable to the amount lost by the Bank, owing to the wilful breach of their obligation as directors, was justified by the evidence. My conclusion is that the suit should have been decreed against the three directors, it not being shown that the Bank could have decreased their loss by some action which they ought to have taken, but did not take. L. Har Gopal is dead and his two sons have been impleaded as his legal representatives. The question now to be decided is whether a decree can be passed against them. It is contended on their behalf that the cause of action in this case having been against Har Gopal personally does not survive against his representatives on the principle actio personalis moritur cum persona. Reliance is placed on a number of rulings in which Indian Courts have applied this principle to cases not on all fours with the present one.

In Civil Appeal No. 400 of 1933 (2), to which reference has been made above, it was pointed out that a remedy for a wrongful act which was not a mere tort but a breach of a quasi-contractual obligation committed by a deceased person can be pursued against his legal representative where property belonging to another person has been appropriated and added to his estate. In the present case it is not established that the money lost to the Bank was appropriated by Har Gopal, but I do not think that this fact affects the question of abatement in this case. S. 306, Succession Act, expressly provides that rights to prosecute all actions survive against the executors and administrators of a person against whom the rights existed except causes of action for defamation, assault as defined in the Penal Code, or other personal injuries not causing the death of the person, or where, after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed or the granting of it would be nugatory. It may properly be assumed that the liability of legal representatives who are not executors or administrators is the same. This was the view taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta Court in 31 Cal

1. Bhim Singh v. Basheswar Nath, 1927 Lah 433=100 I C 907=8 Lah 167.
2. Peoples Bank of Northern India v Har Gopal, since reported in 1936 Lah 268.

993 (3) where they were dealing with the question whether a suit for malicious prosecution abated with the death of the plaintiff or could be continued by his heirs who had not taken out administration to his estate. In the course of his judgment Maclean, C. J., remarked :

We have been referred to various authorities in the Court of England upon the question but it seems unnecessary to go into those cases because the law in India has been codified by S. 89, Probate and Administration Act (now S. 306, Succession Act).

It is true that the words "or other personal injuries" have been read by some of the Indian Courts to include injuries such as malicious prosecution even where the plaintiffs sought to recover pecuniary loss arising out of the injury. This interpretation can be based only on the assumption that 'other personal injuries' referred to in S. 306, Succession Act, must be injuries ejusdem generis not only with assault but also with defamation. This interpretation was not accepted by the Calcutta Court, who in the case just cited observed that to make the words 'personal injuries' include a case of malicious prosecution would be straining the language of the Legislature and placing upon it an unnatural and forced construction. A Division Bench of the same Court following this ruling in 53 Cal 987 (4) expressed their dissent from the judgments of the Madras, Bombay and Patna Courts which took a different view, remarking that, having regard to the language used they did not think that the Legislature intended to perpetuate in this country a doctrine so archaic and unjust. Whatever, however, may be the correct view as to the revival of an action for injuries of other kinds there is no doubt in my mind that the present case is not one of a personal injury which could have caused, but did not cause, death. The general rule as laid down in S. 306, Succession Act, is that a right to prosecute an action survives. It is for the person claiming exemption from this rule to show that his case falls within the exception and here this has not been shown. Lastly it is contended for Har Gopal's son that the loss to the Bank is not proved. But Fateh Ali did not pay his debt. The loan was tainted with dishonesty and the directors were responsible for a debt which had been found bad. They are liable for this debt. I would for all these reasons accept the appeal and modify the decrees so as to make it executable in respect of the decretal amount not only against Fateh Ali but also against the estate of Har Gopal in the hands of his son for any balance not recoverable from Fateh Ali. The lower appellate Court's order as to costs will stand and the appellants will have their costs here against Har Gopal's sons.

The riwajiam of the Jullundur District is clearly in favour of the collaterals. According to the answer to question 45-A in the Jullundur Tahsil among Jats daughters are excluded by collaterals up to and including the fifth degree, while the answer to question 45-B states that no distinction is drawn between ancestral and non-ancestral property. The instances cited in the riwajiam are not sufficiently detailed to afford any assistance. There are instances in which daughters were allowed to succeed, but there is nothing to show whether there were collaterals of the fifth degree or not. They are described as being "in favour" and from the preface it is clear that this is to be interpreted as "in favour of the custom as stated." Before turning to instances cited in the present case certain general arguments advanced on behalf of the appellants may be considered. It has been argued that very little weight should be attached to the entry in the riwajiam as the riwajiam of the Jullundur District has been adversely criticized and has been held to be incorrect in certain cases. This argument to my mind carries little weight as there are cases in which this riwajiam has been accepted, e. g., 15 Lah 586 (1) and 1934 Lah 580 (2). A further argument advanced against the entry was that it is opposed to the general custom of the province.

But that in itself is no ground for holding that the answer is wrongly recorded especially as there are cases in which a similar custom excluding daughters even from inheritance of non-ancestral property was upheld in the neighbouring Amritsar District. Another general argument advanced is that as the appellants are women the onus lies lighter on them as women are not present at the time of the attestation of the riwaj-i-am. That argument does not appeal very strongly to me. There are plenty of sonless proprietors who will be ready to put forward the custom to the benefit of their daughters and there are also the husbands of such women who would not hesitate to put forward the custom if it existed. To turn now to the instances cited in the present case. Mr. Manchanda relied on the first four instances cited in the judgment of the District Judge. The first of these certainly supports the appellants' case. Mt. Attri is stated to have succeeded to the self-acquired property of her father Jowala Singh in the Lyallpur District in the presence of collaterals within the fifth degree. The collaterals are said to have brought a suit which was subsequently withdrawn. This instance rests on oral evidence, no copies having been produced. The second instance cited by the learned District Judge, which was sub judice at the time of his judgment, is now concluded by the decision reported in 1935 Lah 607 (3), in which the decision went in favour of the daughters. This also was a case from Lyallpur. The third instance, also from Jaranwala Tahsil, shows that Mt. Kishan Kaur, widow of Kartar Singh, gave the land to Mt. Prito, her daughter, a minor. The mutation Ex. D-9 was sanctioned despite the objections of the reversionary heirs, who stated that the donor was merely an owner for life and had no right to make the gift. The Revenue Officer, however, held that the property was self-acquired and these objections must be decided by civil Courts. The exact degree within which the collaterals came is not mentioned. Limitation has not yet expired.

The fourth instance related to Maida Singh. He was succeeded by his widow Mt. Ralli, who got two-thirds share, and his daughter-in-law Mt. Kishen Kaur. On the death of Mt. Ralli the mutation of the two-thirds share held by her was sanctioned in favour of Mt. Santi her married daughter, on 8th June 1932. This would still be liable to be contested by the reversioners, who do not appear to have appeared before the revenue authorities. The other instances cited have been shown by the learned District Judge to prove nothing and counsel has not attempted to rely on them. In addition reference has been made to a case reported in 1935 Lah 505 (4), from the Jullundur District. But that case proceeded largely on the fact that certain admissions had been made in a previous case between the parties and is not of great value as an instance. Two other cases, 1930 Lah 596 (5) and 1931 Lah 641 (6) were also referred to, but these relate to Arains and in view of the well-known tendency of that endogamous tribe to favour daughters are not in my opinion of any weight. A number of instances were cited on behalf of the plaintiffs. Of these Nos. 1, 6 and 11 were held to be irrelevant by the learned District Judge and no reason has been advanced before us for holding to the contrary.

As regards the remaining instances, the learned counsel who appeared for the respondents, was not in a position to state on which he relied. I have however been through these instances and find that none of them is of any value. Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 7 all relate to the succession to occupancy rights which is governed by the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, 1912, Ss. 20 and 21. S. 20 provides that in the case of an original grantee, where there are no sons or no widow, an unmarried daughter succeeds until she dies or marries or loses her rights under the provisions of this Act, and this undoubtedly affects the view taken by subordinate revenue officials in deciding the course of succession when any male tenant, who is not an original tenant, dies, or any female tenant dies, marries or re-marries, though S. 21 (b) provides that in such cases the succession devolves on the person or persons who would succeed if the tenancy were agricultural land acquired by the original tenant. The tendency therefore is for the revenue officer to construe the rule as if the daughters' rights were extinguished on marriage.

As regards instances actually cited in No. 2, there was a dispute between the reversioners, but this was settled by mutual agreement and the daughter's name was struck off on her marriage. Instance No. 3 was a case of succession to a widow and it is not clear who was the original grantee. Instance No. 4 was again a case of a daughter's name being struck off on marriage. As she held only one-third of the holding it would appear probable that the original grantee was her grandfather who had two other sons besides her father. Instance No. 7 was peculiar in that the father of the deceased tenant was still alive and it was in accordance with his wishes that the mutation was effected in favour of his grandsons on the marriage of the granddaughter. These instances therefore are of little or no value in the present case. In instance No. 5 two brothers owned the land jointly and the one who died sonless was succeeded by his brother to the exclusion of married daughters. There is nothing to show that the land was the self-acquired property of the deceased. On the contrary the fact that he was holding jointly with his brother would point to the fact that it had come down to them from their father. Instance No. 8 (Ex. P-13) relates to ancestral property. In instance No. 9 there is nothing to show whether the property was ancestral or self-acquired, and this instance is of no real value. In instance No. 10 the property was apparently ancestral. Instance No. 12 related to Kambohs of Jullundur who give the same answer as Jats. Instance No. 13 depends solely on oral evidence.

Thus there are four instances in which the daughters have excluded the collaterals in respect of the self-acquired property of their father. On the other hand, there is only one instance dependent solely on oral testimony in which the collaterals are said to have excluded the daughters. This was an instance of the Jullundur District and rests purely on the evidence of D. W. 10. It must be remembered that these people have left their own district and migrated to a canal colony where they may have acquired more liberal views towards the rights of daughters than those held by the more stay-at-home portion of the tribe in the Jullundur District. In the present case I would hold that the daughters have discharged the onus that lay upon them and shown that in the Lyallpur District among Jats, emigrants from the Jullundur District, daughters of male proprietors, who die without male lineal descendants, exclude collaterals from the succession to the self-acquired property of their fathers. I would therefore accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

(a) Company — Company authorized to manage estate can act as liquidator—Company appointed and acting as liquidator—Legality of appointment cannot be questioned in proceedings of payment order under S. 186, Companies Act.

Where the Memorandum of Association shows that one of the objects of the company is to manage estates, it entitles the company to act as a liquidator of another company and once the company having been appointed a liquidator and having accepted the position the legality of the appointment cannot be questioned in proceedings of a payment order under S. 186 of perty to B and asking him to appropriate the of liability and can save limitation of pro-note.

A executed a pro-note in favour of B. After certain time A sold certain of his immoveable property to B and asked him to appropriate the sale price in part payment towards the pro-note.
The document of sale if it is not registered cannot be relied upon by B to prove his title to the document is relied upon to serve as an ac-it is relied upon to serve a collateral purpose

Judgment.—Shanti Lal appeals against a payment order made by the District Judge in charge of liquidation work at Lahore directing him to pay Rupees
1,37,557-10-3, principal and interest thereon, as the legal representative of the late Lala Jairam Das, who has executed a promissory note for 'Rs. 1,11,500-8-0 in favour of the Lyallpur Bank Ltd., in liquidation, on 1st July 1928. The Bank went into liquidation in 1932 and the Punjab Co-operative Bank Ltd. and Lala Banwasi Lal were appointed joint liquidators; the liquidation was under the supervision of the Court. An application was made by the Lyallpur Bank Ltd., in liquidation on 22nd May 1933 under S. 186, Companies Act, for a payment order. It was signed by Banwasi Lal and one Daulat Ram who did not describe himself, but in the evidence it transpired that he was the manager of the Punjab Co-operative Bank Ltd. Three main objections to the order passed by the District Judge has been raised before me: firstly that the application on which the payment order has been made was not made by persons competent to make an application of this description; secondly that the application was time-barred; and thirdly that no payment order could be made because the promissory note executed by Lala Jairam Das in favour of the Lyallpur Bank Ltd., was payable in the office of the Bank either at Lyallpur or in Dera Ismail Khan, and therefore it being payable at a specified place, presentment of the promissory note for payment was necessary on maturity before the maker could be held liable thereon.

With regard to the first objection reference was made to the Memorandum of Association and Articles of Association of the Company, that is to say, Punjab Co-operative Bank Ltd., and it was contended (a) that the bank was not competent to act as a liquidator and (b) that the appointment of Daulat Ram had not been legally made to represent the bank in the liquidation proceedings. In fact it was suggested that the bank was not competent to delegate its authority to another person as it has done by professing to appoint its manager Daulat Ram to act for it in the liquidation proceedings. I need refer to the Memorandum of Association only to show that one of the objects of the bank is to manage estates and it is contended by the respondents' counsel that this entitles the bank to act as a liquidator of another company. But in my opinion this objection is not open to the appellant. The Bank having been appointed a liquidator and having accepted the position the legality of the appointment cannot be questioned in these proceedings. Regarding the appointment of Daulat Ram there can be no question of delegation in the sense in which delegation of duties is prohibited by law. A Bank can function only through its directors, agents, or representatives and if it can be found that Daulat Ram was authorised either by power of attorney or the Articles of Association or otherwise to act in this matter on behalf of the Punjab Co-operative Bank Ltd., he would be competent to present the application. If the proposition is correct that by its Memorandum of Association the Punjab Co-operative Bank Ltd. is entitled to act as a liquidator, then the work of liquidation would fall within the ordinary functions of the Bank and the manager of the Bank by virtue of the Articles of Association and the power of attorney that he holds, which authorised him to manage the affairs of the bank, would be entitled to present the application in question. I do not, however, express any opinion on the question whether the Bank was entitled by its Memorandum of Association to act as a liquidator, but there is no doubt that the Bank did act as a liquidator after having been appointed by the share-holders first and subsequently by the Court. There is a resolution of the Directors of the Bank which was passed on 31st July 1932 by which Daulat Ram was authorised to manage the work of liquidation and to generally act on behalf of the Bank and to sign documents connected with the liquidation proceedings on behalf of the Bank. This resolution was duly communicated to the District Judge and was noted by him.

Under these circumstances it must be assumed that Daulat Ram is the recognised agent of the Bank in matters of liquidation and as such is entitled to act on their behalf in all proceedings in the Court. The application is defective in form because Daulat Ram has not stated the capacity in which he signed the application, but this is merely a formal defect which does not vitiate the proceedings. His position was made clear subsequently. The application, it may be mentioned, was made through an Advocate, Lala Madan Gopal, and signed by him and he was authorised both by Banwasi Lal and Daulat Ram to do so. In my opinion there is no force in the first objection. As regards limitation the application was admittedly made when the normal period for instituting a suit for the recovery of the debt due under a promissory note had expired, but in the application the liquidators claimed exemption by virtue of a document dated 28th February 1931 signed by Lala Jairam Das. By this document he sold certain immovable property to the Bank for Rs. 16,000 and directed the Bank to credit the sum of Rs. 16,000 to the promissory note account. The appellant contends that the document really purports to transfer the property in favour of the Bank but is not registered. Assuming that the document requires registration the liquidators do not rely upon it in order to establish their title to the immovable property sold to the Bank; on the other hand they rely upon it to prove acknowledgment of liability under the promissory note for the purpose of extending time under S. 19, Limitation Act, and also in order to establish part payment of the amount due under the promissory note in question the fact of which payment appears to be in the handwriting of the debtor. This in my opinion is clearly a collateral purpose and the document is admissible in evidence for the purposes mentioned above.

As to the payment it appears that the sum of Rs. 16,000 was credited to the account of Lala Jairam Das by the liquidators on 28th September 1932 and not by the Bank before it went into liquidation on 28th February 1931. The reason for this delay, as explained by the liquidators, is that the amount was credited to the account of Lala Jairam Das only when the mutation was sanctioned in their favour. It appears from the mutation proceedings that a report was made to the Patwari of the sale of the immovable property in favour of the Bank in August 1931 and it was on 28th September 1932 that the Assistant Collector recommended to the Collector that the mutation be sanctioned. It was on that date that the amount was credited to the account of Lala Jairam Das. The learned District Judge has allowed no interest on the promissory note from 28th February 1931 to 28th September 1932, he has thus taken the payment to have been made on 28th February 1931, as that was the date on which, according to the document, Lala Jairam Das got the credit of Rs. 16,000 made in his promissory note account. I am also of opinion that the receipt does amount to an acknowledgment of liability under the promissory note for the purpose of S. 19, Lim. Act. It is not necessary that the actual amount due should be mentioned so long as there is an acknowledgment of liability, under the promissory note in writing signed by the debtor. The conclusion of the learned District Judge on this matter also is correct.

The question of presentment does not arise. In the first instance it has been held as a matter of fact on the evidence which has been believed by the learned District Judge that the document was presented to Lala Jairam Das for payment. Beyond contending that the witnesses have not given the actual date on which the presentment was made but merely stated that it was made in the month of April or May 1933, the learned counsel for the appellant did not criticise the evidence led by the Bank. In my opinion there is no substance in this contention. I also consider that in the circumstances disclosed in this case no presentment was necessary. The promissory note is payable on demand and it has been found that Rs. 16,000 are paid by Lala Jairamdas to the Bank in 1931, or in any case, in 1932. By virtue of S. 76 (c), Negotiable Instruments Act, no presentment would be necessary. I am doubtful if presentment is necessary at all under S. 76 to charge the maker of the promissory note in this case. There is therefore no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

Abdul Aziz—for Appellant.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—In this case Abdul Sattar, his brothers Abdul Ghaffur and Raushan Din were charged with the murder of one Ram Partap. Abdul Sattar was convicted and sentenced to death: the other two were acquitted.

Some years ago in Delhi there was a notorious character, a Brahman, named Ram Partap. He dealt in opium and cocaine and had been convicted of dacoity. He had friends, also interested in crime, among others being an advocate of Delhi named Gulal Chand. It is alleged that the accused, in collaboration with Gulal Chand, the advocate, and others, murdered Ram Partap in pursuance of a conspiracy to obtain from Ram Partap a promissory note of Rs. 25,000, and after the death of Ram Partap to collect the money. On 8th March 1931, Ram Partap left his house. After that day he has not been seen alive by anyone, neither has his corpse been discovered. Investigation was started on the complaint of Mt. Bibbo, the wife of Ram Partap. The investigation proceeded and Abdul Sattar, the appellant, was actually arrested in 1931 in connexion with the murder. He was detained for some days, but eventually the proceedings were ended by the discharge of Abdul Sattar. It is said by the approver in this case that the reason given by the appellant for the abortive proceedings in 1931 was the payment of Rs. 2,000 by the appellant to the police. Other people were also suspected and charged in 1931, and they, too, in their turn were discharged.

After the death, or disappearance, of Ram Partap, Gulal Chand, advocate, proceeded upon the promissory note. He obtained an ex parte decree in Bombay against Ram Partap for Rs. 28,000 odd. Gulal Chand commenced proceedings in Delhi to execute his decree. This not unnaturally excited the widow, Mt. Bibbo, to action, and she filed a declaratory suit alleging that Gulal Chand had murdered her husband and that the decree had been obtained in pursuance of the conspiracy. On the evening of 29th July 1934, just after the filing of the declaratory suit, Gulal Chand was discovered murdered in his car in the suburbs of Delhi. Investigation was again commenced, with the result that the police obtained a clue to Abdul Qayyum, who is the approver in this case, a statement was taken from him and subsequently he made a confession recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C., the result of which was the arrest of the present accused for the murder of Ram Partap in 1931.

In this case we are dealing solely with the murder of Ram Partap. The question of the murder of Gulal Chand will be considered in the next case before us. The statement of the approver only applies to the actual murder and what happened after the disposal of the body. The rest of the story has come from the witnesses. It is alleged that Ram Partap left his house on the morning of 8th March 1931 to go to the office of the Advocate Gulal Chand. There Abdul Sattar was present. Abdul Sattar, as pre-arranged, took Ram Partap and Gulal Chand to his workshop. Other members of the conspiracy were there present. When Ram Partap sat down on a sofa in his house with Gulal Chand, he was seized by the various persons there collected and strangled. The question then arose as to the disposal of the body. According to the approver, Abdul Sattar procured a hired taxi driven by one Ganga Singh, who has been called as a witness in this case, placed in the back of the car a box containing the body of the deceased, hung a curtain round the car and then went to collect his wife (or mistress), Mt. Hussaini who lived near the Jama Masjid. The party then proceeded in this pardah car to village Akbarpur where Hussaini was left with the wife of a man called Firoze, and Firoze was taken on in the car by Abdul Sattar. It is alleged that Abdul Sattar told Firoze that the box contained some contraband opium which had gone bad and that he wished the assistance of Firoz in order to get rid of it. They drove first to a canal in the neighbourhood of Bulandshahr. It was too early as it was light and the car was driven back again to Akbarpur. Later on, they returned to the canal. The box was taken out, placed upon the running board of the car and the car was driven to a suitable place near the canal. Firoz and Abdul Sattar took the box to the canal and emptied the contents into the water. Firoze was extremely surprised when the box was opened to see therein not contraband opium, but the face of his old friend Ram Partap. The contents of the box were promptly emptied and the car returned. Mt. Hussaini was collected in the village and the car was driven back to Delhi. There is some further evidence, not material to this case, but thereafter Abdul Sattar proposed a dacoity at Ram-Partap's house, but that project was abandoned.

In the first place, we have to consider whether the story of Abdul Qayyum, the approver, is in itself worthy of credence. In this connexion the learned Government Advocate, who appears for the Crown, concedes that this approver is worse than most others. He had been a warder in a jail and according to his own statement, had, in jail, engaged in many illegal practices. He was a friend of opium and cocaine smugglers in Delhi and was quite prepared, for a reasonable sum of money, to enter into this conspiracy to murder Ram Partap. We have it also on record that the approver was in police custody from the day of his arrest, 19th October 1934, that although his statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C., took some six or seven days to complete, he was returned to police custody after every instalment was made, and that after the confession was complete, he was returned to police custody and stayed there for a considerable time. We have continually pointed out, and it appears necessary for us to continue to do so, that this procedure is highly improper and may damage the whole case in which such a confession is used. It may be that this being a Delhi case, the remarks of this Court have not been noticed by the Delhi authorities. As far as this approver is concerned therefore not only have we the fact that he is a very bad type of man but that the police control to which he has been subjected is sufficient to cast suspicion upon his statement.

The first point that we notice about the evidence is that all the witnesses are persons of very bad character. There is Hussaini, who for many years was a prostitute, lived with Abdul Sattar for a certain time, and then apparently went back to the bazar. There was Firoze, a most important witness, who is a bad-mash on register No. 10. There is Ganga Singh, the driver of the car, another important witness, who was the employee of one Dhanna Lal who has been in prison on various charges. There is Rahim Ali, a casual witness, who is a relation and friend of Firoze. The evidence of witnesses of this character in view of what hereinafter appears, could not be expected to command a great deal of confidence.

Another fact which, in view of the character of these witnesses, cannot fail to impress us is that we are satisfied that the evidence of Qasim Ali has been deliberately procured by the prosecution. In many cases we are told that the prosecution has produced false evidence in a doubtful case in order to secure conviction. It is often impossible—although there may be suspicion of such a practice—to be able to say definitely that this has occurred. In this case we do not doubt that Qasim Ali is a false witness and that he was produced to say that four years ago he was present in a field adjacent to the canal in which the dead body is alleged to have been thrown; that he saw a motor car on the bridge in itself a common object—that he went there to find out whether a Canal Officer had arrived; that he recognised Firoze and that near Firoze there was another person who was dressed in shorts and a topi, that is, in European costume. Qasim Ali said he remembered that, four years ago, he asked Firoze who this individual was and he was told that it was Abdul Sattar of Delhi. We cannot believe that this incident could have impressed itself upon the mind of Qasim Ali or—if it were true that Abdul Sattar's name was mentioned—that he remembered the name four years later.

What is worse however is that this witness was produced by the prosecution four years later as a person who had identified Abdul Sattar in a parade in Delhi jail where Abdul Sattar was mixed with twenty other prisoners. Abdul Sattar four years ago was clean shaven; Abdul Sattar in the identification parade had a beard. Abdul Sattar four years ago was wearing a topi and shorts, Abdul Sattar in the jail parade was wearing Indian clothes. We consider that it is beyond the bounds of possibility under these circumstances for any person to identify a man whom he had seen four years ago for a very short time. It is obvious that this witness had identified Abdul Sattar with the assistance of some one in the jail. We are informed that this practice is termed "padding." It is in fact a most serious offence which may result in innocent persons being hanged. Persons indulging in it are engaged in a conspiracy which may result in murder by judicial process.

The learned Government Advocate admits that this evidence of identification is "too tall." We say it is false and manufactured. When we are satisfied that the prosecution has produced a false witness for the purposes of procuring a conviction, this fact must affect our minds as to the rest of the evidence, and when the other witnesses are, as we have pointed out, easily amenable to police influence, the effect will be greater. We consider on this ground alone—though the evidence otherwise is weak—that it would be extremely unsafe for this Court to act upon any of the evidence in this case. We therefore have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the prosecution has failed to prove the guilt of Abdul Sattar. We must therefore accept this appeal. We set aside the conviction and the sentence of death imposed upon him. We direct that a copy of this judgment be sent to the Chief Secretary, Punjab Government, and to the Chief Commissioner, Delhi.

Qabul Chand and Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Order. — One Mahant Manohar Das, brought a suit for possession of a certain building. The defendant filed objections that the court-fee on the plaint was not sufficient. On 18th November 1934, the Court ordered that the point of court-fee should be argued first as it was admitted that the property was wakf. On 14th December 1934, the Court held that the building in dispute was not a temple and that the plaintiff should have paid an ad valorem court-fee on the market value of the property in suit. The Court also appointed Lala Parmeshri Das, retired Subordinate Judge, as Commissioner and directed him to find out the market value of the property. Lala Parmeshri Das was to submit his report on 15th January 1935. The parties paid a sum of Rs. 20 to Lala Parmeshri Das as his remuneration. On 13th January 1935, Lala Parmeshri Das made an endorsement on the precept which was issued to him saying that he had received the same along with the plan and asked that the date for submitting his report may be extended. On 15th January 1935 the case came up before the Court. The defendant and his counsel were present while the plaintiff and his counsel were absent. The Court, purporting to act under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C., dismissed the suit of the plaintiff for default. He apparently treated 15th January 1935 as the date for hearing. The plaintiff filed an appeal against the order of the trial Court before the learned Senior Sub-Judge. The Senior Sub-Judge dismissed the appeal in limine without issuing notice to the respondent. The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in revision.

The matter really turns on as to whether 15th January 1935 was the date of hearing. From what has been stated above, Lala Parmeshri Das, the local Commissioner, had asked for an extension of time. The Court might have extended the time or if it was not inclined to do so it could have fixed a date for the hearing of the case in the ordinary course. There was no date of hearing on 15th January 1935 as understood in legal parlance. The phrase "hearing of the suit" was considered by a Division Bench of the Patna High Court in 57 I C 748 (1). The learned Chief Justice who delivered the judgment of the Court observed that :

Order 17, Rr. 2 and 3 apply only to cases where the actual hearing of the suit has been adjourned and by the hearing of suit is meant the hearing at which the Judge would be either taking evidence or hearing arguments or would have to consider questions relating to the determination of the suit which would enable him finally to come to an adjudication upon it. But in cases where it was clearly never intended that there should be a hearing of the suit in the ordinary sense of the word, but merely some interlocutory matter decided between the parties as to the future conduct of the suit, the provisions of these rules have no application.

This is a perfectly sound exposition of law and I have no hesitation in accepting it. There was a case, 1927 All 749 (2), where it was laid down that when a commission is ordered, the Court should wait for the return of the commission before proceeding to hear and determine the case. It is perfectly true that in this case the parties were present, but the decision of the Court below was held to be erroneous on the ground that it did not wait for the return of the commission which had been issued by it. This case is based upon an earlier decision of the same Court in 16 All 342 (3). There a Division Bench held that the intention of the Code of Civil Procedure is that when a Court deems it necessary on the application of a party or otherwise that a commission for local investigation should be issued, the return to that commission should be before the Court, before it can proceed to hear and determine the case.

In the present case it was for the Court to extend the time which the commissioner asked for or it could refuse it. The parties had nothing to do with the matter. The date on which the Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit was not "the date of the hearing" and in my opinion the order of the Court in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, on the facts narrated above, was without jurisdiction. I would therefore allow this application, set aside the order passed by the two Courts below and remand the case to the trial Court for disposal according to law. The respondent is not represented. Dalip Singh, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued the Secretary of State for damages for wrongful dismissal. The claim was for Rs. 79,990.0.0. The Court decreed the suit only to the extent of Rs. 2,658-4-0 against the defendant, Rs. 1,188-4-0 of this sum is arrears of pay between the 26th September 1927 till the 4th January 1928, the period during which the plaintiff was suspended. Rs. 1,470 is pay for three months from the 4th January, the date on which the plaintiff was dismissed, the Court holding that under the terms of the contract entered into between the plaintiff and the Secretary of State, the plaintiff was entitled to three months' notice. (See p. 141 of the printed paper book.) The Court held that the Secretary of State had failed to prove any misconduct or unsatisfactory work on the part of the plaintiff. The facts of the case have not been found and the unsatisfactory nature of this method of decision of the case is apparent and has been made more apparent by the argument before us. But it appears to have been due entirely to the learned counsel for the Crown who insisted on issue 2 being decided without

Is the plaintiff not entitled to his pay for three months after the 3rd January 1928 at the same rate, namely Rs. 490 per month.

By so insisting, it appears to me that the Crown obviously waived any right to prove that the plaintiff had been dismissed for misconduct or for unsatisfactory work. The plaintiff has come in appeal and the defendant, Secretary of State, has filed a cross-appeal as regards a portion of the sum decreed, namely Rs. 1,470, three months' pay. The plaintiff has appealed for the balance of the sum originally claimed by him. It appears to me that the plaintiff's appeal must fail except on points mentioned hereafter on the short ground that taking all the findings of fact in his favour, no case whatsoever is made out for anything more than what has already been allowed him by the Court below, namely, three-fourths arrears of pay from 26th September to 4th January, and three months' pay subsequent to 4th January in lieu of the notice to which he was entitled under the contract. The learned counsel has not been able to show to me that any suit lies for a declaration that the plaintiff was wrongfully dismissed, nor that there should be any measure of damages other than the three months' pay, for admittedly the plaintiff's employment was of a temporary nature and could be terminated at any time without any reasons given. The only other point argued was that the date of dismissal should be 11th February 1928 instead of 4th January 1928, because of the later date the words terminating the plaintiff's services were altered from "dismissal" to "dispensing with his services." There seems to be no force whatsoever in this argument. The last point contested was that interest should have been allowed on the sum found due, namely Rs. 2,658-4-0 from 4th January 1928 up to the date of payment, at 6 per cent per annum. Notice was given of the claim. Interest was claimed at the rate specified, which is not unreasonable and I can see no reason why the plaintiff should not get this interest, subject of course to the result of the appeal by the Secretary of State. So far as the plaintiff's appeal is concerned, therefore I would dismiss it with the exception of the question of interest at 6 per cent per annum on Rs. 2,658-4-0 from 4th January 1928 to date of payment.

So far as the appeal of the Secretary of State is concerned, I have already held that the Secretary of State is now precluded from arguing the question that the plaintiff is proved to have been dismissed for unsatisfactory work or misconduct. The learned Government Advocate has contended that the special contract between the Local Government and the plaintiff cannot bind the Crown, on the authority of certain rulings, namely 1934 Mad 516 (1), 37 T L R 138 (2) and 3 T L R 114 (3). His contention is that all public servants of the Crown hold office during pleasure, unless it is otherwise specifically provided by statute and that a contract to the contrary though made with the authority concerned, is of no binding effect as against the Crown. The English authorities cited by him certainly support this contention, but so far as the law in India is concerned it appears to me to be governed by S. 96-B, Government of India Act, and the only ruling which supports the learned Government Advocate is 1934 Mad 516 (1), which appears to hold that even in India all public service is at His Majesty's pleasure and that the words in the Act "subject to the provisions of this Act and of rules made thereunder" cannot qualify the rest of the section which states that every person in the Civil Service of the Crown in India holds office during His Majesty's pleasure. There are two Rangoon authorities, one cited in this ruling to the contrary and one in 12 Rang 556 (4); and a Calcutta ruling 54 Cal 44 (5) appears also to hold the contrary view. As at present advised, I consider that 1934 Mad 516 (1) was not correctly decided, in so far as it holds that the rules made by the Secretary of State cannot qualify the tenure of Civil Servants in India. I would hold that the present contract was made under the authority of the Government of India rules which were presumably made under the delegated authority by the Secretary of State in Council and that therefore the tenure of office of the present plaintiff was not at His Majesty's pleasure but was regulated by the terms of the rules under which he was recruited and served. I would therefore hold that the plaintiff was rightly held entitled to three months' pay from 4th January onwards.

I would therefore dismiss the appeal of the Secretary of State. I would accept the appeal of the plaintiff to the extent of allowing him interest on Rupees 2,658-4-0 at 6 per cent from 4th January 1928 to date of payment. The appeal would otherwise be dismissed. The Secretary of State will pay the costs of his appeal to the plaintiff, and as the plaintiff's appeal has been practically dismissed except to a very small extent, he should pay the costs of the Secretary of State in his appeal.

Coldstream, J.—Shambu Dayal, son of Prabhu Dayal, his brother Din Dayal and Din Dayal's son Jai Dayal, residents of the Sabzi Mandi quarter of Delhi City, carried on a joint family business under the name of Moti Ram Jamna Das. In 1902 the firm was adjudged insolvent. One of the properties taken possession of by the Receiver was a building in Sabzi Mandi. Objection to the inclusion of this building among the firm's assets was taken by Mt. Chui, widow of Prabhu Dayal and mother of Din Dayal and Shambhu Dayal. Her allegation was that it had been dedicated for the purpose of a public charity by Prabhu Dayal sometime before his death in 1875. This application having been dismissed on the ground that Mt. Chui had not come forward as a trustee, Mt. Chui submitted another application in which she declared that she was manager of the trust property inasmuch as a dedication had been by her husband and by herself. That petition was dismissed in default. A third petition upon the same ground was submitted by Jai Dayal, one of the insolvents, on 12th January 1903. In this Jai Dayal prayed that the management of the property might be entrusted to some third person if it was found after enquiry that it was the subject of a trust. The Insolvency Judge ordered an enquiry into the nature of the property to be made by a Local Commissioner. The Commissioner, on 21st February 1903, reported that he had seen the books of firm Moti Ram Jamna Das for the years 1896-1897, and that they showed that a separate account had been kept of the expenditure on this property and its income, and that the income had been spent wholly on repairs to the house itself and for the purposes of a piao (public drinking place), for which purpose the income of the property itself had not been sufficient. The Insolvency

Judge was satisfied that the house had for long been properly dedicated to charity and, on 4th March 1903, he ordered the receiver to relinquish it. On 6th August 1930 Mt. Basanti, wife of Jai Dayal, who had died in 1925, sold a portion of this house to Mangla and Dal Chand (defendants 3 and 4), and on 9th July 1932, one Ram Rup, a Sahukar of Sabzi Mandi, Delhi, instituted in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, against Saran Dayal and Gobind Lal, sons of Shambhu Dayal, two minor sons of Gobind Dayal and the alienees Mangla and Dal Chand, the suit from which the present appeal arises for a declaration that the property alienated was wakf and did not belong to the vendor or the vendees. The plaint purported to be presented by Ram Rup on behalf of the general public in Delhi, and the Court ordered notice to be issued under the provisions of O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. The suit was resisted by all the defendants on numerous grounds, and the following issues were struck for trial upon the pleadings:

1. Whether S. 92, Civil P. C., bars this suit.
2. Whether S. 42, Specific Relief Act, does not bar this suit as the plaintiff is admittedly not in possession of the property in suit.
3. Was the property in suit validly dedicated; if so, when?
4. Have the plaintiffs any locus standi to bring the suit?
5. Is the suit within time?
6. Whether defendants are estopped from questioning the validity or the factum of trust?
7. Have defendants, Mangla and Dal Chand, made any improvements in the property in suit; if so, how does this question affect the case?
8. Should a declaration be made in plaintiff's favour as prayed for?
9. Relief.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge decided that S. 92, Civil P. C., did not bar the suit which was maintainable without the sanction required by that section. He held it proved that there had been a valid dedication of the property some time before 1875, when Parbhu Dayal died, that the object of the trust created was the maintenance of a public drinking place, that the suit was within time, and that the plaintiff was a person interested in the trust and competent to sustain the action. He also held that Saran Das and Gobind Dayal were estopped from claiming that the property was not wakf by their previous conduct in procuring its release from attachment by the decision in the insolvency proceedings and that Mangla and Dal Chand had failed to prove that they were entitled to compensation for improvements. He dismissed the suit, however, on the ground that S. 42, Specific Relief Act, forbade the grant of a mere declaration as the plaintiff omitted to ask for further relief which he was able to seek. Against this decision the plaintiff Ram Rup has appealed. It is contended before us by Mr. Kishan Dayal on behalf of the appellant that the lower Court's decision that S. 42, Specific Relief Act, is a bar to the suit is erroneous. It is not seriously contended before us that a suit for a declaration that the property in suit is wakf requires the sanction of the Collector under S. 92, Civil P. C. The view expressed by the Allahabad Court in 67 I C 659 (1) that all suits founded upon any breach of trust for public purposes of a charitable nature irrespective of the relief sought must be brought in accordance with the provisions of that section was definitely rejected by the Privy Council in 55 Cal 519 (2). The judgments of the Punjab Chief Court and this Court have consistently followed the principle that persons intended to benefit under a trust are interested in its maintenance and are competent to sue for a declaration to the effect that a property is wakf and may do so without the sanction required by S. 92, Civil P. C.: see for instance 66 P R 1892 (3), 2 L L J 457 (4), 1929 Lah 740 (5) and 8 Lah 111 (6).

The Subordinate Judge in support of his decision that S. 42, Specific Relief Act, precludes the grant of a decree in this case has relied upon 1928 Rang 143 (7). In that case, however, the Court found that it was open to the plaintiffs to pray for any one of the reliefs mentioned in sub-s. (1) of S. 92, Civil P. C. That judgment was dissented from by the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, in 1934 Nag 277 (8), where it was pointed out that until the declaration sought for had been obtained, a suit could not be brought under S. 92, as the defendants denied the existence of the alleged trust. The same reasoning is applicable in the present case. Clearly the plaintiff, as a resident of the Sabzi Mandi quarter, and one for whose benefit the alleged trust had been created, claimed a right in the suit property, and this right the defendants were interested to deny and did deny. He was therefore entitled to sue for a declaration under S. 42, Specific Relief Act. The proviso to the section will not in this case preclude the passing of a decree. The plaintiff cannot ask for possession, for he is not entitled to possession, not being a trustee. Nor can he ask for any relief under S. 92 (1) until he establishes that the property is a trust. Obviously, he cannot ask for a mandatory order against the vendees, nor can the other defendants be compelled to maintain a piao while disclaiming any obligation as trustees. It is true that the plaintiff might properly have asked expressly for a declaration that the alienation by Mt. Basanti was invalid, but such a declaration would not be a relief distinct from the declaration for which the plaintiff has expressly sued. A declaration that the suit property was wakf and not the private property of the defendants must of necessity itself invalidate the alienation.

It follows that the appellant was entitled to a decree on the Subordinate Judge's findings that the property was wakf and the suit was not barred by limitation. It is contended, however, by counsel for the respondents that the finding that the property was the subject of a trust was wrong. Mr. Mehr Chand's argument which is adopted by counsel for the vendees Mangla and Dal Chand, is that the oral evidence is wholly discrepant and unreliable and that there is no satisfactory direct evidence to prove when and for what exact purpose the alleged trust was created and that in the circumstances of this case no evidential value could be attached to the admissions by the members of Prabhu Dayal's family which admissions ought to have been disregarded.

8. Krishna Vithoba Sali v. Shriram Tukaram, 1934 Nag 277=153 I C 496.

It is true that the oral evidence is mostly of a worthless description. The only piece of it to which any weight can be attached is the statement of Saran Dayal himself as D. W. 9, that a piao used to exist as alleged by the plaintiff and his witnesses. It is also true that the admissions of Din Dayal and Saran Dayal, that the property was wakf were made for their own purpose, and that their conduct between 1903 and 1926 has not always been consistent with the existence of the alleged trust. In 1923 Jai Dayal mortgaged a part of the property. He died in 1926 and in the same year Saran Dayal and Gobind Dayal sued Mt. Basanti and the mortgagees for a declaration that the property was a public trust, and in the alternative for possession of their share by partition. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit decided that the property was private of the family and passed a decree for partition. Basanti alone appealed, but the appeal was compromised in the High Court and the decree was not executed. Ram Pershad sued on his mortgage and was granted a decree against Basanti for sale of the property. Basanti was permitted to sell it privately and effected the sale in favour of Mangla and Dal Chand. Saran Dayal and Gobind Dayal filed a suit contesting the sale, during the pendency of which Basanti died, and on 9th January 1932, the case was compromised, Saran Dayal and Gobind Dial taking Rs. 700 from the vendees and allowing their suit to be dismissed. It is argued that the decision in the suit of 1926 was final and settled the question whether the property was or was not the subject of a valid trust. That decision will not however, bind the present plaintiff and was superseded by a compromise of the terms of which we are not aware.

After giving careful consideration to all the evidence, I am of opinion, that it justified the decision of the lower Court that the property was wakf, although there is no contemporary documentary evidence of its creation or its purpose.

For the creation of a valid wakf, no writing is required in this province. That there did exist a wakf administered by Prabhu Dayal's successors is, in my opinion, proved by the manner in which the accounts relating to this property had been kept, as reported by the Commissioner appointed by the Insolvency Court in 1903 for a period during which the family is not shown to have had any motive for creating false evidence about the matter. The fact that when Jai Dayal, Din Dayal and Shambhu Dayal petitioned to be adjudicated insolvent, they omitted this building from the list of their property, is also important and the decision of the Insolvency Court, that it was wakf and not their private property, is relevant and good evidence on the point. The admissions of Mt. Chui in 1902, Jai Dayal in 1903 and of Saran Dayal and Gobind Dayal in 1926, are also substantive evidence supporting the plaintiff's case. All this evidence satisfies me that there had been a dedication of the building in suit for the purpose of a public charity and in my opinion justifies a presumption that the dedication was effective and valid. On this finding it becomes unnecessary to go into the question whether Saran Dayal and Gobind Dayal were estopped from questioning the fact or validity of the dedication.

The vendee defendants had notice of the claim that the property they purchased was the subject of the trust, for with their sale-deed they were given a copy of the Commissioner's report of 21st February 1903, and their Counsel admits that he cannot contend that his clients are bona fide purchasers without notice. Nor is he able to show that they have proved what amount they had spent on improving the property. Neither of them has come into the witness-box and all they have put forward in proof of the alleged expenditure is an estimate of the present value of the building. Their claim was therefore rightly dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. The result is that this appeal is accepted, the judgment appealed against is set aside and the plaintiff is granted the decree he seeks with costs throughout.

Sale, J.—In execution of a decree for Rs. 97,476 with costs, against Kirpa Ram insolvent, the Amritsar National Bank in liquidation attached, as the property of the judgment-debtor, 94 bighas of agricultural land and three houses bearing Nos 980, 981 and 1081. This property had been the subject of a gift made by Kirpa Ram to his wife Mt. Malan on 22nd May 1924. By a sale deed dated 6th January 1927 Mt. Malan sold houses Nos. 980 and 981 to Durga Das. As regards house No. 1081 Mt. Malan held under this deed of gift a half share which by a deed dated 7th January 1927 she mortgaged with possession to her husband's brother Ram Rakha Mal who already claimed ownership of the other half of this house on a partition from Hira Lal, the third brother. The attachment of this property led to separate objections by Mt. Malan, Durga Das and Ram Rakha Mal. The objections of Mt. Malan and Durga Das were allowed by the executing Court and the Bank in liquidation instituted a declaratory suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., in respect of the land and houses Nos. 980 and 981. The objections of Ram Rakha Mal were dismissed and he instituted a similar suit in respect of house No. 1081.

The trial Court has held that the gift by Kirpa Ram in favour of Mt. Malan on 22nd May 1924 was not genuine but a sham transaction intended merely to defeat and defraud the claims of Kirpa Ram's creditors and as such is void against the Bank. As regards the sale to Durga Das the trial Court held that it was for consideration; while the validity of the mortgage in favour of Ram Rakha Mal was not in contest; but in view of the finding that the gift by Kirpa Ram in favour of Mt. Malan was void, the trial Court held that Mt. Malan had no title to sell or mortgage any of the property and found throughout in favour of the Bank. From these decisions Mt. Malan and Durga Das have preferred appeals Nos. 1275 and 1276 of 1929 while Ram Rakha Mal has preferred Appeal No. 1402 of 1929. These three appeals can be conveniently decided by the same judgment. It is material here to state the facts leading up to the decree obtained by the Amritsar National Bank in liquidation, the execution of which has given rise to the present suits. On 26th August 1918 S. Balwant Singh was alleged to have executed a pronote for Rs. 40,000 in favour of Kirpa Ram who, on 26th July 1922, endorsed it to the Amritsar National Bank. The Bank issued notice to S. Balwant Singh who immediately repudiated the pronote as a forgery. Subsequently, in May 1923, the Bank went into liquidation and on 31st July 1923 the liquidators served Kirpa Ram as the endorser of the pronote with a notice of demand. This notice was followed by a suit instituted by the Bank in liquidation on the pronote against Kirpa Ram and Balwant Singh. As against Balwant Singh the claim was dismissed; but the suit was decreed against Kirpa Ram on 20th October 1926, the decree being confirmed on appeal by a Division Bench of this Court on 18th March 1935.

It was held in this suit both by the trial Court and by the High Court in appeal that though there was no proof that the pronote had been executed by Balwant Singh for consideration, it had been transferred for valid consideration by Kirpa Ram to the Bank, the consideration being a fixed deposit receipt for Rs. 40,000 bearing interest at six percent per annum. The main point for determination, common to all these appeals, is the validity of Kirpa Ram's gift to his wife Mt. Malan in May 1924 and its effect on the title of Mt. Malan, and of Durga Das and Ram Rakha Mal, who claim through her. But in the course of his arguments on behalf of Mt. Malan Mr. Sethi also urged that the suit by the Bank in liquidation, in respect of the landed property in Mt. Malan's possession, is not competent and before considering the validity of the gift to Mt. Malan it is necessary to decide this objection. Kirpa Ram was on his own petition adjudicated insolvent on 21st March 1928, and Mr. Sethi urges that the suit by the Bank in liquidation, which was instituted on 29th April 1928, (that is after Kirpa Ram's adjudication order) was not competent in the absence of permission by the Insolvency Court under S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act. It was objected on behalf of the Bank that this was a new point not raised either in the Court below or in the grounds of appeal, but was agitated for the first time in arguments. So far as the suit by the Bank is concerned, I am of opinion that Mr. Sethi has attempted to agitate a new point in appeal. In the lower Court's judgment at p. 39 of the paper-book relating to Mt. Malan Devi's case the following passage occurs :

The Amritsar National Bank is under liquidation, and it is further pleaded on their behalf that the suit did not lie without the sanction of the Insolvency Court. My learned predecessor, Pt. Devi Dayal Joshi, by his order dated 4th May 1928, decided the last mentioned plea holding that as Kirpa Ram was adjudicated an insolvent after the institution of the suit sanction of the Insolvency Court was not necessary.

In this paragraph the Senior Sub-Judge was dealing with the case of Ram Rakha Mal v. the Official Receiver of the Amritsar National Bank in liquidation. It is a fact that in Ram Rakha Mal's case, which was instituted on 3rd December 1927, (that is before the adjudication of Kirpa Ram as insolvent), an objection was taken on behalf of the Amritsar National Bank in liquidation that Ram Rakha Mal could not institute his suit against the Official Receiver without the permission of the Insolvency Court. The Sub-Judge then in charge of the case rejected this preliminary objection on the ground that as Ram Rakha Mal, the plaintiff, was not a creditor the case was not governed by the provisions of S. 28, Insolvency Act, which only applies to suits brought by creditors with respect to debts provable by them and that, in any case, the provisions of S. 28, so far as they render the leave of the Insolvency Court essential, came into effect only after the order of adjudication, whereas the suit had been commenced before the order was passed. So far as the suit brought by the Amritsar National Bank against Mt. Malan Devi is concerned I am satisfied that no objection was taken in the lower Court either in issues or in arguments, to the effect that the permission of the Insolvency Court was a condition precedent to the institution of the suit. Nor has this point been taken in the grounds of appeal. In point of fact, as would appear from an order of the Insolvency Judge printed at p. 67 of Mt. Malan Devi's paper-book, an application was made by the Amritsar National Bank in liquidation under S. 28, Insolvency Act and permission was duly granted to implead the Official Receiver as a party. This order by the Insolvency Judge can only mean that the Insolvency Court did give permission for the suit to proceed. But Mr. Sethi goes further and urges that such leave is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit and that it should have been obtained before the institution of the suit. In support of his arguments Mr. Sethi relies mainly on 42 Mad 684 (1) and 9 Rang 7 (2). As a matter of fact, there is a conflict of authority on this point; and if Mr. Sethi had raised this defence in the lower Court it would have been necessary to consider in some detail the rulings for and against this proposition. But it is clear that this defence was not raised in the lower Court, nor was it mentioned in the grounds of appeal and in these circumstances I consider that the objection must be deemed to have been waived. The authority for this view is 1929 Mad 323 (3), Letters Patent appeal (which also distinguishes 42 Mad 684 (1), on which Mr. Sethi has relied), wherein it was held that where a defence as to want of leave under a section corresponding to S. 428, Provincial Insolvency Act, is not specifically taken in the lower Court the proper order is to rule that the objection has been waived and cannot be pressed later:

1. Vasudeva Kamath v. Lakshminarayana Rao, 1919 Mad 167=52 I O 442=42 Mad 684=36 M L J 453.
2. Mahomed Adjum v. E. M. Chettyar Firm, 1930 Rang 317=128 I O 382=9 Rang 7.
3. Subramanniam v. Narasimham, 1929 Mad 323 =119 I O 46=56 M L J 489.

There is not really any inherent want of jurisdiction. The prohibition is merely a restraint on the exercise of jurisdiction, and is a matter of procedure.

With this view, I agree; without, therefore, deciding whether a suit instituted without permission can be validated by obtaining permission subsequently, I would hold that the objection must be deemed to have been waived in the present case. Turning now to the validity of the gift by Kirpa Ram to his wife in May 1924, it has been urged in appeal that the object which Kirpa Ram had in view in making the gift was to provide for his wife and two sets of sons in the face of a family dispute and that no intention to defeat or defraud his creditors can be inferred. There is undoubtedly evidence that prior to this gift there had been a family dispute which culminated in a reference to arbitration and an award given on 17th October 1923 on which a decree was passed on 25th June 1924. The trial Court finds, however, that this award was collusive and that, in any case, the points in dispute, if any, were settled by the award and that Kirpa Ram could have had no motive, other than to defeat his creditors, in making another settlement on 27th May 1924 by which he gifted all his immovable property to his wife. With this view I am in agreement. It is undeniable that Kirpa Ram was in debt in May 1924. Besides the claim by the Amritsar National Bank in liquidation (subsequently decreed) he was indebted to the Jain Bank for Rs. 3,000. It is true that no money passed between the Amritsar National Bank and Kirpa Ram, on the pronote, but he had been granted by the Bank in consideration thereof a fixed deposit receipt for Rupees 40,000 (a sum considerably less than the amount then due on the face value of the pronote). Since the defendant Bank had recently gone into liquidation Kirpa Ram must even in 1924 have had a shrewd idea that he might be held liable to the Bank for a much larger sum than he could hope ever to recover from the Bank. His assets and liabilities at the time of his adjudication in 1928 shew that it was mainly this heavy liability to the Amritsar National Bank (in liquidation) which made him insolvent. These considerations taken in conjunction with the admitted fact that by the gift in 1924 which followed a demand from the Amritsar National Bank on the pro-note he alienated all his immovable property, lead me to hold that his intention in making this gift was in fact to defeat and delay his creditors and I have no doubt that his wife Mt. Malan Devi was a party to this fraud.

The question next arises whether in these circumstances this gift was, as the lower Court has held, void ab initio or merely voidable. It is not denied that a gift was in fact made in 1924. There is evidence that this gift was followed by a mutation of the land in favour of Mt. Malan Devi and that a lease deed of this land also was subsequently executed in her favour by a tenant. In these circumstances, I do not agree with the view of the trial Court that the gift was a sham transaction and void ab initio. But there was a gift; but as the intention of both parties to the gift was to defeat and delay Kirpa Ram's creditor, it is clear that the gift is voidable at the instance of the creditor, and that the transferees from Mt. Malan Devi must suffer unless protected under S. 53, T. P. Act. Turning now to the case of the transferees, the trial Court has found and the finding has not been contested in appeal that the sale to Durga Das was for consideration. Similarly the validity of the mortgage of another part of the gifted property to Ram Rakha Mal has not been contested. In these circumstances, it is fair to presume that the transferees in each case took all reasonable care and acted throughout in good faith. It follows therefore that both transferees Durga Das and Ram Rakha Mal are protected by the provision in S. 53, T. P. Act, to the effect that nothing shall impair the rights of a transferee in good faith and for consideration.

I am of opinion therefore that both Durga Das and Ram Rakha Mal must succeed in their objection to the attachment of the property in their possession. So far as Ram Rakha Mal is concerned it is true that he acquired only a half of house No. 1081 from Mt. Malan Devi, but there is un rebutted evidence on the record that the remaining half of the house came to him by partition from his brother Hira Lal who had himself inherited this half from his father Moti Ram (vide Hira Lal, P. W. 3, at p. 24, of Ram Rakha Mal's paper-book). The title of Ram Rakha Mal as the son of Moti Ram to a portion of this house by inheritance was not denied in the lower Court and in rejecting the evidence of the Cantonment Register in proof of their title the lower Court was led by special pleading into establishing a case which was not the case of the respondent. It is clear that all three brothers Kirpa Ram, Ram Rakha Mal and Hira Lal had a share in house 1081. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of Hira Lal that his share had gone to Ram Rakha Mal by partition. Kirpa Ram gifted his half to his wife Mt. Malan Devi. The validity of the mortgage of this house to Ram Rakha Mal has not been contested. In these circumstances I consider that Ram Rakha Mal has established his claim that the whole house should be released from attachment.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal of Ram Rakha Mal, set aside the order of the lower Court and grant him a declaratory decree with costs. I would similarly accept the appeal of Durga Das, set aside the declaration granted to the Amritsar National Bank (in liquidation) in respect of the property sold to him and, dismissing the Bank's suit pro tanto direct the release from attachment of this property with costs. As regards the land gifted to Mt. Malan Devi, I am of opinion that the Bank must succeed. I have given reasons for holding that Mt. Malan Devi in accepting the gift was a party to a fraud perpetrated by her husband Kirpa Ram to defeat and delay the creditors. The gift is voidable at the instance of the creditors under S. 53, T. P. Act, and the present declaratory suit instituted by the Bank must be deemed to have the effect of avoiding it. In respect, therefore, of 94 bighas of agricultural land, I would dismiss the appeal of Mt. Malan Devi and confirm the Bank's decree. In the circumstances of the case I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Jai Lal. J.—I agree.

ADDISON AND DIN MOHAMMAD, JJ.

Mohammad Ali and another—Defendants—Appellants.

v.

Ghulam Nabi—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 48 of 1932,
Decided on 13th December 1934,

(a) Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act (2 of 1913), S. 12.—Co-sharer mortgagors—Co-mortgagor redeeming property—Other co-sharer proceeding under the Act—Co-sharer held not mortgagee and he could not claim adverse possession.

Plaintiff and defendant were co-mortgagors of a plot of land. Plaintiff redeemed the mortgage and was in possession of the land to the exclusion of the defendant. Defendant on two occasions made infructuous attempts to regain that land under Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act. In partition proceedings of the land between the parties, the defendant claimed ownership of the land contending that the plaintiff was not entitled to deny his ownership of the land under law, and also that he had gained a title by adverse possession against the plaintiff.

Held: that there could be no question of adverse possession between co-sharers:

Held also: that the defendant could not under any circumstances be regarded as a mortgagee so as to attract the operation of Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act. [P 291 C 1]

(b) Adverse possession—One co-sharer defraying charge on property—Such co-sharer denying right of others for joint possession until they pay their share of charge—Such denial implies recognition of title when proportionate charge is paid and so cannot amount to adverse possession.

A co-sharer who purely denies the right of the other co-sharer to enter into joint possession until they have paid to him their share of the charge of the property which he had defrayed should not be considered to hold "adversely" to the others. Such denial does not obviously imply any repudiation of the title of the other co-sharers but rather implies willingness to recognise their title provided the charge in question is defrayed: 1923 Lah 311 and 1926 Lah 238, Dissent.; 1931 Lah 744, Foll. [P 291 C 2]

(c) Appeal—Judgment appealed from not referring to point of adverse possession—Inference is of its having been given up and cannot be allowed to be raised.

Where the point of adverse possession does not appear in the judgment under appeal, it should be taken to have been given up there and cannot be allowed to be raised: 1924 Lah 107, Foll. [P 291 C 2]

S. L. Puri for Mukand Lal Puri—for Appellants.

Abdul Karim—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of a Judge of this Court. The material facts are these. The appellants and the respondent were co-mortgagors of a plot of land measuring 27 kanals, 19 marlas. Some time before 1914 the respondent redeemed the whole land and since then had been in possession to the exclusion of the appellants. In 1914 the appellants made an infructuous attempt under the Redemption of Mortgages Act, 1913, and again in 1928 they proceeded under same Act but failed. In 1929, when proceedings for the partition of land, including this area, commenced between the parties, the respondent claimed ownership of the area in dispute, mainly contending that the appellants were not entitled under the law to deny right of his ownership. He was referred to a civil Court. Both the trial Court and the District Judge dismissed his suit but on appeal the learned Judge of this Court came to the conclusion that the appellants having twice taken action under the Redemption of Mortgages Act and failed, could not be allowed to re-open the same matter in the present suit as an order passed by the Collector under S. 12, Redemption of Mortgages Act, was conclusive between them. We are not, however inclined to agree with this view of the law.

In the first place, we are doubtful whether the respondent could, under any circumstances, be deemed to be a mortgagee of the land so as to attract the operation of the Redemption of Mortgages Act, his legal position being merely that of a charge-holder. Secondly, all that the appellants claimed from the Revenue authorities under the provisions of the Redemption of Mortgages Act was an adjudication of the rights of co-mortgagors inter se and all that the Revenue authorities decided was, that such complicated questions would be better decided in a regular suit. We have, therefore no hesitation in holding that the decision of the learned Judge was erroneous in law. It was further strenuously contended before us that the respondent had acquired a good title by prescription, inasmuch as on both the previous occasions before the Collector, he had asserted a title which was hostile to the appellants and as the first occasion when this was done was in 1914 and as the appellants took no steps within time to regain the possession of the land from the respondent, their rights in the land in suit had been extinguished. In support of this contention, reliance was placed on 71 I C 847 (1) and 92 I C 980 (2). But both these decisions have been dissented from by a Bench of this Court in 135 I C 506 (3), which in our view lays down the correct law on the point. As remarked by the learned Judges in that case.

1. Wazir v. Girdhari, 1923 Lah 811=71 I C 847.
3. Jhandu v. Nur Mohammad, 1931 Lah 744=135 I C 506=12 Lah 671=32 P L R 622.

It is really difficult to understand why a co-sharer who purely denies the right of the other co-sharer to enter into joint possession until they have paid to him their share of the charge of the property which he had defrayed should be considered to hold "adversely" to the others. Such denial does not obviously imply any repudiation of the title of the other co-sharers but rather implies willingness to recognise their title provided the charge in question is defrayed.

Besides, the point of adverse possession does not appear in the judgment under appeal and should be taken to have been given up there. If any authority is needed for this proposition, reference may be made to 77 I C 398 (4). We therefore accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit so far as it relates to 27 kanals 19 marlas of land, entered in khatas Nos. 42 and 43. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellants before us.

Second Appeal No. 1295 of 1935, Decided on 30th October 1935.

(a) Partition Act (1893), S. 4—Undivided family does not mean only joint Hindu family—Person belonging to undivided family can claim advantage of S. 4.

Words "an undivided family" in S. 4 are perfectly clear and they are not confined to a joint Hindu family. They simply connote that there is a family the members of which have not divided their property. Where a person belongs to an undivided family and owns half a share in the house in dispute, and this share has not yet been divided, the person should be permitted to take advantage of the provisions of S. 4, Partition Act: 30 All 324 (F B); 12 C L J 525 and 1934 Cal 202, Foll. [P 292 C 2]

(b) Partition Act (1893), S. 4—"Transferee" includes auction purchaser—S. 4 affects auction purchaser also.

The word 'transfer' is of the very widest import and it is not confined only to a transferee from the judgment-debtor. In fact, on general principles, the auction purchaser is a transferee of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and his position is not outside the operation of S. 4, Partition Act. [P 293 C 1]

Muhammad Sharif—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal, arising out of a suit for possession by partition of half a share in a certain house. The house originally belonged to four brothers, namely, Nathu Ram, Labhu Ram, Mela Ram and Dogar. Mela

Ram and Dogar died issueless and the house became the property of their surviving brothers, Nathu Ram and Labhu Ram, in equal shares. Nathu Ram died and Mt. Gangi, his daughter, succeeded him. In execution of a decree, Labhu Ram's half share in the house was put up for sale and purchased by Atma Ram on 24th June 1933. The sale was confirmed on 27th March 1934. On the strength of the sale Atma Ram brought a suit for possession by partition of half a share in the house. In Para. (1), the plaintiff clearly stated that he had purchased half a share in the house on 24th June 1933 at the auction sale and had obtained formal possession. In para. (2) the plaintiff admitted that defendant 1, namely, Mt. Gangi, was the proprietor of half a share and that in this way the plaintiff and defendant 1 became owners and possessors of the house in two moieties. The decree-holder, Rattan Lal, and Labhu Ram, judgment-debtor, were originally impleaded as defendants but were subsequently given up by the plaintiff.

Mt. Gangi, defendant 1, pleaded that the house could not be partitioned in view of the provisions of S. 4, Partition Act (Act 4 of 1893). She further pleaded that she had effected certain improvements and was entitled to be reimbursed for the costs she had thus incurred. There was also a plea that the suit could not proceed in the absence of the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder who had been given up by the plaintiff. This last plea was given up. The trial Court held that no improvements had been proved and that the defendant Mt. Gangi could not invoke in aid the provisions of S. 4, Partition Act, inasmuch as the house did not belong to an undivided family as contemplated by that section. It accordingly granted the plaintiff a preliminary decree for the partition.

Mt. Gangi went up in appeal and the learned District Judge took up an entirely new line of reasoning and held that Mt. Gangi was not a share-holder in the house in question as the whole property in the house on the death of Nathu Ram must be taken to have devolved upon Labhu Ram by the rule of survivorship. He held in the alternative that if Labhu Ram and Nathu Ram had separated, the provisions of S. 4, Partition Act, could hardly be applied because the family no longer remained undivided. He also held that there was no evidence to support the plea raised by Mt. Gangi that she had executed certain improvements on the house in suit. The District Judge on these findings confirmed the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the appeal. I may note in passing that the District Judge has used the unscientific expression reject for "dismiss." This should be avoided. Mt. Gangi has come up to this Court in second appeal. In ground No. 2 of the memorandum of appeal it was rightly pointed out that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had himself distinctly admitted the title of Mt. Gangi to the extent of half a share in the house, the District Judge was in error in holding that she had no title and was in possession only by sufferance. I have already given the substance of paras. 1 and 2 in which the plaintiff had clearly admitted that Mt. Gangi was the owner and in possession of half a share in the house. On this finding it was unnecessary to enter into the question as to whether the family consisting of Labhu Ram and Nathu Ram was joint or divided.

The pleadings of the parties constitute the foundation of the case and, in view of the allegations contained in the plaint the possession of Mt. Gangi as a co-sharer to the extent of half a share in the house is unassailable. This being so, the whole question is, whether, under the circumstances, she is entitled to claim the benefit of the rule of law contained in S. 4, Partition Act. There are two important expressions in S. 4, Partition Act, which require consideration. In the first place we have to see whether the house belongs to "an undivided family." These words are perfectly clear and they are not confined to a joint Hindu family. They simply connote that there is a family the members of which have not divided their property. Such is the case before us. Mt. Gangi undoubtedly belongs to the family of Labhu Ram and owns half a share in the house in question, and this share has not yet been divided. Therefore she can ask the Court that she should be permitted to buy the share of the plaintiff. There is ample authority in support of this view, but I would only refer to the Full Bench decision in 30 All 324 (1).

This case was followed in two subsequent decisions of the Calcutta High Court in 12 C L J 525 (2) and 1934 Cal 202 (3). Secondly, it was argued by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that the plaintiff, being an auction purchaser, cannot be treated as a person to whom a share in the house has been transferred within the meaning of S. 4, Partition Act. The argument is that the plaintiff had purchased the house at a Court sale and the expression "transferred" was confined only to a voluntary sale which had been effected by means of a written conveyance. I do not appreciate this distinction which is sought to be drawn by the learned counsel. The word 'transfer' is of the very widest import and I do not think it is confined only to a transferee from the judgment-debtor. In fact, on general principles, the auction purchaser is a transferee of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and his position is not outside the operation of S. 4, Partition Act.

1. Sultan Begum v. Debi Prasad, (1903) 30 All 324=5 A L J 352=1908 A W N 126 (F B).

No arguments have been addressed to me on the question of improvement. The result therefore is that I allow the appeal, and setting aside the judgments of the two Courts below, hold that the defendant Mt. Gangi is entitled to claim the benefit of S. 4, Partition Act. I therefore remand the case to the trial Court under the provisions of O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., with directions to dispose of the case according to law giving the plaintiff the benefit of the provisions of S. 4, Partition Act. The defendant-appellant shall be entitled to refund of the court-fee paid in this Court. In view of the fact that the plaintiff came with a straightforward claim into Court, and it was the learned Judges who went on a wrong track, I order that the parties bear their own costs throughout. The question of costs after remand is left open.

Rattan Chand — Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No. 822 of 1935, (formerly Civil Appeal No. 1216 of 1935), Decided on 28th October 1935.

(a) Appeal—Proper presentation—Claim decreed only in part—Both parties appealing—Lower appellate Court dismissing appeal by plaintiff while allowing appeal by defendant thus dismissing plaintiff's claim in entirety—Plaintiff appealing against dismissal of his appeal in lower Court but filing copy of decree of defendant's appeal in lower Court—Held there was no proper presentation of appeal under O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C.

A person filed a suit against another for recovery of certain money advanced and for recovery of damages for breach of a contract. His suit was decreed only for recovery of advance while claim for damages was dismissed. He appealed against this dismissal of his claim for damages. The defendant appealed against the decree against him for recovery. Both appeals were separately numbered and the lower appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and allowed the defendant's appeal thus dismissing the plaintiff's claim entirely. The plaintiff came in second appeal and along with his memorandum of appeal he filed a copy of the decree of the lower appellate Court where the defendant was an appellant and not the decree in appeal by him which was really appealed from.

Held: that there was no proper presentation of second appeal inasmuch as the plaintiff should have appealed against a decree dismissing his appeal under O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., to the lower Court and should have filed a decree of that appeal [P 294 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908) S. 102 — Cases covered under S. 102—Court is not in favour of entertaining revisions.

As a rule, the Court is not in favour of entertaining revisions from orders of the lower appellate Courts in cases which are covered by S. 102, Civil P. C. These orders are intended by the Legislature to be final and to allow an appeal against such orders amounts to circumventing the policy of the Legislature [P 294 C 2]

Where a second appeal was filed from a suit of a Small Cause nature and the appeal was sought to be treated as a revision:

Held: that it could not be so treated. [P 294 C 2]

Chiranjiva Lal Aggarwal—for Petnr.Hem Raj Mahajan—for Opp. Party.

Order.—The plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 200, Rs. 150 being the amount of damages claimed for the breach of a contract and Rs. 50 representing the amount of earnest money which the plaintiff had paid to the defendant and of which the plaintiff wanted a refund. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit for Rs. 150 damages and decreed his claim for Rs. 50. Both parties filed appeals. The plaintiff's appeal was registered as No. 73 of 1935 and defendant's appeal as No. 44 of 1935. The lower appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and allowed the defendant's appeal with the result that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in toto. Two separate decrees were drawn up.

The decree in the plaintiff's appeal, No. 73 of 1935, was as follows :

It is ordered that the appeal be dismissed and the decree in this appeal to follow the one passed in cross Appeal No. 44 of 1935:

The decree in Appeal No. 44 of 1935 was as follows :

The appeal is accepted to this extent, that the decree of the lower Court decreeing plaintiff's suit is reversed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed.

The plaintiff came up to this Court and filed a petition of second appeal. Along with his memorandum of appeal he filed the decree of the lower appellate Court in Appeal No. 44 of 1935, which was the defendant's appeal, and not of his own Appeal No. 73 of 1935. It need hardly be stated that the decree of the lower appellate Court in Appeal No. 44 of 1935 contained the grounds of appeal which the defendant had filed in that Court and not those which were filed by the plaintiff in his appeal. The position of the parties as appellant and respondent in the decree in Appeal No. 44 of 1935 would not be the same as in the plaintiff's Appeal No. 73 of 1935 and would naturally be reversed. The decree in Appeal No. 73 of 1935 is not on the record. Mr. Hem Raj Mahajan, counsel for the respondent, has raised two preliminary objections. In the first place his objection is that there was no proper appeal because, under the terms of O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., the memo. of appeal should be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from. In the present case the copy of the decree which was really appealed from was in Appeal No. 73 of 1935 in which the plaintiff was the appellant and not the decree in Appeal No. 44 of 1935 in which the defendant was the appellant and the plaintiff the respondent. This being so there is no proper appeal in this Court and the preliminary objection prevails.

Another preliminary objection was raised by Mr. Hem Raj Mahajan for the respondent that the suit is for the recovery of a sum of money and was of a small cause nature and, therefore, no second appeal lay. This objection, too, seems to be well founded. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that the defendant had failed to carry out the terms of the contract into which he had entered with the plaintiff and for this reason the plaintiff has suffered damages and was also entitled to the refund of Rs. 50 which he had paid by way of earnest money. The defendant's plea was that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with his eyes open and had backed out of it without any legal justification and, therefore, he was not entitled to any damages or to the refund of the earnest money. The lower appellate Court has accepted the contention of the defendant and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto in appeal. In my opinion the suit was of a small cause nature and no second appeal lay. The learned Counsel for the appellant asked this Court to treat his petition of appeal as a revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. In the first place I am not, as a rule, in favour of entertaining revisions from the orders of the lower appellate Courts in cases which are covered by S. 102, Civil P. C. These orders are intended by the Legislature to be final and to allow an appeal against such orders amounts to circumventing the policy of the Legislature. In any event the judgment of the lower appellate Court appears to be correct and I am not disposed to disturb it in revision. The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 1056 of 1935, Decided on 21st October 1935.

(a) Criminal Trial—Cross-cases—Judgment—Two separate trials—Judgment only one document—Decisions separate and distinct—Findings in each based on evidence in each—Judgment in one case based on its own evidence—Procedure held not illegal and accused not prejudiced thereby.

There were two separate trials and two appeals therefrom before the Sessions Judge. The judgment however was one continuous document, but the decisions in the two cases were quite separate and distinct from each other. The findings in one case were not based on the evidence recorded in the other case. The judgment in one case was based upon its own oral and documentary evidence :

Held : that the procedure was not illegal and the accused was not prejudiced thereby : 1924 Lah 104; 1925 Lah 149; 1928 Lah 380 and 1933 Mad 367 (F B), Disting. [P 295 C 2 ; P 296 C 1]

(b) Defamation—Election campaign—Accused issuing poster against rival Barrister, headed "Hollowness of Mr.—'s capacity as Barrister is exposed"—Accused held not justified in giving publicity to rival's position as Barrister and calculated to lower him in public eye—Hence was not within Excep. 9 to S. 499, I. P. C.

In the course of an election campaign the accused issued a poster against his rival candidate who was a Barrister and which was titled "the hollowness of Mr.—'s capacity as a Barrister has been exposed."

Held: that the accused had no justification whatever in dragging his rival's position as a Barrister into the limelight of publicity in a language which amounted to a serious aspersion upon his professional status and was calculated to lower him in the eyes of the public as a Barrister. Hence the protection laid down in Excep. 9 to S. 499, I. P. C., could not be afforded to the accused: Harrison v. Bush, 5 El & Bl 344, Rel. on. [P 296 C 1, 2]

Order.—There was an election contest between R. B. L. Panna Lal and Mr. Tek Chand, both of whom were candidates for the membership of the Punjab Legislative Council. Mr. Tek Chand issued a poster on 5th March 1933 (Ex. P. G. 1). On 7th March 1933 R. B. L. Panna Lal issued and published, broadcast the poster Ex. P. G. which is the subject-matter of this prosecution. R. B. L. Panna Lal brought a criminal action against Mr. Tek Chand and L. Duni Chand, his father, on the basis of Ex. P. G. 1 on 28th March 1933. On 30th March 1933 Mr. Tek Chand and L. Duni Chand brought a criminal action against R. B. L. Panna Lal on the basis of the poster Ex. P. G. There were two separate trials, and by two separate judgments the trying Magistrate convicted both sets of accused persons and imposed sentences of fine upon them. Both sides appealed. The Sessions Judge acquitted Mr. Tek Chand and L. Duni Chand and upheld the conviction of R. B. L. Panna Lal and maintained the sentence of Rs. 1,000 fine which had been imposed upon him. R. B. L. Panna Lal has come to this Court in revision. The case was argued for the best part of two days. Counsel for the petitioner invited the attention of this Court to 4 Lah 376 (1), 1925 Lah 149 (2) and 1928 Lah 380

(3), and argued that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in hearing the two appeals, as his mind must have been prejudicially influenced in deciding the appeal of R. B. L. Panna Lal by the evidence and findings in the case in which an appeal had been filed on behalf of Mr. Tek Chand and Duni Chand. I do not think there is any force in this contention. 4 Lah 376 (1) was a case in which two Sessions trials, which arose out of two cross-riots, were in substance tried as one joint trial and only prosecution evidence in each case appeared on the record. Counsel for the parties were heard in both cases and the assessors who appear to have been common to the two cases were not asked to give their opinion until both cases had been closed. Only one set of findings was recorded in respect of both cases and ultimately one common judgment was delivered. In fact, there was a single trial to all intents and purposes. This procedure, which certainly is contrary to the law as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code, was disapproved by this Court in spite of the fact that both the counsel and the accused had given their consent to it. The matter came up before a Full Bench of the Madras High Court 56 Mad 159 (4). In this case also the Court had to consider the question of the desirability of the Sessions Judge hearing two cases separately with the assistance of different sets of assessors and afterwards pronouncing judgments in both. The Full Bench held that there was nothing objectionable in such a procedure so long as the Sessions Judge tried one case quite independently of the facts of the other.

They, however, emphasised that the trials must be separate, i. e., before different assessors and separate judgments delivered, and that the conclusions in each case must be founded on the evidence in each case. These cases, therefore, have nothing whatever to do with the present case. There were two separate trials before the Magistrate and there were two appeals before the Sessions Judge. Although the judgment is one continuous document, the decisions in the two cases are quite separate and distinct from each other. None of the findings in the present case is based upon the evidence recorded in the other case only. The judgment before me is a self-contained document and is based upon its own oral and documentary evidence. I therefore, overrule this objection. The document (Ex. P-G), which forms the basis of the prosecution runs as follows :

The hollowness of Mr. Tek Chand's capacity as a Barrister has been exposed. He has stooped to false and mean personal attacks. Mr. Tek Chand has issued a poster in Urdu in which he has made baseless and extremely filthy, false and mean attacks upon me. It may not be against the Congressite mentality of L. Duni Chand to take shares of a slaughter-house, but for me it is a question of Dharam (religion). I do not want to say anything more than this : that the abovesaid statement of Mr. Tek Chand is extremely odious and unfounded. Similar is the statement in which it has been said that I stopped the procession of the Vaish Conference in Ambala city, and so on and so forth.

The learned counsel for the petitioner admits that the statement is defamatory, but he relies upon Excep. 9 to S. 499, I. P. C. S. 105, Evidence Act, clearly lays down the general law on the subject, that the party who wants to take the benefit of a certain exception, must bring his case within the four corners of that exception, and the burden is upon him to do so. There cannot be any doubt that the heading: Mr. Tek Chand ki barristri ki pol khul gai means that the unsoundness of Mr. Tek Chand's knowledge or capacity as a Barrister has been exposed. This imputation undoubtedly is calculated to lower in the estimation of others the intellectual qualities and the aptitude for his profession as a Barrister in Mr. Tek Chand. Now coming to the exception which is invoked by the petitioner, it is important to note that it relates to private communications which one party makes in good faith to another for the protection of his own interest. In fact, this exception gives legislative sanction to the law as laid down by Lord Campbell in 5 El & Bl 344 (5), (not cited by any party) :

A communication made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, is privileged, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains crimimatory matter, which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable.

5. Harrison v. Bush, (1857) 5 El & Bl 344=25

"Duty" in this context is not confined to legal duty, but includes moral and social duties of imperfect obligation. Good faith is defined in S. 52, I. P. C., which says that :

Nothing is said to be done in good faith which is done or believed without due care or attention.

In the present case, in the course of the election campaign, the accused had no justification whatever in dragging Mr. Tek Chand's position as a Barrister into the limelight of publicity in a language which amounted to a serious aspersion upon his professional status and was calculated to lower him in the eyes of the public as a Barrister. The profession of a Barrister is a highly honourable one and to say that Mr. Tek Chand's position as a Barrister is hollow and has been exposed in a poster which was broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the constituency does not afford the protection laid down in Excep. 9 to S. 499, I. P. C. The rest of the poster consists of vulgar and abusive epithets, but I do not think that they are sufficient in themselves to be the foundation of a criminal prosecution. In my opinion, the order of the learned Sessions Judge was correct and the petitioner was rightly convicted. The sentence of the fine of Rs. 1,000 is, however, excessive. I think Mr. Tek Chand was only anxious to vindicate his character, and in this he has succeeded. Under all the circumstances I think that a fine of Rs. 250 would meet the ends of justice. With this modification the petition is dismissed. If the fine has been fully paid, the petitioner shall be entitled to a refund of the balance of Rs. 750.

Municipal Committee, Pindigheb and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 64 of 1935, Decided on 10th October 1935, from decree of Agha Haider, J., Lahore, D/- 4th March 1935.

(a) Municipality—Powers of—Municipality can exercise powers conferred on it by Act—Municipality cannot bind itself by contract beyond its scope.

Municipalities can exercise powers, but only those conferred on them by the Act by which they are constituted, or such as are necessary to the exercise of their corporate powers, the performance of their corporate duties, and the accomplishment of the purposes of their association. A Municipality cannot bind itself by any contract beyond the scope of its powers which are prescribed by statute or charter.

(b) Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911)—Ss 18, 56 (g) and 169 (g)—Powers of disposal given by these sections—Agreement restricting rights of Committee is ultra vires.

There is no provision in the Punjab Municipal Act giving the Municipal Committee other powers of disposal except as given by Ss. 18, 56 (g) and 169 (g) in respect of a public street or allowing it to contract with respect to its rights in public streets. So an agreement in dispute by which the committee acknowledges the maliks of a town to be the owners of the land adjacent to the public streets and that they will have rights to recover customary dues called haq buha (door tax) and that if the Municipal Committee leases it for consideration, the maliks will be entitled to a half share of the proceeds and that the Committee will have no power to transfer any part of the public streets or thoroughfares without consideration unless the maliks agree is null and void and ultra vires of the powers of the Committee.

Manohar Lal—for Appellants.

Malik Mohd. Amin—for Respondents 2 and 7.

Addison, J.—Three plaintiffs, who are residents of Pindigheb in Attock District, brought a suit against the Municipal Committee of Pindigheb as defendant 1, and defendants 2 to 7, who are maliks of the town. Defendant 2 was also, at the time when the agreement in dispute was entered into between the Municipal Committee and the maliks, the Secretary of the Municipality. The agreement in dispute is dated 18th July 1929. By this agreement the Committee acknowledged the maliks to be the owners of the land adjacent to the public streets and that they would have rights to recover customary dues called 'haq buha' (door tax). It was further stipulated that if the Municipal Committee leased a portion of a public street or in any other way transferred it for consideration, the maliks would be entitled to a half share of the proceeds. It was also provided that the Committee would have no power to transfer any part of the public streets or thoroughfares without consideration unless the maliks agreed, etc.

The plaintiffs considered that this agreement was ultra vires and void and against the interests of the residents of the town and they have accordingly brought the present suit to get it set aside. They failed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and their appeal to the District Judge also failed. A second appeal to this Court was dismissed and against the decision of the learned Judge, who decided the second appeal, this Letters Patent appeal has been admitted. Reliance was placed upon S. 48 (1), Punjab Municipal Act, which runs as follows :

If any member, officer or servant of a Committee or of a joint Committee, without the previous permission in writing of the Commissioner voluntarily renders himself interested in any contract made with that Committee, or if within one month of his becoming interested in any such contract he neither resigns nor obtains the permission in writing of the Commissioner for his remaining a member, officer or servant of the Committee in spite of his interest in such contract, he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under S. 168, I. P. C.

This made it an offence for defendant 2, who was then the Secretary of the Municipality, to enter into such a contract without the previous permission in writing of the Commissioner and it is not disputed that this permission has never been given. As however such a contract was not specifically declared void, the learned Judge, who heard the second appeal, was of the opinion that it could not be altogether ultra vires and that was his main reason for dismissing the appeal. This however is not the way to look at cases of this description. A Municipal Corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers only : 1. Those granted in express words under the statute or charter creating it. 2. Those necessarily implied in or incidental to powers expressly granted. And 3. those essential to the accomplishment of the declared objects of the Municipality, not simply convenient, but indispensable. If there is any doubt as to whether the power exists, the power is denied by the Courts. Every act must be authorized by the statute or charter creating it or by some legislative Act applicable thereto. In other words Municipalities can exercise no powers but those conferred on them by the Act by which they are constituted, or such as are necessary to the exercise of their corporate powers, the performance of their corporate duties, and the accomplishment of the purposes of their association. A Municipality cannot bind itself by any contract beyond the scope of its powers which are prescribed by statute or charter. By reason of S. 18, Punjab Municipal Act, every committee shall have power, subject to the provisions of the Act or of any rules made thereunder, to transfer any property held by it and to contract and to do all other things necessary for the purposes of its constitution.

Under the provisions of S. 56 (g), Punjab Municipal Act, all public streets and the pavements, stones and other materials thereof, and trees growing on and erections, materials, implements and things provided for, on such streets, shall vest in and are under the control of the Committee to be held and applied by it for the purposes of the Act; but in no other way as already stated. Under S. 169 (g) the Committee may, subject to the provisions of any rule, lease, sell or otherwise dispose of any land used by the Committee for a public street and no longer required therefor. There is no other provision in the Act giving the Committee other powers of disposal in respect of a public street or allowing it to contract with respect to its rights in public streets. It follows from the principle enunciated that the agreement in question is null and void and ultra vires of the powers of the Committee. We accordingly accept this appeal with costs throughout and grant the plaintiffs a decree for: (1). A declaration to the effect that the agreement dated 18th July 1929 is null and void and incapable of being acted upon in any way; and (2). a permanent injunction to issue against defendants 2 to 7 not to accept any benefit under the agreement and against defendant 1 not to give any benefit to them thereunder.

BHIDE AND CURRIE, JJ.

Committee of Management for Gurdwara Nankana Sahib—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Hira Dass, Chela of Gobind Das—Defendant—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 773 of 1932, Decided on 29th October 1935, from decree of Sukh Gurdwaras Tribunal, Lahore, D/- 18th December 1931.

(a) Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925), S. 25-A (as amended by S. 4 of Punjab Act 3 of 1930)—Section introduced to implement decisions reached by Tribunals—Successful party can lodge suit for possession.

The obvious intention of the legislature in introducing S. 4 of the Sikh Gurdwaras (Amendment) Act (3 of 1930) was that a successful party as soon as the decision was reached by the tribunal would be at liberty to sue for possession. The whole section was introduced owing to the difficulty that had been experienced owing to the lack of any provision in the original Act for implementing the decisions reached by the tribunal in cases under Ss 5 and 10 of the Act. S. 25-A was introduced to provide a cheap and speedy method of giving effect to the decisions of the Tribunal. It is obvious that the proper course for the successful party would be to lodge his suit and if the opposite party had preferred an appeal in the High Court, for that party to obtain an order staying the proceedings, if necessary. [P 299 C 1, 2]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Courts should not discover intention of Legislature but should endeavour to interpret the Act.

It is not for the Court to try to discover what the intention of the legislature is when the Act is passed. Courts have only to deal with the clear language of the Act as passed and endeavour to interpret it. The business of the interpreter is not to improve the statute; it is to expound it. The question for him is not what the legislature meant, but what its language means; i. e., what the Act has said that is meant. [P 299 C 2]

(c) Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act (1925), S. 25-A (as amended by Punjab Act 3 of 1930)—S. 25-A applies only to cases where recording of evidence before Tribunal is not complete before commencement of Act.

The only possible interpretation of S. 11 of the amending Act is that it makes S. 4 (now S. 25-A of the original Act) only applicable to those claims, petitions and suits in which the recording of evidence has not been concluded before the Tribunal at the commencement of the Act. The meaning is clear and the interpretation placed upon it as above is the only possible one. [P 299 C 2]

Bhagat Singh—for Appellant.

Har Gopal—for Respondent.

Currie, J.—This order will dispose of three appeals Nos. 773 and 1154 of 1932 and 739 of 1933 in which the same point regarding the interpretation of S. 25-A of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act has arisen.

In the present case the Committee of Management for the Gurdwara Nankana Sahib in Nankana Jagir of Okara Tahsil brought a suit for possession of certain lands on the basis of a decision in their favour by the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal in proceedings on a petition under S. 5 (1) of the Act. The suit was dismissed by the Tribunal on the ground that that decision had been passed before the amending Act which introduced S. 25-A into the original Sikh Gurdwaras Act came into force. The decision of the Tribunal was dated 21st June 1928. An appeal in the High Court was dismissed on 11th May 1931 and the suit was instituted on 26th August 1931. The Sikh Gurdwaras (Amendment) Act, 1930, (Punjab Act 3 of 1930) came into force from 1st November 1930. S. 4 of that Act contains what is S. 25-A of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, which runs as follows:

25-A. (1) When it has been decided under the provisions of this Act that a right, title or interest in immoveable property belongs to a Notified Sikh Gurdwara, or any person, the Committee of the Gurdwara concerned or the person in whose favour a declaration had been made may, within a period of one year from the date of the decision or the date of the constitution of the Committee, whichever is later, institute a suit before a tribunal claiming to be awarded possession of the right, title or interest in the immoveable property in question as against the parties to the previous petition, and the tribunal shall, if satisfied that the claim relates to the right, title or interest in the immoveable property which has been held to belong to the Gurdwara, or to the person in whose favour the declaration has been made, pass a decree for possession accordingly; (2) notwithstanding anything contained in any Act to the contrary, the court-fee payable on the plaint in such suit shall be five rupees.

Section 11 of the amending Act which deals with the question of the retrospective effect to be given to the amendments made by Ss. 2, 3 and 4 of this amending Act shall be applicable to all claims, petitions and suits in which the recording of evidence had not been concluded before the Tribunal at the commencement of this Act. It is in view of this section that the Tribunal came to the conclusion that they had no jurisdiction to deal with this suit. For the appellants Mr. Bhagat Singh has argued on the assumption that S. 25-A is to be read by itself without reference to S. 11 of the amending Act. He contends that the limitation of the suit dates from the final decision of the appeal and thus the case was within time. To my mind there is no force in this argument. It appears to me that the obvious intention of the legislature was that a successful party as soon as the decision was reached by the Tribunal would be at liberty to sue for possession. The whole section was introduced owing to the difficulty that had been experienced owing to the lack of any provision in the original Act for implementing the decisions reached by the Tribunal in cases under Ss. 5 and 10 of the Act. S. 25-A was introduced to provide a cheap and speedy method of giving effect to the decisions of the Tribunal. It is obvious that the proper course for the successful party would be to lodge his suit and if the opposite party had preferred an appeal in the High Court, for that party to obtain an order staying the proceedings, if necessary. I am therefore of opinion that there is no force in this part of the argument. It is unnecessary to discuss it further in view of the conclusion at which I have arrived regarding the retrospective effect of S. 11 of the amending Act, which must obviously be read along with S. 4 which it governs in express terms.

Mr. Bhagat Singh has urged further that the inclusion in S. 11 of the amending Act of S. 4 is erroneous and due to some oversight. He points out that, while Ss. 2 and 3 of the amending Act, which introduced amendments regarding the definition of Sikh (S. 2, Sikh Gurdwaras Act), and in S. 16 of the Act, were of such a nature that effect could be given to them immediately in cases in which the evidence had not been concluded; there was no reason for limiting the effect of S. 4 to cases in which the record of evidence had not been concluded, at the time the Act came into force. It is not for us however to try to discover what the intention of the legislature was when the amending Act was passed. We have only to deal with the clear language of the Act as passed and endeavour to interpret it. To quote Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 7, p. 6

The business of the interpreter is not to improve the statute; it is to expound it. The question for him is not what the legislature meant, but what its language means, i. e., what the Act has said that is meant.

Now in the present case there cannot be the least doubt that the only possible interpretation of S. 11 of the amending Act is that it makes S. 4 (now S. 25-A of the original Act) only applicable to those claims, petitions and suits in which the recording of evidence has not been concluded before the Tribunal at the commencement of the Act. The meaning is clear and to my mind the interpretation placed upon it by the Tribunal is the only possible one. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Balak Nath — Defendant—Appellant.
v.Charanjit Rai — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 590 of 1935, Decided on 15th July 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/. 19th December 1934.

Will—Construction—Trust created by will—Direction that succession to trusteeship should pass to descendants of trustee—Succession cannot pass to collaterals—Relatives not having powers to interfere with bequest—Line of trustee coming to an end—Trust reverts to original founder.

Where a direction in a trust that the succession is to pass to the descendants of the original trustees is quite clear, succession cannot be extended to include their collaterals, in whom there is no reason to suppose that the testator would have been included to repose any particular confidence. [P 301 C 1]

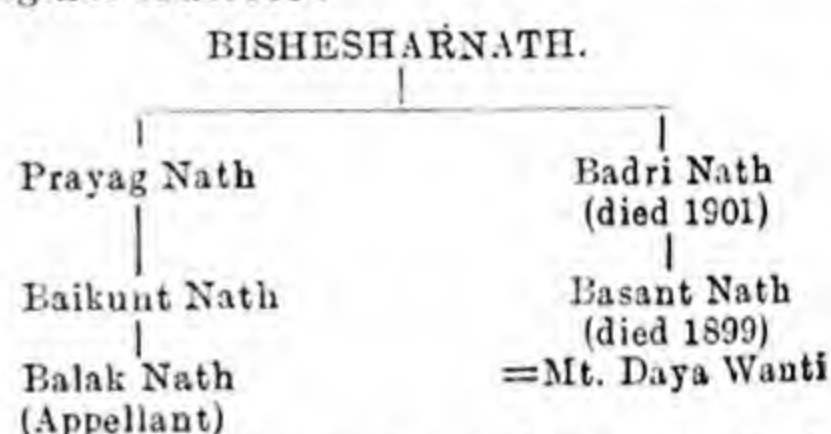

Where a clause in a will creating a trust provides that none of the relatives of the trustees are to have any right of interfering with his bequest and that any claim put forward by them is to be rejected, proper construction of the clause is that this clause is intended to apply to any claim of the relatives to succeed to the property in their personal capacity or to claim any right of interfering with the management of the property during the lifetime of the trustees appointed by the founder or in the presence of any of their descendants. The testator does not thereby intend to provide that the management of the trust should not revert to his own family, according to the ordinary rule in case the line of succession which he had prescribed should die out. [P 301 C 1]

Kanwar Sain—for Appellant.

Nawal Kishore—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In 1894 one Raja Ram founded a trust by will in favour of a Hindu temple or shiwalaya, endowing the temple with lands and appointing trustees to manage the property. The first trustees were Badri Nath and Basant Nath and it was provided that the management of the trust should pass to their descendants. Basant Nath died in 1899 and Badri Nath died in 1901, when the office of the manager was taken over by Basant Nath's widow, Mt. Daya Wanti, in the absence of any living descendants of the original trustees. A suit for her removal from the management was brought in 1921 by Harcharan Das, a nephew of Raja Ram, and one of his sons. They were granted a decree on 8th December 1923, but Mt. Daya Wanti died during the course of the appeal, whereupon the suit was dismissed as having automatically come to an end. Harcharan Das then had himself entered in the revenue records as trustee and took over the management on the ground that the trusteeship had reverted to the founder's line on the extinction of the line of succession laid down by Raja Ram. His right to the management was attacked by Balak Nath, a collateral of the original trustees, who succeeded in having the revenue entries reversed, but Balak Nath did not succeed in taking over the management. Harcharan Das then brought the present suit for a declaration of his right to manage the temple and the attached property, joining another of his sons as plaintiff. Harcharan Das himself has died, and the present plaintiff is his son Charanjit Rai. The suit is against Balak Nath. The trial Court granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff, which was confirmed on appeal to the District Court. The defendant has instituted a second appeal. The following pedigree table shows the defendant's position in relation to the original trustees :

The first argument put forward is that the office of trustee should devolve according to the ordinary rule of succession, and that the reference in Raja Ram's will to the descendants of Badri Nath and Basant Nath should not be taken as limiting the succession to his direct descendants. The general rule as laid down in S. 421 (3) of Mulla's Hindu Law is as follows :

Where the founder has prescribed a line of succession to the office of shebait, but the succession to the office has entirely failed, the right of management reverts to the founder and his heirs.

But in a trust of this nature, the gift is to the idol, and not to the so-called trustees, and the founder is making an appointment rather than a gift so far as his first trust of the original manager and his family are concerned. In 29 Cal 716 (1), there was a provision that the office should be held by the founder's daughter and her husband and their male children successively. It was held that on the death of the last surviving son of the daughter, the succession of shebait failed and the shebaitship reverted to the heirs of the testator. In the present instance the direction that the succession is to pass to the descendants of the original trustees is quite clear and I do not think that it can be extended to include their collaterals, in whom there is no reason to suppose that the testator would have been inclined to repose any particular confidence. The next argument is that Raja Ram intended to exclude his own relatives from taking any part in the management of the trust. This is based on a clause in his will which provides that none of his relatives are to have any right of interfering with his bequest and that any claim put forward by them is to be rejected. I agree with the lower appellate Court that this clause is intended to apply to any claim of the relatives to succeed to the property in their personal capacity or to claim any right of interfering with the management of the property during the lifetime of the trustees appointed by the founder or in the presence of any of their descendants. It does not appear that he was intending to provide that the management of the trust should not revert to his own family, according to the ordinary rule in case the line of succession which he had prescribed should die out.

A third argument is that the present suit is barred by the rule of res judicata on account of the previous litigation, in which the present defendant was impleaded as the legal representative of Mt. Daya Wanti after her death. This argument is based on the fact that the plaintiff never put forward any claim to succeed to the office of shebait during the lifetime of Mt. Daya Wanti, even when he was suing for her removal from the office which she held. It is true that the present claim might have been made a matter of attack in the previous suit, but it is also apparent that the previous suit was brought against Mt. Daya Wanti in a personal capacity, and I do not think that the former pleadings can be taken as amounting to an admission or decision that the present respondent has not a better right than the defendant at the present moment to hold the post of shebait. The last argument is that the suit is time barred, because Mt. Daya Wanti entered upon the management in 1901 and her possession was clearly adverse to the present claim of the plaintiff. The plaintiff and his father however succeeded in entering upon the management after Mt. Daya Wanti's death, and this was sufficient to break the period of adverse possession, even if Mt. Daya Wanti's tenure of the office be regarded as adverse possession of a nature which could benefit the present appellant. For the above reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 171 of 1935, Decided on 14th February 1935, from decree of Sub-Judge First Class, Lahore, D/- 31st May 1934.

(a) Practice—Revision—Appeal incompetent under O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C.—It may be treated as revision.

Where an ordinary appeal does not lie in view of the restrictive provisions of O. 47, R. 7 the Court may nevertheless treat the appeal as revision: 1927 Lah 435; 1933 Lah 169 and 1926 Lah 379, Rel. on. [P 302 C 2; P 303 C 1]

(b) Practice—Restoration of proceedings—Review—Court cannot set aside its own judgment on reconsideration of same materials.

The Court has no jurisdiction to set aside its own judgment on a reconsideration of the same materials which were present before it on the former occasion: 1922 P C 112 and 1933 Mad 290 Foll. [P 303 C 2]

(c) Precedents—Conflicting rulings—Method of application—Only cases which really touch matter under consideration should be cited.

When discussing authorities on a particular provision of law a counsel must cite cases which really touch the matter for consideration before the Court. It is always more or less dangerous when discussing authorities on a particular provision of law to cite cases upon entirely different provisions of law by way of mere analogy. [P 303 C 2]

(d) Practice—Revision—Arbitration—Award—Binding nature of—Cases arising out of arbitration form class by themselves—Aggrieved party cannot take recourse to ordinary remedies by revision or appeal.

A reference to arbitration means the abandoning of the regular tribunals set up by the State and presided over by trained Judges and

The aggrieved party thereupon cannot have recourse to the ordinary remedies either by way of revision or appeal when the verdict of the tribunal of his own choice has gone against him: 1933 Lah 426 and 29 Cal 167 (P C) Rel. on. [P 304 C 1]

Order.—On 17th July 1929 a deed of partnership, Ex. P/1, was executed. The names of three persons, namely Amolak Ram, Niamat Ali and Sheikh Jan Mohammad appeared as partners. Their shares were specified and their rights and liabilities were mentioned. It bore the signatures of Niamat Ali and Amolak Ram, but it was not signed by Sheikh Jan Mohammad. It had the signature of a man named Sheikh Allah Ditta. The partnership business was named and styled as the Royal Motor Transport Company. On 4th November 1929 another deed of partnership, Ex. P/2, was drawn up. This document was almost similar in its terms to Ex. P/1 with this difference that it was signed by Sheikh Jan Mohammad himself. The name of the firm as given in Ex. P/1 was retained in this newly created partnership. A suit was brought by the plaintiffs against Amolak Ram, Niamat Ali and Jan Mohammad for the balance of the price of certain motor trucks, which had been supplied by them on 7th August 1929, to the Royal Motor Transport Company. Defendant 1 Amolak Ram practically admitted the plaintiff's claim; Jan Mohammad and Niamat Ali denied that they were partners on the date of the purchase of the trucks and further pleaded that the Lahore Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Five issues were framed, but we are concerned only with the first two, namely: (1) Whether the Lahore Courts are vested with jurisdiction to hear the suit; and (2) whether defendants 2 and 3 were not partners of the Royal Motor Transport Company, Hoshiarpur, at the time of the transaction in question. The trial Judge, Mr. Harnam Singh, proceeded to record his finding on the question of jurisdiction and on 15th March 1933 held that the suit was cognizable by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, at Lahore. The parties then went to trial and ultimately on 4th October 1933, the Subordinate Judge, Mr. Harnam Singh, decreed the claim against Amolak Ram and Niamat Ali and dismissed it against Jan Mohammad on the ground that on the date on which the trucks were supplied he was not a member of the partnership.

On 18th December 1933, the plaintiffs made an application in the Court of Mr. Harnam Singh for review of judgment on the ground that there was a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record which had led to the dismissal of the suit against Jan Mohammad. Mr. Harnam Singh issued the usual notice. The matter came up before another Subordinate Judge, namely, Mr. G. R. Mehta, who allowed the application of the plaintiff and granted the review on exactly the same materials which were before Mr. Harnam Singh. He was further of opinion that Mr. Harnam Singh in his order dated 15th March 1933, while deciding the issue as to jurisdiction had expressed the opinion that Jan Mohammad was liable under the terms of Ex. P/1. Jan Mohammad came up in appeal to this Court paying Rs. 375 as court-fee. At the time of argument Mr. Achhru Ram raised a preliminary objection that neither an appeal lay nor a revision was entertainable in this case. The learned counsel for Jan Mohammad clearly admitted that as the scope of an appeal against the order granting review was limited under the provisions of O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C., he could not press the appeal; but he strenuously urged that a revision lay and that the memorandum of appeal should be treated as an application for revision. He relied upon 8 Lah 617 (1) where a learned Judge, while observing that an ordinary appeal did not lie in view of the restrictive provisions of O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C., nevertheless held that in the circumstances of the case, he could treat the appeal as a revision. There is a more direct authority of another learned Single Judge of this Court in 34 P L R 88 (2).

This case completely covers Mr. Barakat Ali's argument. I took time to consider this case in the light of the authorities quoted by the learned counsel on both sides. I find that there is no escape from the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge who decided 34 P L R 88 (2). It is necessary to give the facts of 34 P L R 88 (2) in some detail. A suit was brought for a substantial sum of money in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It was dismissed for default under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C. An application was made on behalf of the plaintiff for the restoration of the case but this application was rejected. Subsequently an application was made for review of the order of dismissal passed on the application for restoration. This application for review was founded on exactly the same material as the previous application for the restoration of the case. The Court granted the application for review and set aside the order which it had passed dismissing the application for restoration and restored the suit which had been dismissed for default. Against this order the defendant, as in the present case, filed an appeal in this Court. As the appeal could not be entertained in view of the provisions of O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C., the defendant's counsel asked that his petition of appeal may be treated as revision. It was objected on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent as in the present case that the order of the Court below was an interlocutory order and, therefore, it could not be challenged by way of revision in this Court. But, on the authority of 7 Lah 161 (3) this contention was repelled and the application for revision against the order granting the review was entertained.

The learned Judge referred to the leading case on the subject, namely 3 Lah 127 (4) and held, that in view of this Privy Council authority the Court below had no jurisdiction to set aside its own judgment on a re consideration of the same materials which were present before it on the former occasion when the application for restoration was dismissed. With this line of reasoning I entirely agree. Mr. Harnam Singh's judgment might have been erroneous, as to which I express no opinion, but in that case the plaintiffs had their remedy and could have filed an appeal, but surely they could not ask his successor-in-office to set aside that judgment in review on a re-consideration of the same materials which were before Mr. Harnam Singh. As regards the inconsistent findings to which Mr. G. R. Mehta refers, I may point out that the order dated 15th March 1933 was a finding on the question of jurisdiction alone and did not purport to decide the liability of Jan Mohammad in view of the language of the particular issue. The remark which is attributed to Mr. Harnam Singh in this order was in all probability part of the argument of the counsel for the plaintiffs or a mere casual observation while recording the finding on the issue of jurisdiction. That this was so is put beyond doubt by the fact that the learned Judge had framed a specific issue, No. 2, for the purpose of determining the liabilities of defendants 2 and 3 and while recording his finding on issue 2, he held that Jan Mohammad was not liable. On the merits a Court of appeal might have come to a different conclusion, as to which I express no opinion; but surely, in view of the clear language of O. 47, R. 1, read in the light of 3 Lah 127 (4), Mr. G. R. Mehta had no jurisdiction to grant the review on a reconsideration of the case on exactly the same materials. I may here refer to the interpretation which has been put on the Privy Council case by a learned Judge of the Madras High Court in 1933 Mad 290 (5) and I respectfully follow it.

The learned counsel for the respondents cited a number of decisions, but they do not really touch the matter which is before me for consideration. It is always more or less dangerous, when discussing authorities on a particular provision of law to cite cases upon entirely different provisions of law by way of mere analogy. But the case which was most strenuously relied upon by Mr.

5. Mottai Goundan v. P. S. Ramaswami Ayyangar, 1933 Mad 290 = 141 I C 391.

Achhru Ram, the learned counsel for Amolak Ram, respondent, was 14 Lah 165 (6). That was a case in which an appeal was filed against a decree passed by the Court below in certain arbitration proceedings under Sch. 2, para. 16 (2), Civil P. C., but the learned Judges held that an appeal could not be entertained in view of the restrictions placed by Sch. 2, para. 16 (2). It was urged by the counsel for the appellants that his appeal may be treated as a revision. On this the learned Judges observed that

The whole law of references, awards and decrees following upon the awards is highly technical and a very limited right of appeal is conceded.

In view of the restrictions on the appeal contained in the abovementioned paragraph, the door for a revision must be deemed to have been closed. Now so far as that case is concerned I entirely agree. There is a higher authority than that decision, namely the leading Privy Council case on the subject, 29 Cal 167 (7). There, their Lordships of the Privy Council in dealing with the case of a decree passed on an award were pleased to observe that a revision in such a case would be more mischievous than an appeal. In this connexion I may observe that a reference to arbitration means the abandoning of the regular tribunals set up by the State and presided over by trained Judges and referring the matters in controversy to a domestic tribunal which may consist of laymen. The aggrieved party, therefore, cannot have recourse to the ordinary remedies either by way of revision or appeal when the verdict of the tribunal of his own choice has gone against him. Therefore cases arising out of law of arbitration form class by themselves and have no application to the present case. In my opinion the Court below had no jurisdiction to grant the application for review. I therefore treat this appeal as a revision. I accept the revision, set aside the order of Mr. G. R. Mehta, dated 31st May 1934, granting the review and restore the judgment and decree of Mr. Harnam Singh. Petitioner shall get his costs. Plaintiffs may proceed against that judgment in the manner provided by the law, as to which I express no opinion one way or the other.

The applicant had paid a court-fee of Rs. 375 in this Court. That court-fee minus Rupees four (Rs. 4) would be refunded to the applicant. The parties are agreed as to this course being adopted and there is also the authority of 34 P L R 1 (8).

Rangi Lal, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to challenge a mortgage of ancestral land on the usual ground of want of consideration and necessity. The plaintiffs are the sons of the mortgagors. The learned District Judge found that the mortgagors were engaged in the manufacture of sugar in the village and that the whole debt was raised for that purpose, but on the authority of 24 I C 361 (1), he came to the conclusion that the debt could not be held to be raised for legal necessity. The decree of the trial Court granting the declaration prayed for by the plaintiffs was therefore confirmed. The mortgagees have filed a second appeal to this Court. In 24 I C 361 (1) the loan in question was raised for buying merchandise for a shop started in the village. The loan was not held to be for legal necessity because the learned Judges were of opinion that village custom would not look with favour upon the conversion of a Jat agriculturist into a shop keeping trade and would not countenance an alienation of ancestral land in order to enable such agriculturist to carry on the business of his shop. This view, even if it was correct at that time, has not been adopted in the later decisions of this Court. In 74 I C 451 (2), an alienation of a sarai by an agriculturist for the purpose of raising money to engage in trade was upheld and it was remarked that 24 I C 361 (1) could not have intended to lay down that under no circumstances could a member of an agricultural tribe alienate ancestral property for the purposes of engaging in trade. In 95 I C 433 (3) it was held that money borrowed by a Jat agriculturist for trading in cattle was for valid necessity and it was remarked that the application of 24 I C 361 (1) must be restricted to the exact facts of that particular case. In 136 I C 265 (4), Sir Shadi Lal, who was a party to 24 I C 361 (1), himself remarked that the scope of the latter ruling must be restricted to its own facts and that no hard and fast rule could be laid down that ancestral property could never be alienated by an agriculturist for the purpose of providing funds for trade or business. In that case the alienor had for many years ceased to do the work of an agriculturist and had been living out of India carrying on trade and sending money to his sons. It was held that the money borrowed constituted a valid necessity for the sale of an ancestral house. In the present case it cannot possibly be said that the manufacture of sugar by an agriculturist in his own village would be looked upon with disfavour by village custom. It is a matter of common knowledge that most agriculturists grow sugar-cane and manufacture gur for sale.

It is admitted that the business has not resulted in any loss to the mortgagors. It would be ridiculous to suggest that an agriculturist should not improve his financial position by starting an industry allied to agriculture and which he can carry on in his own village. He is not thereby converting himself into a shop-keeper, as was the case in 24 I C 361 (1). The finding of the learned District Judge that the debt was not raised for legal necessity cannot therefore be maintained. The finding that the whole debt amounting to Rs. 4,448 was raised for the manufacture of sugar was not and could not be challenged in second appeal. I would therefore accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 2210 of 1929, Decided on 25th October 1934, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Rohtak, D/- 21st June 1929.

Contract—Surety—Mere laches or non-exercise of right of superintendence or gratuitous agreement on part of obligee does not release surety.

Mere laches of the obligee, or a mere passive acquiescence by the obligee in acts which are contrary to the conditions of a bond, is not sufficient of itself to relieve the sureties. Mere non-exercise by the obligee of their rights of superintendence does not discharge the sureties from their liability as sureties. So also a mere gratuitous agreement by a creditor to give time to the principal debtor will not discharge the surety.

Vishnu Datta and Achhru Ram for Badri Das—for Appellant.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—The Sonepat Co-operative Society, Limited, sued Kapuri Lal, their Accountant, as principal, for the recovery of Rs. 6,086 embezzled by him and also sought to make Sri Ram and Ram Chandar liable as sureties. Kapuri Lal absconded and an ex parte decree with costs has been passed against him. The two sureties were absolved from liability. Against this decision the plaintiff society has appealed claiming that the sureties should also at least have been held liable for the sum of Rs. 3,873-3-0 with costs on that amount. The case is simple one. Kapuri Lal was the Accountant of the Union and was authorised to receive and disburse moneys. On 23rd December 1925, Sri Ram became surety on his behalf for the faithful discharge of his duties in the amount of Rs. 2,000. The bond stated that even though Kapuri Lal might be promoted to some higher post, the surety would be liable to the extent indicated if Kapuri Lal showed any neglect or dishonesty in the discharge of his duties. On 27th May 1927, the Union demanded security to the extent of Rs. 5,000 and this was furnished by defendant 3, Ram Chandar, the terms of the bond being the same as those of the bond given by Sri Ram. It has been found (and this was not contested before us) that Kapuri Lal embezzled the following amounts:

2,700	0	0	on 18th October 1926
600	0	0	on 31st January 1927
732	8	0	on 1st April 1927
1,873	3	0	on 1st August 1927

Interest to the extent of Rs. 180-5-0 was also claimed. The sureties accused the Society of negligence and added that as it allowed Kapuri Lal to run away, it could not enforce any liability against them. Sri Ram also pleaded that his security bond had, as a matter of fact, been discharged and that he was not liable for any of the sums embezzled. The Court below held that the bond of Sri Ram had been completely discharged and that he was thus not liable for any amount. It further held that the Union was negligent in superintending the work of Kapuri Lal and waiting from 2nd March 1928, to 12th March 1928, before reporting the matter to the Police. For the reasons given both sureties were held not liable. The appeal must succeed. It has been held in 22 Q B D 394 (1), that mere laches of the obligee, or a mere passive acquiescence by the obligee in acts which are contrary to the conditions of a bond, is not sufficient of itself to relieve the sureties. It was found in that case that the plaintiffs had permitted the collector to retain moneys in his hands for a longer period than a week (which was contrary to statute and to a resolution passed by the plaintiffs) and also that the plaintiffs had permitted the collector to mix the proceeds of the different rates. It was held that the plaintiffs' acquiescence in the collector's irregular mode of accounting was not such connivance as to discharge the sureties; and that upon the facts proved and on the findings there was no defence to the action. This case applies with full force to the case of the two sureties before us, except of course as regards the special plea of Sri Ram that his security bond was discharged. There is another case reported at p. 494 of 2 Q B D (2). In this case the plaintiffs had the right of superintending the works of their contractor through their engineer who ultimately gave a final certificate upon which the contractor was paid. The plaintiffs then sued the sureties for the contractor and it was found that there was an omission on the part of the plaintiffs properly to superintend the works which led to the scamping of it. It was held that the mere non-exercise by the plaintiffs of their right of superintendence did not discharge the defendants from their liability as sureties; and also, that they were not discharged by the fact that the plaintiffs' engineer had given his final certificate.

Lastly, it was held in 22 All 351 (3) that a mere gratuitous agreement by a creditor to give time to the principal debtor will not discharge the surety. In the present case all that was alleged was that there was negligence in supervision, that the sureties should have been informed on 2nd March 1928, when the Assistant Registrar became fully aware of the embezzlement, and that the matter should have been reported to the Police on that date instead of 12th March 1928, by which time Kapuri Lal had absconded. On the authorities quoted, none of these things are sufficient to discharge the sureties. It is also clear that Sri Ram's security bond was not completely discharged when the new surety bond for Rs. 5,000 was taken from Ram Chand on 27th May 1927. The trial Court has based its finding as to this fact principally on the circumstance that Sri Ram had in his possession the security bond and produced it in Court. There is however good evidence to the effect that all documents were kept by Kapuri Lal who must have given back the bond to Sri Ram when Sri Ram resigned his Directorship on 27th May 1927, and the new security bond was taken. To rebut this evidence Sri Ram did not himself go into the witness box. This society is not run in the regular way employed by Banks, the work being for the most part superintended by honorary workers. There is no resolution of the society cancelling completely Sri Ram's security bond when fresh security to the extent of Rs. 5,000 was taken from Ram Chandar on 27th May 1927. Of course it was discharged on that date but his liability for past acts remained.

All that can be held is that on the date in question Sri Ram ceased to be liable on his security bond and Ram Chandar commenced to be liable on his. This means that Sri Ram must be held liable as surety to the extent of Rs. 2,000 for the embezzlements prior to 27th May 1927. Ram Chandar obviously can only be held liable to the extent of embezzlements subsequent to the date of his security bond. There was only one embezzlement of Rs. 1,873-3-0 after that day. It must therefore be held that he is liable to that extent. In the result I would accept the appeal and, in addition to the decree already given against Kapuri Lal, I would grant a decree for Rs. 2,000 against Sri Ram as surety and a decree for Rs. 1,873-3-0 against Ram Chandar as surety. The two sureties will be jointly and severally liable for the costs of this appeal and will be similarly liable along with Kapuri Lal for half the costs of the plaintiffs in the Court below.

Registration — Hiba-bil-iwaz—Transfer in favour of wife in lieu of dower—Value of property transferred and not consideration of transfer determines necessity for registration.

M, a Mahomedan, executed a mortgage in favour of one G. The mortgage included half a share in a house which was already conveyed to one S, who was M's wife in lieu of her dower. This hiba-bil-iwaz was an unregistered document executed long before the mortgage deed in favour of G. G brought a suit on his mortgage and after obtaining decree put the half house for sale. S brought a suit for a declaration that the half house belonged to her by virtue of the hiba-bil-iwaz and was not liable to be sold. The property transferred in the hiba-bil-iwaz was over Rs. 100 in value. Though the consideration for the dower was not stated in the document yet it was alleged to be less than Rs. 100. It was contended that the document purporting to be hiba-bil-iwaz was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration:

Held: (Per Monroe and Addison, JJ., Agha Haidar, J., contra).—Where the amount of the consideration was not mentioned in the deed, the enquiry must be what was the value of the property and not what was the amount of the dower; whether the document required registration or not must be determined by the value of the property transferred and not by the value or amount of the consideration for the transfer and as the value of the property transferred far exceeded Rs 100, the deed of transfer required registration and that not having been registered, it was not admissible in evidence and the mortgage prevails: 1921 Nag 84, and 90 P L R 1904, Rel. on; 15 W R 558, Disting and Disapproved; 1915 Lah 251, Dissent. Per Agha Haidar, J.—A gift, by the husband of landed property in lieu of dower in favour of his wife was tantamount to a sale and consequently such a deed of gift when the dower was less than Rs. 100, did not require registration although the value of the immoveable property thus transferred exceeded Rs. 100 and as such was admissible in evidence. The Court in which the document is produced cannot ordinarily undertake an investigation into the price of the interest in immoveable property sought to be assigned, as against the value which the contracting parties had agreed to put upon it. The necessity for registration must be determined by the consideration mentioned in the document: 15 W R 558 and 90 P L R 1904, Foll. [P 314 C 2]

Addison, J.—(6th March 1934).—Shah Muhammad, defendant 2, executed a mortgage-deed for Rs. 5,300 on 22nd September 1926, in favour of Gopal Das, defendant 1. One of the properties hypothecated was half a house. There was a subsequent mortgage-deed between the same parties executed on 31st January 1927, but this transaction fell through.

and we are not concerned with it. Gopal Das sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree. When in execution of his decree he was about to sell the half house mentioned, Mt. Sakina Bibi, wife of the mortgagor Shah Muhammad, instituted a suit on 21st July 1928, for a declaration that the half house belonged to her and was not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree. Her case was that this half house as well as another house were given to her by her husband by an unregistered deed on 20th July 1921, in lieu of dower. Her suit was confined to the half house affected by the mortgage-deed in question and she did not ask for a declaration in respect of the other house. Gopal Das pleaded that the hiba-bil-iwaz was never acted upon and was executed in bad faith in order to defeat the rights of the husband's creditor. He also pleaded that the property was worth much more than Rs. 100, in value and that the hiba-bil-iwaz was therefore compulsorily registrable. To this the plaintiffs' counsel replied that the half house was certainly worth more than Rs. 100 when the deed was executed but that as the amount of dower due was Rs. 90, this did not matter.

Three issues were struck: (1) Whether the document sued on is admissible in evidence though unregistered? (2) Whether the house in suit belongs to plaintiff? (3) Whether the alienation in plaintiff's favour is fictitious and collusive? The trial Judge, who only heard the evidence of defendant 1, found that the deed did not require registration and that the alienation was a good one and could not be impeached by Gopal Das whose deed was subsequent to the hiba-bil-iwaz. He therefore decreed the plaintiff's claim and Gopal Das has appealed. The first question arising is that of the value of the property included in the hiba-bil-iwaz. Admittedly it is much more than Rs. 100. Muhammad Sharif (P. W. 1), a cousin of the husband, has stated that the husband has no other property and that the house may be worth Rs. 200 or Rs. 400. His evidence is interested. One Nihal Chand (P. W. 3), who was the scribe of the hiba-bil-iwaz, has stated that the whole house was worth Rs. 5,000, and the half house in dispute about Rs. 1,500. Karam Ilahi, one of the witnesses to the hiba-bil-iwaz, (P. W. 4) has stated that the bigger house is worth

Rs. 3,000, or so and the half house Rs. 1,000. The other marginal witness Abdul Qadir (P. W. 5) has said that the property was worth Rs. 800. As will appear later, this witness has given false evidence in another matter; so his testimony can be neglected. According to another, Nihal Chand (D. W. 1), the brother of Gopal Das, he is prepared to pay Rs. 5,000, for the two houses. Jai Ram (D. W. 2), who in other respects has given evidence in favour of the plaintiff, has stated that the property is worth between Rs. 5,500 and Rs. 6,500. Sant Ram (D. W. 3) values the property at Rs. 6,000 or Rs. 7,000. Gopal Das, as his own witness, stated that he was prepared to pay Rs. 7,000 for the property. On this evidence I have no hesitation in holding that the property transferred is worth between Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 6,500.

It is also admitted that the husband has no other property and is now insolvent. No change of possession took place the husband and wife continuing to live as before in the house in dispute. The children of the marriage live with their parents there. On the other hand the plaintiff has given evidence that her dower was Rs. 90, the proportion of prompt and deferred dower not being defined. The amount of the dower was not stated in the deed. The plaintiff herself was examined as a witness before the issues were framed. She could not state what amount was fixed as prompt dower and how much as deferred dower. She stated that there was no writing about dower and that her marriage took place some 22 years before in Jammu. She did not know the names of the vakils of the other witnesses to the marriage. There was thus no opportunity given to Gopal Das to summon independent witnesses. Two other witnesses with respect to dower being fixed at Rs. 90, were examined, namely two brothers, Muhammad Sharif and Muhammad Said (P. Ws. 1 and 2) who are the first cousins once removed from the husband. The first stated that dower was fixed at Rs. 90, but that he did not know what proportion was prompt and what deferred. He could not remember what dower was fixed in the case of any other marriage. The second gave similar evidence and added that he did not know what dower was fixed at his own marriage. He could not give any details as to clothes and jewellery presented at the marriage. These witnesses were not heard by the Judge who delivered the judgment, and in my opinion their evidence is worthless. I am not prepared to hold it proved that the dower was fixed at Rs. 90. As it has not been established that the dower fixed was Rs. 90, while the property is worth between Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 6,500, it follows that the deed was compulsorily registrable under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, which runs as follows :

Other non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present, or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100, and upwards to or in immovable property.

The words of this clause are clear enough, and where the value is about Rs. 6,000, as in the present case, and the consideration is not proved, it must be held that the document required registration. On this finding alone the appeal must be accepted. Assuming however that the dower fixed was Rs. 90, it must be decided whether the document required registration, the value of the property being about Rs. 6,000. As held in 119 I C 258 (1) a hiba-bil-iwaz is tantamount to a sale. Jai Lal, J., observed that it was sufficient to hold that such transactions are not governed by the rules relating to gifts but that they partake of the incidents relating to sales. Though the wording of S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act is clear enough, it was held by the Calcutta High Court in 15 W R 558 (2) that the necessity for registration must be determined by the value of the consideration stated in the deed. Ainslie, J., remarked :

Who shall say whether the true value of the property is Rs. 99 or 101. There may be no difficulty where one side puts forward a nominal value of Rs. 50, and the other proves a probable value of Rs. 5,000. But the remedy is not by excluding the document, but by using the inadequacy of consideration as an element in the evidence of mala fides.

Later on he said :

It may well happen that a man under pressure may consent to take Rs. 90 for what, if free from pressure, he would not sell for Rs. 150. Still the value to him at the time would be the Rs. 90 he could get at once and not what the purchaser under other circumstances might be tempted to give. The purchaser having obtained the property may, in his turn, value it at Rs. 150.

2. Rohinee Debia v. Shib Chunder, (1871) 15 W R 558.

This authority amounts to this: that the consideration stated in the deed should be taken as the value of the right, title or interest to or in the immovable property. In cases of forced sales this is no doubt a very convenient rule of evidence and with great respect, I am disposed to agree with this rule in such cases. But even then the words of the clause, to the effect that the test is the value of the right, title or interest to or in the immovable property must not be lost sight of. In ordinary cases it is a convenient rule to adopt for the ascertainment of the value of a right, title or interest to or in immovable property. The first case cited before us was 64 I C 126 (3), a Single Bench decision of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner, where it was held that a transfer of immovable property in lieu of dower amounts to a sale and can only be effected by a registered document as required by S. 54, Transfer of Property Act, and that when it is not so effected, the transaction conveys no title to the transferee. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that this authority did not apply to the present case as it came within the provisions of S. 54, Transfer of Property Act, and not within S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. The words in S. 54 are as follows :

A transfer by sale in the case of tangible immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards can be made only by a registered instrument.

The words "of the value of Rs. 100, and upwards" are the same in the two sections. For this reason it was urged that if a deed is written and the value is over Rs. 100, the position is the same under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, or S. 54, T. P. Act. This appears to me to be correct. Under either Act, if a deed is written, what has to be seen according to the Acts is whether the value of the immovable property is Rs. 100, and upwards. The authority mentioned is thus in favour of the appellant.

A Single Judge of the Punjab Chief Court held in 90 P L R 1904 (4), that a deed of sale by a husband in favour of his wife in lieu of dower requires registration when the interest affected by the document exceeds Rs. 100. This is also directly in favour of the appellant. The next case is a Division Bench judgment of the Punjab Chief Court reported in 27 I C 562 (5). That was a case where a husband transferred half of his moveable and immoveable property in lieu of haq mehr sharai. In this document no specific sum was mentioned, but in my judgment haq mehr sharai must be taken to be a specific sum, as it is a sum fixed by law. It is usually taken to be Rs. 32 and certainly it is less than Rs. 100. In the judgment, it is simply remarked that it follows from the facts that the dower was less than Rs. 100, that the deed was admissible in evidence, apart from the value of the property transferred. There is no discussion of the question, or of the section and no authority is mentioned. This judgment was followed in an unreported case of this High Court where also there was no discussion. This case is First Appeal No. 2405 of 1924 (6). Apart from 1 P R 1906 (7), which I do not propose to discuss as it does not seem to me to be in point, no other authority was mentioned at the Bar.

Coming now to the hiba-bil-iwaz in this case, dated 20th July 1924, the amount of dower is not stated in the document. It simply states that the house and half house are transferred by the husband to his wife in lieu of her dower. It follows in my judgment that 15 W R 558 (2), has no application to the present case, as the document does not set out what the property was transferred for. There is no reason, therefore, to depart from the plain words of S. 17 (1) (b) to the effect that it is the value of the right, title or interest to or in the immoveable property that determines whether the document is compulsorily registrable or not; or to take it as a convenient rule that the consideration stated should be taken to be the value of the property; for none is stated. An enquiry has to be conducted and that enquiry should, therefore, be as stated in S. 17 (1) (b), what is the value of the immoveable property transferred. Not only is it an easier enquiry, but it is the enquiry enjoined by the section; 27 I C 592 (5), and Civil Appeal No. 2405 of 1924 (6) are in this view of the case clearly distinguishable. Apart from that, as at present advised, with great respect, I am not prepared to accept the view taken in them; while the reasoning in 15 W R 558 (2) does not in my judgment apply to the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz, which is only tantamount to a sale but has also some of the incidents of a gift. I am further clear that in the present case where there is no amount of consideration mentioned in the document, the enquiry must be as to what the value of the property is or was and not what dower fixed was. Had it been a simple gift, the deed would be compulsorily registrable under S. 17 (1) (a), Registration Act. To hold otherwise in a case like the present, would amount in my judgment to ignoring the law. On this view of the case also, therefore, the appeal must succeed and the plaintiff's suit be dismissed.

The next point taken by the appellant's counsel before us was that under S. 50, Registration Act, the registered mortgage deed must take precedence against the unregistered hiba-bil-iwaz. That is the law as laid down in S. 50, Registration Act, but it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that this question could not be raised for the first time in appeal as the doctrine of notice of the prior unregistered document has been tacked on to the law by the Courts in India. This is undoubtedly true. At the same time there is much evidence on the record to show that there was no notice and, had it been necessary, I would have been prepared to remand the case to allow the plaintiff an opportunity to prove that there was notice of her prior unregistered document; of course this question only arises if it is held that the hiba-bil-iwaz did not require registration. I would have allowed the appellant to raise this question as it is a mere question of law so far as S. 50, Registration Act, is worded, though of course the Courts have annexed to the section the equitable doctrine of prior notice. Lastly, it was argued on behalf of the appellant that the hiba-bil-iwaz was merely a colourable transaction entered into to defeat the creditors of the husband. The old S. 53, T. P. Act, which applies to the present case, runs as follows:

Every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defraud prior or subsequent transferees thereof for consideration, or co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property, or to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed. Where the effect of any transfer of immoveable property is to defraud, defeat or delay any such person and such transfer is made gratuitously, or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid.

Ainslie, J., probably had this principle in view when he made the remark, quoted by me, in 15 W R 558 (2). The plaintiff herself admitted that her husband has no other moveable or immoveable property and that she and her family and her husband have continued to live in the house in dispute without any change. It is also obvious that the transfer was made for a grossly inadequate consideration. Further, the husband has all along been treating the property as his own and mortgaging it: for example, on 21st June 1920, the husband executed a mortgage deed in favour of Nihal Chand, the brother of Gopal Das, for a sum of Rs. 2,000 with respect to the whole house mentioned in the hiba-bil-iwaz. From this document it appears that there was a prior mortgage in favour of the same person registered on 19th March 1917. On 22nd February 1922, the husband executed a promissory note in favour of this Nihal Chand for Rupees 1,700 and Nihal Chand has given evidence that he obtained a decree on this promissory note in 1924 the hiba-bil-iwaz being dated 20th July 1924. Nihal Chand's mortgage was with possession and apparently he took a rent deed from the husband. On this rent deed he obtained a decree for Rs. 86 rent and for the ejectment of the husband from the house. This was on 17th July 1923. Apparently, however, he did not take out execution for ejectment. One Jai Ram (D. W. 2) obtained a decree for Rs. 430 with costs amounting to Rs. 73-14-0 on 23rd June 1924 against the husband. Jai Ram has however stated that this decree was paid by the husband on 20th July 1924, i. e., the very day when the hiba-bil-iwaz was executed. It is an important matter to remember that he could not pay his wife's dower of Rs. 90 on a day when he paid over Rs. 500 to Jai Ram. That, in my opinion, shows that the matter was only a colourable transaction intended to protect the property in the future. It is clear from S. 53, T. P. Act, that the term "creditor" includes not only creditors at the time of the assignment but also those who subsequently become creditors.

After 20th July 1924, the husband effected other mortgages of the property. One was in favour of the same Nihal Chand for Rs. 99 on 2nd February 1926. There was also a mortgage, not the same as the one in suit in favour of Gopal Das for Rs. 1,000 on 4th March 1926. Nihal Chand obtained another ejectment decree together with a decree for Rs. 6 rent with respect to the whole house on 7th June 1927. It is true that Nihal Chand has been paid all the debts due to him prior to 1924, but the husband still owes him a sum of Rs. 2,000. The plaintiff herself stated that she knew that the husband had been litigating for seven or eight years and that he used to tell her that he was going to the Courts to defend cases pending against him. She further stated that she did not ask for dower prior to this though she had been married for 22 or 23 years but that she asked for it when she found that there was an apprehension of her husband's property being ruined. Nihal Chand (P. W. 3), who was the scribe of the hiba-bil-iwaz, has deposed that the husband told him that the deed was written to save the property from creditors and that he should not mention it to anybody. That was why he did not tell Gopal Das when he witnessed the mortgage deed of 22nd September 1926, in favour of Gopal Das on which he brought his suit. Further, this Nihal Chand has said that nobody was present except the husband when the deed was written. This is corroborated by one of the marginal witnesses, Karam Ilahi, (P. W. 4), who said that the document was not written in his presence and that defendant 2 brought it to his house for him to witness. No other person was present at that time. The other witness to the hiba-bil-iwaz, Abdul Qadir (P. W. 5), has said that both the witnesses were present when Nihal Chand wrote it though he could not remember where it was written. He stated that Karam Ilahi arrived before he did when it was being written. He is evidently a false witness.

On this evidence I have no hesitation in holding that the deed was secretly written and that it was merely a colourable transaction intended to protect the property against the creditors of the husband. For the reasons given, I would accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Agha Haidar, J.—(6th March 1934)
—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the house in dispute is owned and possessed by the plaintiff, Mt. Sakina Bibi, and is not liable to sale in execution of a decree obtained by Gopal Das, defendant 1, against Shah Muhammad, defendant 2. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit and Gopal Das, defendant 1, has come up in appeal to this Court. Shah Muhammad, respondent 2, is the husband of the plaintiff. On 22nd September 1926, Shah Muhammad executed a mortgage-deed, Ex. D-1, in favour of Gopal Das, defendant 1, for Rs. 5,300 mortgaging certain land which formed the subject-matter of a pre-emption suit instituted by him (Shah Muhammad, defendant 2) as a result of the sale by one Sana Ullah, the nephew of Shah Muhammad, in favour of Abdul Aziz. The object of the pre-emption suit apparently was to keep the land which had been sold by Sana Ullah in the family. Besides the pre-empted land, Shah Muhammad also included in the mortgage half a share in a certain house. The pre-emption suit was decreed, but on appeal the amount of consideration was increased by a sum of Rs. 6,200, thus necessitating a further loan from Gopal Das, defendant 1, under a mortgage-deed, Ex. D-3, dated 31st January 1927. With this mortgage we are not concerned. The sum of Rs. 5,300 was not received by Shah Muhammad but was left with Gopal Das for depositing in Court. It was apparently deposited and Counsel for the respondents has made a statement at the Bar that Gopal Das has now taken it out. This is, however, by the way. In the meantime Gopal Das obtained a decree on the foot of the mortgage-deed, Ex. D-1. When he proceeded to execute the decree against the half share in the house mortgaged to him, the plaintiff brought the present suit alleging that on 20th July 1924, her husband, defendant 2 had given to her in lieu of her dower-debt the half share in the house now in dispute and another house with which we are not concerned, and that the mortgage-deed, Ex. D-1, and all the proceedings taken thereunder by defendant 1 cannot affect her proprietary rights in the property.

The main pleas were contained in para.

1 of the written statement filed by defendant 1 who pleaded that the plaintiff was not an owner and in possession of the house in dispute nor had the same been given to her in lieu of dower. It was further pleaded that the document, Ex. P-1, relied upon by the plaintiff, was not in fact acted upon and that if any instrument was executed in bad faith and collusively to defeat the rights of the creditors, the same was not binding upon him. As already stated, in the present litigation we are concerned only with half a share in the house mentioned in the mortgage-deed, Ex. D-1. The statements of the Counsel for the parties were recorded on 6th December 1928. The plaintiff's counsel stated that the house in dispute was more than Rs. 100 in value when the document Ex. P-1 was executed, and, as the amount of dower which formed the consideration for the transfer was Rs. 90 the document did not require registration even though the price of the house was more than Rs. 100. Counsel for the defendant Gopal Das stated that the house was worth more than Rs. 100, and that the document, Ex. P-1, was not admissible in evidence for want of registration even if the consideration for it was less than Rs. 100. The plaintiff was examined on commission. She stated that she had been married to defendant 2 some 22 or 23 years ago and bore him children. She says that the amount of her dower, both prompt and deferred was Rs. 90 and although no writing was executed regarding it at the time of her marriage about four and a half years ago her husband gave her one entire house and half a portion of another house, now in dispute in lieu of her dower (Ex. P-1). She professes ignorance as to the value of the house in suit. She has led evidence as to the amount of her dower such evidence being clearly admissible and the point in fact was not disputed.

Nihal Chand, P. W. 3, is the scribe of the document Ex. P-1. He says that the document is in his handwriting. He further says that the document was written by him at the instance of defendant 2 in favour of the plaintiff. In cross-examination he has stated that the whole house was worth about Rs. 5,000 while the value of the half share in another house was about Rs. 1,500. He has further stated that the amount of the dower was not mentioned in the deed and, on his enquiring how much it was defendant 2 told him that, if the amount of dower was stated at more than Rs. 100 the document would become registrable. He is also one of the marginal witnesses to the document Ex. D-1, which gave rise to the present suit and he attested it before the Sub-Registrar. He attested the additional mortgage-deed Ex. D-3 as a witness and also the rent deed bearing the same date as Ex. D-3. Then a question was put to the witness as to why the document now in dispute Ex. P-1 was written in spite of the facts stated by him. This question had no point whatsoever because the documents to which the witness had made a reference were all of a date subsequent to Ex. P-1. He however vouchsafed a reply which was all that the counsel for defendant 1 wanted, saying that defendant 2 wished to save the house from creditors and had, therefore enjoined him not to mention Ex. P-1 to anybody and that was the reason why he did not mention it to defendant 1 on any occasion, although he was a witness to the mortgage-deed Ex. D-1. This witness was produced by the plaintiff merely to formally prove the document Ex. P-1, in order to make out that he was not on friendly terms with defendant 1.

The witness in the opening sentence of his cross-examination stated that he along with another man had been tried for murder and that Nihal Chand, brother of defendant 1, had given evidence against him. He does not give the time when he was implicated in the murder charge. Whatever may have been the mutual relation of the witness and defendant 1 at the time of the alleged murder case, about which we know nothing more, the fact remains that he had attested several of the documents in which defendant 1 was very much interested as a marginal witness, so that, if there were any strained relations between the witness and defendant 1, they were a thing of the past and their subsequent relations were confidential and friendly. I have no doubt in my mind that this witness has been won over by defendant 1 and has given his evidence against the plaintiff at his instance. Muhammad Sharif, P. W. 1, and Muhammad Said, P. W. 2, both nephews of defendant 2, have stated that they were present at the marriage of Mt. Sakina Bibi with defendant 2 and that the amount of dower fixed was Rs. 90. They are both persons who, in the ordinary course of events, were likely to be present at the time of the marriage of defendant 2, and I do not see any reason why their testimony should not be accepted.

As regards the value of the house itself, there is considerable divergence of opinion among the witnesses for the parties. But for the purposes of the present case, I accept the admission of the plaintiff's counsel that the value of the houses transferred under the document Ex. P-1 was more than Rs. 100. The learned counsel for the appellant argued in the first place that this document was executed in order to defeat and defraud creditors. I repeatedly asked counsel to point out any evidence on the record showing that, at the date of the execution of Ex. P-1, Shah Muhammad was indebted to anybody. In fact, two of the defendant's witnesses, namely, Nihal Chand, D. W. 1, and Jai Ram, D. W. 2 have both stated that the decrees, which they had obtained against defendant 2, had been satisfied at or about the time when Ex. P-1 was executed. It is true that defendant 2 had executed a mortgage-deed (Ex. D. W. 1-3) dated 2nd February 1926, for Rs. 99 in favour of Nihal Chand, brother of defendant 1, and another mortgage-deed dated 4th March 1926, for Rs. 1,000 in favour of defendant 1. But these documents were executed long after the date of Ex. P-1 and are therefore of no value for the purpose of proving that defendant 2 had executed Ex. P-1 in favour of the plaintiff in order to defeat or defraud his creditors, for the simple reason that there were no creditors at the time. Stress was laid upon a statement made by Mt. Sakina Bibi in her cross-examination when she said that she had not asked for dower during all these years, but when she found that there was apprehension of her husband's property being ruined, she demanded her dower fearing lest her right in respect thereof might be destroyed. This does not necessarily mean the indebtedness of the husband or that he was financially in embarrassed circumstances at the time.

It may merely mean that the husband was improvident and had been spending money recklessly and, therefore the lady obtained a transfer of property from him under the document Ex. P/1, in lieu of her dower.

The next contention raised by the counsel for the appellant was that the document, Ex. P-1 required registration under the provisions of S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act, and that being unregistered, it could not affect any immovable property comprised therein or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting any such property. Reliance was placed upon a single Judge decision reported as 90 P L R 1904 (4) where it was laid down that a transfer by the husband of immovable property to his wife in lieu of dower was a transaction of sale and not gift and that for the purpose of determining whether the document was registrable or not under S. 17, Registration Act 3 of 1877, it was necessary to ascertain the value of the interest sought to be conveyed. On the finding that the value of the property in the case was over Rs. 100 the document was held to be inadmissible in evidence. This case undoubtedly supports the contention of the appellant. Mr. Badri Das also relied upon another single Judge decision reported as 1 P R 1906 (7). In that case there was an assignment of a mortgage of immovable property for a consideration of less than Rs. 100 the original mortgage being for Rs. 225. The learned Judge followed and entirely agreed with the law as laid down in 15 W R 558 (2) (to be presently noted) which he rightly interpreted as laying down that the necessity for registration must be determined by the value of the consideration stated in the deed and not by an enquiry into the value of the property. The learned Judge however went on to observe that an assignment of a mortgage of immovable property where the amount secured on the mortgage was Rs. 225, for a consideration of less than Rs. 100, must be regarded as an assignment of the property covered by the mortgage and of the value stated therein, namely Rs. 225, and as such required registration and was not admissible in evidence under S. 49, Registration Act, if unregistered. With the utmost respect I find it difficult to follow the reasoning and the distinction sought to be drawn here.

There is however a Division Bench decision reported as 27 I C 562 (5) where the learned Judges, while dealing with the provisions of S. 17, Registration Act 16 of 1908, held that according to Mahomedan law, a gift by the husband of landed property in lieu of dower in favour of his wife, was tantamount to a sale and consequently such a deed of gift when the dower was less than Rs. 100 did not require registration although the value of the immovable property thus transferred exceeded Rs. 100, and as such, was admissible in evidence.

In an unreported case Civil Appeal No. 2405 of 1924 (6), decided by a Division Bench of this Court of which I was a member, the view of law as laid down in the last mentioned case was accepted and followed. No other authority has been cited and I do not feel disposed, on the cases placed before the Court, to alter the view which I expressed in the unreported decision and to which I adhere. The case in 15 W R 558 (2), is instructive and the general principles of the relevant law are fully and carefully discussed in it. I entirely agree with the view expressed by the learned Judges and respectfully follow the same. The value of the property fluctuates from time to time and different persons can honestly form very various estimates of it—in the present case they range from Rs. 600 up to Rs. 7,000. Even at the moment when a document of transfer is executed, it is in many cases difficult to decide as to what is exactly the value of the immovable property covered by it. The importunity of the creditor and the pliability of the debtor, combined with their mutual relations, may often prove to be important factors in determining the value of the transferred property by the parties concerned. In such cases the Court in which the document is produced cannot ordinarily undertake an investigation into the price of the interest in immovable property sought to be assigned, as against the value which the contracting parties had agreed to put upon it. This being my opinion the rule enunciated in 15 W R 558 (2) appears to be the correct one and the necessity for registration must therefore be determined by the consideration mentioned in the document. The question of the inadequacy of consideration can only arise in connexion with a dispute as regards the bona fides of the transaction. In the present case nothing has been pointed out by the learned counsel for the appellant to prove that the document Ex. P-1 did not represent a bona fide transaction. In fact the absence of any debts due by defendant 2 to anyone at or about the time the document, Ex. P-1, was executed shows that the transaction was a bona fide one.

It was also argued that defendant 2 was living all the time with the plaintiff in the house in question, and that therefore the transaction embodied in Ex. P-1 was a mere paper transaction and was never in fact acted upon. There is no force in this argument. We cannot lose sight of the fact that defendant 2 and the plaintiff are husband and wife and, as such, have to live together. If a husband has no house of his own, surely he can live with his wife in her house without in any way disturbing her proprietary interests in it. The execution of subsequent mortgages after an interval of two years or so, and of a certain rent deed, is of no consequence because there is no evidence whatsoever that the plaintiff was either aware of their existence or her possession of the house in question under Ex. P-1 was in any way ever disturbed.

Lastly, it was feebly urged that the provisions of S. 50, Registration Act, applied and that the document, Ex. D-1, now merged in the decree under execution, should have priority over the unregistered document, Ex. P-1. The short answer to this argument is that it was never foreshadowed either in the pleadings in the Court below or in the grounds of appeal in this Court. If such a plea had been raised at the proper time and in a proper manner it would have been open to the plaintiff to raise the point of notice which again would have been a matter for evidence. It would therefore be extremely unfair at this stage to allow this plea to be raised since it would necessitate the taking of additional evidence bearing in mind that the suit had been instituted on 21st July 1927. This contention therefore cannot be entertained. The result is that I would affirm the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated 12th July 1929, and dismiss with costs the appeal preferred by the defendant-appellant.

Monroe, J.—(28th May 1934)—The question which arises in this case is whether a mortgage deed of 22nd September 1926, made by Shah Muhammad, defendant 2, in favour of Gopal Das, defendant

1, for Rs. 5,300 on foot of which Gopal Das had already obtained a decree against Shah Muhammad is to prevail over a transfer of part of the mortgaged property by unregistered deed of 20th July 1924, made by Shah Muhammad in favour of the plaintiff Mt. Sakina Bibi, wife of Shah Muhammad, in lieu of dower. The amount of the dower was not specified in the deed of transfer. Oral evidence was produced to show that the amount of the dower fixed at the time of the marriage between Mt. Sakina Bibi and Shah Muhammad was Rs. 90. Evidence produced by defendant 1 has established that the value of the property in question far exceeds Rs. 100, and this fact is not now contested. This appeal has been heard by Addison, J., and Agha Haidar, J., who have differed on all the points raised in it. The first point of difference is that Addison, J., has held that the deed of transfer was compulsorily registrable under S. 17, Registration Act, on the ground that the value of the property transferred exceeded Rs. 100, and Agha Haidar, J., has held that this deed did not require registration. Now, it is admitted that the transaction effected by the deed of transfer was a sale: see 27 I C 562 (5). The provisions of S. 17, Registration Act, require that every non-testamentary instrument which purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether, vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards to or in immovable property shall be registered. In view of decisions which I shall discuss, I must emphasise that the test is the value of the property transferred and not the amount or value of the consideration for the transfer. The plaintiff however relies on the decisions that I have mentioned, and argues that in the present case the amount of the dower being less than Rs. 100 the section does not apply. The first case is 15 W R 558 (2), decided by a Division Bench of the High Court of Calcutta in 1871 of which the head-note is:

The necessity for registration must be determined by the value of the consideration stated in the deed.

The law in force (Act 20 of 1866) at the date in question was the same as that laid down in the Registration Act now in force. In this case the consideration stated in the deed was less than Rs. 100. It will be observed that the head-note boldly substitutes the value of the consideration for the value of the property transferred and its phraseology is justified by the text of the judgments. The leading judgment first refers to the fact that in an earlier Registration Act (16 of 1864) there was a provision that the value of any right, title or interest in any immovable property created, declared, transferred or extinguished by any instrument shall be taken to be the value of the stamp affixed thereto, etc. No such provision is contained in the Registration Act now in force and I am therefore unable to see how the question now arising is affected by its previous existence. The first part of the argument in this judgment is entirely unconvincing. The next branch of the argument is based on the inconvenience of making enquiries into the value of property in each case in which this question arises.

The argument ab inconvenienti is a dangerous one, if it is to be used as a ground for a refusal to apply the clear direction of a statute. I agree that very often "value of property" and "amount or value of consideration" will be the same; if the legislature had intended 'consideration', that term would have been used, but it seems to me that the term was chosen with ease so that the end desired—the suppression of fraud—might not be evaded in cases such as the present. Finally, the judgment quotes a passage from Story's Equity Jurisprudence which deals with the effect of inadequacy of consideration in equity and which has no bearing on the point at issue. In my opinion the reasoning on which this decision is based is bad; it disregards the clear terms of the statute. In 27 I C 562 (5), a decision of the Punjab Chief Court, the question arose whether registration was necessary of a deed transferring property from a husband to his wife in lieu of dower: the amount of dower was not stated in the deed but being haq mahr-i-sharai was less than Rs. 100. The question was not discussed: the learned Judges assumed that because the consideration was less than Rs. 100 the deed was not compulsorily registrable. In Civil Appeal No. 2405 of 1924 in this Court the transfer was held to be in lieu of sharai dower, the amount of which is a sum well under

Rs. 100. On the authority of 27 I C 562 (5) it was held that the deed of transfer did not require registration. Against this view is the decision in 90 P L R 1904 (4), the decision of a Single Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, the learned Judge, finding that the interest transferred in lieu of dower exceeded Rs. 100 was content to follow the words of the statute: apparently no cases were cited to him.

It seems therefore that 15 W R 558 (2) is the only case in which any attempt has been made to discuss this question and it has been once followed in this Court with any critical examination of the reasoning. I have no hesitation in making a choice between the mandatory provisions of the statute and the decision in 15 W R 558 (2). It is not our province to substitute another test for that laid down by the legislature, whether for reasons of convenience or by applying equitable rules evolved for other purposes. I agree with Addison, J., that in the present case where the amount of the consideration is not mentioned in the deed, the enquiry must be what was the value of the property and not what was the amount of the dower, but in my opinion this is only an application of the rule laid down by the statute that whether the document requires registration or not must be determined by the value of the property transferred and not by the value or amount of the consideration for the transfer. As in the present case the value of the property transferred far exceeded Rs. 100, I hold that the deed of transfer required registration and that not having been registered, it was not admissible in evidence and the mortgage of 22nd September 1926 prevails. It is unnecessary for me therefore to consider the other points raised by the appellant, which also Addison, J., has decided in his favour. I would allow this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in the trial Court and of this appeal.

First Appeal No. 2001 of 1928, Decided on 28th May 1934, from decrees of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 21st May 1928.

Partnership—Partnership dissolved — Notice of dissolution not given—Person having dealing with undissolved firm advancing money to partner in the name of firm—Such person not having any notice of dissolution—Retired partner is also liable for such advance—Notice on old customer and new customer, difference between.

Where after a dissolution of partnership, the business is continued in the firm name, a partner who has retired at the dissolution is liable upon a contract made by the new firm with a person who has previously dealt with the old firm unless that person has received notice of the dissolution. Even though public notice by advertisement has been given, an additional personal notice is necessary in the case of old customers, while in the case of the new customers a public notice would be quite sufficient: 1929 P C 132, Rel. on. [P 318 C 2]

Abdul Rashid, J.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by the firm Dhani Ram-Mani Ram against the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das for recovery of Rs. 5,318-14-0 on the basis of a promissory note. The allegations of the plaintiffs were that on 22nd November 1923, the firm of the defendants borrowed a sum of Rs. 4,879 from the plaintiffs, and agreed to pay interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent per mensem, that the defendants had repaid Rs. 1,000 only and that a sum of Rs. 5,318-14-0 was due from them. Sri Gopal defendant pleaded, inter alia, that there was no firm known as Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das in existence at the time of the institution of the suit, that such a firm had previously existed, but that a dissolution had taken place on 18th February 1921, and that since that day the firm had ceased to exist. It was further pleaded that the fact that he had separated from Lachhman Das in 1921, was known to the plaintiffs as well as other persons. In his statement, recorded before the framing of the issues, Sri Gopal deposed that he was only a sleeping member of the firm, that his brother Chhaju Ram used to check the accounts, and that he also checked the accounts when he was practising as a vakil at Jullunder. According to him the business was carried on by Lachhman Das, but he also used to give some instructions. Lachhman Das did not put in a written statement. He made a statement on 7th January 1927, to the effect that he had executed the promissory note (Ex. P-1), but had not received any consideration. The trial Court held that the dissolution of the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das had taken place on 18th February 1921, that, after that date Lachhman Das alone was the owner of the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das and that no notice of the dissolution was given to the public. On these findings the suit was dismissed against Sri Gopal and a decree for the full amount was awarded against Lachhman Das. The plaintiffs have preferred an appeal to this Court in order to obtain a decree against Sri Gopal defendant also.

It was strenuously urged on behalf of the appellants that, as the lower Court had held that there was no proof that notice of dissolution was given to the public, or that the dissolution was known to the plaintiffs, it was incumbent on the trial Court to pass a decree against Sri Gopal as well as Lachhman Das. Reliance was placed in this connexion on S. 264, Contract Act, which runs in the following terms:

Persons dealing with a firm will not be affected by a dissolution of which no public notice has been given, unless they themselves had notice of such dissolution.

In support of this contention the learned counsel for the appellants invited our attention to the case of 143 I C 589 (1). The present defendants were the defendants in the reported case also, and it was held that had the above firm been a going concern at the time of the execution of the hundi, the mere fact that Sri Gopal had retired from it some years before, would not have absolved him from liability unless the plaintiffs had notice of the dissolution. It was observed however that as Lachhman Das a quondam partner of a defunct firm (which had long ceased to do any business) had raised a new loan, wrongly describing himself as the representative of the firm there was no presumption of implied agency such as was applicable to the case of a going concern. This case is not of much assistance as the observations regarding the liability of Sri Gopal were merely obiter dicta, the loan in that case having been raised when admittedly Lachhman Das had ceased to carry on business in the name of Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das. In 91 I C 824 (2) it was argued on behalf of the appellants that S. 264 applied only to persons who dealt with the firm before the dissolution, and therefore the plaintiff, who had no dealings with the firm before the dissolution, was not entitled to notice, and he could make liable only those persons who were in fact partners at the time the hundis were executed. This contention was repelled by Sanderson, C. J., who observed as follows:

In the first place the section says 'persons dealing with a firm.' It does not say 'persons dealing with a firm before its dissolution,' and, I see no reason why the words 'before its dissolution' should be interpolated in the section.

Buckland, J. concurred with this interpretation of S. 264, Contract Act. In 59 Cal 40 (3) it was held that persons who were not known to be partners were not excluded from the operation of S. 264, Contract Act, and could not escape liability in the absence of notice. Rankin, C. J., made the following observations at p. 53:

I do not agree with all that was said by Beaman, J., but I am entirely unable to say that there is any sufficient reason to cut down the prima facie and direct meaning of the words of this section so as to exclude from its operation persons who were not known to be partners. It is quite true that the principles of agency to be found in the Contract Act and in S. 115, Evidence Act, would not by themselves take one so far as S. 264, on this footing, takes us. That is very likely why S. 264 was specially enacted with reference to the particular case of partnership. * * * It is to my mind not paradoxical or, in any way, impossible to suppose that the Legislature meant to say that if a firm is dissolved and no notice is given, and people continue to trade with the firm under the old firm's name they are not to be affected by a secret dissolution.

While I find myself in respectful agreement with the observations of Rankin, C. J., I must hold that it is established on the present record that the plaintiffs knew that Sri Gopal was one of the partners of the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das, and that even after the dissolution Lachhman Das carried on business in the name of Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das until 1924. In 115 I C 707 (4) it was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council that where after a dissolution of partnership the business is continued in the same firm name, a partner who has retired at the dissolution is liable upon a contract made by the new firm with a person who has previously dealt with the old firm unless that person has received notice of the dissolution, even though public notice by advertisement has been given. It follows therefore that an additional personal notice is necessary in the case of old customers, while in the case of the new customers a public notice would be quite sufficient.

On behalf of the respondents reliance was placed on 78 P R 1903 (5), 68 I C 932 (6) and 146 I C 847 (7). The case reported as 115 I C 707 (4) is however not of any great assistance to the respondents as in that case it was definitely established that the person who was sought to be charged with liability as a partner had no dealings with the plaintiff's firm prior to the dissolution and also the plaintiff's firm was not even aware that he was a partner in the defendant's firm. In 68 I C 932 (6) it was laid down that the mere fact that the continuing partner was allowed to carry on business in the old firm's name, would not render the retired partner liable for debts contracted by the firm long after his retirement. These observations must however be regarded as obiter as it was found in that case that the plaintiffs had full knowledge of the dissolution and knew as a fact that the partner sought to be made liable had definitely retired from partnership a long time before liability was incurred by the other partner in the name of the firm. 146 I C 847 (7) is a Single Bench ruling, and it was observed therein that even if it was held that S. 264 applied to new customers, the appellants had still to prove that they knew that the objectors were partners in the firm when they started their dealings. This shows that there was no indication in that case that the person sought to be made liable as a partner was known to the plaintiffs to be a partner of the firm at any time. The observations of Beaman, J., in 30 I C 864 (8) have been fully discussed in 59 Cal 40 (3), and it is therefore unnecessary to refer to them in detail. For the reasons given above, I hold that this case is fully covered by the provisions of S. 264, Contract Act, and that the lower Court has erred in dismissing the suit against Sri Gopal.

It was urged by Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan on behalf of the appellants that it had not been proved that a dissolution of the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das had taken place on 18th February 1921. He maintained that the terms of the deed of dissolution dated 18th February 1921, showed that so long as the sum of Rupees 26,500 due to Sri Gopal was not paid by Lachhman Das, Sri Gopal was entitled to a share in the profits by receiving a lump sum of Rs. 2,000 a year on that account. Mr. Kishen Dayal however contended that the sum of Rs. 2,000 payable to Sri Gopal was merely interest on Rs. 26,500 due to him at the rate of 7 1/2 per cent per annum. As I have already held that Sri Gopal cannot escape liability in the present case in view of the provisions of S. 264, Contract Act, it is unnecessary to determine whether a complete dissolution took place on 18th February 1921. After considering the whole evidence on the record, I am of opinion, that it has not been established that the finding of the trial Court that the dissolution of the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das took place on 18th February 1921, is incorrect. I therefore hold that the firm was dissolved on 18th February 1921, and that thereafter Lachhman Das alone carried on business in the name of the firm Sri Gopal-Lachhman Das. For the reasons already given, I would accept the appeal and decree the claim of the plaintiffs against Sri Gopal also with costs throughout.

ADDISON AND DIN MOHAMMAD, JJ.

Lyallpur Bank, Ltd., in Liquidation

—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Gian Chand—Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 700 of 1934, Decided on 23rd November 1934.

(a) Award—Difference settled by arbitration—One party held liable to other assigning a pro-note to other—Adjustment in discharge of award—Subsequently obtaining of decree by filing award in Court—Adjustment of award not affected by decree following it—Suit on pro-note assigned during adjustment of award is maintainable.

A bank had a claim against G. Differences arose between them which were referred to arbitration. An award was made holding G liable as surety for the promissory note of one N, which he had assigned to the bank in part satisfaction of his own liability. Some days later he made a full adjustment of the award with the bank. He re-affirmed his liability as surety for H and in discharge of cash liability he assigned to the bank a promissory note that had been executed in his favour by one D. Later on the bank applied to the proper Court to have the award filed and judgment and decree followed in accordance with this award. Afterwards suit was instituted by the bank against both G and D on the basis of the promissory note assigned to the bank:

Held: that the adjustment of award was not in any way affected by the fact that some time later the award of which a full adjustment had been made was filed in Court. This adjustment was quite valid and gave the bank a right to sue on the promissory note in suit: 1921 Lah 248, Disting. [P 320 C 1, 2]

(b) Award — Compromise pendente lite differs from adjustment of award—Decree on award is decree of domestic Court re-affirmed by Court of law—Award if completely adjusted, bars execution of decree based on it.

A compromise pendente lite does not stand on the same footing as an adjustment made for the satisfaction of an award. Under the provisions of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., a party, as it were obtains a domestic decree in the shape of an award and after having obtained it, is further entitled to move a competent Court to have the award filed in Court. This merely enables such party to have a decree of a domestic Court re-confirmed by a Court of law and if the award has been completely adjusted, it would surely bar the party entitled under the award to re-execute the decree based on it. Even if a compromise pendente lite be liable to be superseded by the decree, the same consideration would not apply to an adjustment made in pursuance of an award if the award was later on made a rule of Court: 1921 Lah 248, Expl. [P 320 C 2; P 321 C 1]

Achhru Ram—for Respondent.

Din Mohammad, J.—The Lyallpur Bank, Ltd., in liquidation had a claim for Rs. 5,000 odd against one Gian Chand of Chiniot. Differences arose between them which were referred to arbitration. On 4th December 1929, an award was made holding Gian Chand liable as surety for the promissory-note of one Nazar Muhammad which he had assigned to the Bank in part satisfaction of his own liability. In addition to this he was required to pay Rs. 2,800 by monthly instalments of Rs. 100 each. On 6th December 1929, he made a full adjustment of the award with the bank. He re-affirmed his liability as surety for Nazar Muhammad and in discharge of his cash liability he assigned to the bank a promissory note dated 24th November 1929, for Rs. 1,900 that had been executed in his favour by one Dost Muhammad. He also paid Rs. 720 cash and secured a remission for the balance. On 2nd June 1930, the bank applied to the proper Court to have the award filed and on 23rd August 1930, judgment and decree followed in accordance with this award. On 22nd November 1932, the present suit was instituted by the bank against both Gian Chand and Dost Muhammad for recovery of Rs. 2,976-9-0 on the basis of the promissory-note dated 14th November 1929. Dost Muhammad did not take any interest in the suit but Gian Chand contested his liability on various grounds. The trial Court rejected his defence and passed a decree for the full amount against both the defendants. On appeal the learned District Judge reversed this decision on the ground that the decree dated 23rd August 1930, declaring the bank entitled to Rs. 2,800 from Gian Chand superseded the previous agreement dated 6th December 1929, and as the assignment of the promissory note formed a part of this agreement, the bank was not entitled to bring a suit on its basis.

I may say at once that the learned District Judge appears to me to have taken an erroneous view of the law. The adjustment dated 6th December 1929 was not in any way affected by the fact that some time later the award of which a full adjustment had been made was filed in Court. Under Art. 178, Lim. Act, an award can be filed within six months of the date when it is made, and if the reasoning of the learned District Judge be allowed to prevail, it would make every adjustment made towards the award in the meantime invalid and illegal, if immediately before the expiry of six months a party somehow or other considers it necessary to file it in Court. The award in this case declared the relative position of the parties on 4th December 1929, and the decree that followed could only be construed in terms of the award; were it not so, the bank would be entitled, on the reasoning employed by the District Judge, to ignore and realize again all sums that it had admittedly received in cash from Gian Chand after the award and before the decree. I am convinced, therefore, that this adjustment was quite valid and gave the bank a right to sue on the promissory note in suit.

It only remains to be seen whether 57 I C 153 (1) is applicable to the facts of this case. In that case the plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendant for recovery of money due to the former by the latter. The evidence was closed on 25th January 1910, and the case was adjourned to 10th February, and again to 28th February. On 9th February, the defendant by way of compromise executed a lease in favour of the plaintiffs of certain land under which their claim was to be adjusted. The plaintiffs, however, did not withdraw their suit and on 28th February, the Court passed a decree in their favour. The plaintiffs having failed to recover their claim sued again for the amount due to them under the lease at a time when their decree had become barred by limitation. It was held that the decree superseded the compromise and the plaintiffs could not sue on the lease to recover the sum which they might have obtained by execution of the decree. Chevis, C. J., who delivered the judgment, remarked that the sole question for them to decide was whether the plaintiffs having obtained a decree on 28th February 1910, and having allowed that decree to become time-barred could now fall back on the terms of the lease executed on 19th February 1910, and get a fresh decree.

In the course of his judgment he observed that the plaintiffs could not have the two rights, both to execute the decree and to enforce the deed, and as they had the right to enforce the decree they could not enforce the terms of the lease. In the first place I consider that a compromise pendente lite does not stand on the same footing as an adjustment made for the satisfaction of an award. Under the provisions of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., a party, as it were, obtains a domestic decree in the shape of an award and after having obtained it, is further entitled to move a competent Court to have the award filed in Court. This merely enables such party to have a decree of a domestic Court re-confirmed by a Court of law and if the award has been completely adjusted, as in this case, it would surely bar the party entitled under the award to re-execute the decree based on it. Even if a compromise pendente lite be liable to be superseded by the decree, I do not think the same considerations would apply to an adjustment made in pursuance of an award if six months later the award was made a rule of Court. Secondly, it appears from the report of that case that the learned Judges were mainly impressed by the fact that the plaintiff was seeking a remedy after his remedy under the decree was time-barred. This was however, not the case here. I would, therefore, hold that 57 I C 153 (1) did not bar the present suit. For reasons given, I would accept the appeal. The costs of the appeal here and below will be realizable from Gian Chand only but for the costs of the trial Court both Gian Chand and Dost Muhammad will be jointly responsible to the plaintiff.

Monroe, J.—Two appeals No. 398 of 1934 and No. 1949 of 1933 involve the same question, which arises out of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Punjab Zamindars Bank Ltd., the appellants. The claim in each case was a money claim by the Bank against the defendant: the Bank sued "through Sardar Desa Singh, Manager of the said Bank," and the first issue in each case was whether Desa Singh had authority to institute the suit. The powers of the Manager are defined by Art. 106 of the Bank's Articles of Association. It is very inelegantly drafted, but I think that the construction is free from doubt. It is drawn in clearly defined paragraphs, the first six of which commence with the words "he will" and go on to give various powers of management: in the sixth and seventh paragraphs, the opening phraseology of the paragraph is changed; the present question arises on the construction of the sixth paragraph—it commences with the words:

He, under the previous sanction of the executive board—specially and generally obtained, will, it gives power in the first place to demand, collect, receive and give effectual bona fide discharges of all debts, advances and claims: following a comma, the clause goes on,

he will have further the power to take and use all lawful proceedings and means for recovering and receiving the said debts and advances and also to commence and to prosecute and to defend at law all actions, etc.

It will be observed that grammatically the words "under the previous sanction, &c.," refer only to the power of demanding, collecting and receiving and in his argument Mr. Puri has argued that we must not extend these words to the later powers: this would lead to the absurdity that the Manager could commence legal proceedings without having power validly to call in the debt sued for. The paragraph must be read as a whole in the first place—in addition the use of the words 'said' before debts, 'further' and 'also' show a close connection between the separate parts of the paragraphs. I hold, therefore, that all the powers conferred by the paragraph are exercisable only under previous sanction and as, admittedly, there was no executive board and hence no previous sanction, it follows that the Manager had not authority by virtue of Art. 106 to institute the suits. Mr. Puri then argued that the acts of the Manager had been ratified by a resolution of the Board of Directors; but the alleged ratification was made after the period of limitation had expired. On the authority of 1932 Lah 388 (1) the learned District Judge held that the ratification made after such expiry was of no effect. In my opinion, this finding of the learned Judge is correct and is supported by the authority cited and other authorities. As a result of these findings, the suits were dismissed: they were instituted without proper authority and the claims became barred by limitation before ratification by the Directors. Accordingly, I would dismiss both appeals with costs. The respondents in appeal No. 1949 have filed cross objections claiming that the lower appellate Court should have allowed costs of the trial Court to the defendant: but as the learned trial Judge cannot be said to have exercised his discretion improperly in refusing costs, I would dismiss the cross-objections.

Civil Misc. Petn. No. 767 of 1935, Decided on 17th December 1935, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Privy Council against the judgment in civil original No. 7 of 1935, reported in 1935 Lah 779.

 * Privy Council—Leave to appeal—Company wound up by order of Court on petition from creditor of company—Application for leave to appeal against such order—Application not disclosing name of any respondent—Application is bad in law and should be dismissed—Per F. B.; Tek Chand, J., contra.

A company was dissolved by an order of the High Court passed on a petition made by one of the creditors of the company. The petition for the winding up of the company was properly made under S. 162/166, Companies Act. An application was filed by one of the contributories of the company wound up, for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the order of compulsory winding up. This application for leave to appeal was framed similar to the application made for the winding up of the company. This application did not specifically disclose the names of any respondent, although notices were issued to the Official Liquidator and the original petitioner on whose petition the company was wound up. The point of dispute was if application for leave to appeal was properly constituted and good in law:

Held: (Per Young, C. J. and Addison, J.) that an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from an order of winding up of a company is not a proceeding in winding up as contemplated by the rules and orders of the High Court, and must comply with the provisions of R. 1 of the Rules and Orders made by the Lahore High Court contained in Vol. 5, Chap. 8 in addition to the requirements of O. 45, R. 3 (1), Civil P. C. As such each person who is sought to be made a respondent ought to be named in the petition. Moreover the company under winding up orders is also a necessary party which should be named in the petition. In all proceedings there should be a right litigated, a person asserting that right, and a person interested to deny it, i. e. an opposite party. If the petition failed to provide the name of even one respondent, such petition would be wholly bad and ought to be dismissed: 1932 P C 1, Applied. [P 323 C 2; P 324 C 1]

Per Tek Chand, J.—It is no doubt true that, as laid down in S. 166, Companies Act, a petition for the compulsory winding up of a company may be made either by the company itself or contributories. But after proceedings have been taken on such petition and a winding up order passed, the person at whose instance the proceedings were initiated has no special locus in the matter. As enacted in S. 167, Companies Act, an order for winding up a company operates in favour of all the creditors and of all the contributories of the company as if made on a joint petition of a creditor and a contributory. The order is for "the benefit of all concerned." The real parties to the proceedings therefore are not merely the petitioning creditor and the company but the entire body of creditors and contributories, and as a winding up order is made appealable by statute, it follows that any creditor or contributory, who feels dissatisfied with it, may take the matter in appeal. But to such an appeal all the creditors and contributories, as persons affected by the order, sought to be appealed from, are necessary parties, and it is not open to the appellant to pick and choose, and implead a few of them as respondents in the appeal, to the exclusion of the others. But while this is so, it is not necessary that the names and addresses of all these numerous persons should appear at the heading of the memorandum of appeal, which attacks the winding up order. There is no provision of the law which lays down that a memorandum of appeal in such case will not be considered valid, unless it contains, or is accompanied by, a list of all the creditors and contributories. The appeal is sufficiently described if it bears the same title as the original petition and also gives the name or names of the person appealing. Notice to the "opposite party" consisting, as it does, of all the creditors and contributories other than the appellants is served by advertisement in the Government Gazette and one or more public newspapers, and by leaving a copy at the Head Office of the Company if there is one in exist-

tence. It is not necessary, even if it were possible, to effect personal service on all the creditors and contributories. The only person who is given personal notice is the liquidator so that he may be ready to inform (the appellate Court) of any facts and circumstances in relation to the affairs of the company, but he is not a respondent to the appeal, in the real sense of the term. It cannot be expected that in the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council the applicant should mention all the creditors ex nomine on the title page. Besides by presenting in a High Court an application under Ss. 109 and 110, Civil P. C., accompanied by the "grounds of appeal," the applicant does not lodge the appeal to His Majesty in Council. The application for leave to appeal is not by any means a new and substantive "cause." It is merely a "miscellaneous application" in the case. Such an application is the "assertion" within the period prescribed by law of the applicant's "intention to exercise the right to appeal" which, he claims, is given to him by statute, and all that he asks for is that this Court should certify that the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C., as regards "value and nature" and is appealable as a right.

In such an application it is not necessary to repeat in detail the names and addresses of all the parties to the "cause" decided by the Court, against whose order the applicant intends to appeal. All that need be done is to give sufficient indication of the particulars of the case so as to fix its identity, and this may be done by giving either its number or its short title. On the presentation of the application, the relevant record is put up and it is obligatory on the Court to direct that notices be served on the other parties to the cause (as disclosed on the record) to show cause why the certificate should not be granted as laid down in O. 45, R. 3 (2). Omission to give in detail the names of all the parties in applications under S. 109 should not be considered a fatal defect. [P 326 C 2; P 327 C 1]

Young, C. J.—These are two applications under Ss. 109-B and 110, Civil P. C., for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the order of a Full Bench of this Court winding up the Peoples Bank of Northern India, dated 22nd May 1935. The petitioner in one case is Lala Harkishan Lal and in the other the Bharat Insurance Company Ltd.

The petition by Lala Harkishan Lal (No. 796 of 1935) can be dealt with shortly. It was filed by Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney. The power of attorney filed in favour of this Advocate is signed by Mr. Jiwan Lal Gauba as attorney for Lala Harkishan Lal, but there is nothing on the record of this Court to show that Mr. Jiwan Lal Gauba had any authority from the petitioner to authorise the filing of this petition by Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney. Today Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney has produced what purports to be a copy of a power of attorney signed by Lala Harkishan Lal in favour of Mr. Jiwan Lal Gauba. We cannot however look at this document. Mr. Jiwan Lal Gauba and Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney both had notice that this point would be taken today and the original power of attorney has not been produced. We cannot therefore hear Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney with regard to this petition and it is dismissed. In my opinion the petition of the Bharat Insurance Company, Ltd., must also be dismissed. The petition names no one as respondent. It completely fails to comply with the rules of this Court in Ch. 8, of Vol. 5, of the Rules and Orders. R. 1, is as follows :

An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council shall comply with the requirements of R. 3(1), O. 45, Civil P. C., and contain the following particulars : (a) the name and address of each applicant ; (b) the name and address of each person whom it is proposed to make a respondent ; (c) the High Court in which, and the name of the Judge by whom, the decree complained of was made ; (d) the date when such decree was made ; (e) the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal ; and (f) the relief sought by such application ; and shall be signed by the applicant or by some Advocate or Vakil on the rolls of the Court on his behalf.

It has been argued by counsel for the petitioner that these rules have not the force of law and that, therefore they are not binding and that we ought to ignore them. He further argues that under Vol. 2, Ch. 1, Rules and Orders of the High Court, the rules are laid down for proceedings in winding up a company in the High Court and that the heading of this petition is in accordance with the heading given in that Chapter. In my opinion an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is not a proceeding in winding up as contemplated by the Rules and Orders of the High Court. If on the other hand it is a proceeding in winding up then R. 95, Vol. 2, would apply. That rule is :

The general practice of the Court shall, in cases, not provided for by the Indian Companies Act, or these rules, and so far as the same is not inconsistent with the said Act or these rules, apply to all proceedings for winding up a company in any Court.

This rule, if applicable, would make the rules framed by the High Court in Vol. 5, Ch. 8, have the force of law and a petition to His Majesty therefore would have, according to law, to be in the form laid down in that rule. In my opinion, however the winding up rules do not apply. It is difficult to follow the argument of counsel that the rules laid down by the High Court should be ignored. Counsel in support of this argument argues that it would be impossible to make each of the persons, who ought to be a party to this appeal, respondents. The rule however does not make anything impossible. It merely says that among other particulars to be given must be the name and address of each person whom it is proposed to make a respondent. It would have been possible for the petitioner in this case to have made the petitioner in the winding up proceedings a respondent in this petition.

Another obvious respondent was the company (through the Directors), the Privy Council having held in 55 Mad 180 (1) at pp. 192-193 that an appeal had been properly instituted in the company's name. In fact, the company is most affected by a winding up order. Besides, it is elementary that in all proceedings there should be a right litigated, a person asserting that right, and a person interested to deny it, i. e. an opposite party. That respondents must be named is also shown by the provisions of O. 45, R. 3 (2), Civil P. C., which enacts that notice must be served on the opposite party to show cause why the certificate referred to in sub-r. (1) should not be granted. The petition therefore fails to provide the name of even one respondent. Such petition in my view is wholly bad and ought to be dismissed. Counsel finally argues that the petitioner ought to be allowed to amend and to be given further time under S. 5, Lim. Act. I do not think this is a case where any indulgence ought to be shown to the petitioner. The petition itself was filed at the very last minute to bring it within time. If there had been any real desire to file an appeal to the Privy Council and time was of importance the appeal could have been filed very much earlier than it was. I note further that the only persons who appear to object to the orders of the High Court are Lala Harkishan Lal himself who is of course a debtor of the company to a very large amount, and the Bharat Insurance Company, Limited, which is controlled by Lala Harkishan Lal. Neither the company itself nor the general body of creditors have thought proper to ask for leave to appeal. In my opinion, this petition ought to be dismissed.

Addison, J.—I agree.

Tek Chand, J.—This is an application under Ss. 109 (b) and 110, Civil P. C., presented by the Bharat Insurance Company, Limited for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the order of a Special Bench of this Court, dated 22nd May 1935, ordering the winding up of the Peoples' Bank of Northern India Limited.

The Bank is a joint stock company incorporated under the Companies Act 7 of 1913, having several thousands shareholders who had subscribed over 95 lakhs of rupees of its share-capital, out of which nearly 40 lakhs had been paid up. The number of depositors and other creditors is much larger and to them one and a half crore of rupees in round figures was due at the close of the year 1934. On 22nd January 1935, Lala Madan Gopal, who is a share-holder and also claims to be a creditor, presented in this Court, a petition under Ss. 162/166 of the Act for the compulsory winding up of the company. By order of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, a Special Bench of three Judges was constituted to hear the petition. The usual advertisements issued in the Punjab Government Gazette and several newspapers, and at the date of hearing the Directors of the Company, several contributories, and over 700 creditors holding deposits of thirty-three lakhs of rupees approximately, opposed the petition, while seven creditors of the value of Rs. 50,000 supported it. One of the opposing contributories was the Bharat Insurance Company, Limited, which holds 3,000 shares in the Company. After lengthy proceedings the Special Bench, on 22nd May 1935, granted the petition and ordered that the Company be wound up by the Court. An Official liquidator was then appointed under S. 175 of the Act for the purpose of conducting the proceedings in the winding up. In accordance with R. 1 of the "winding up Rules" framed by this Court under S. 246, Companies Act, (printed at p. 1 at seq of Ch. 1, Vol. 2, of the Rules and Orders), Lala Madan

1. Ripon Press and Sugar Mills Co. Ltd. v. Gopal Chetty, 1932 P C 1=136 I C 114=58 I A 416=55 Mad 180 (P C).

Gopal had intituled his petition for the compulsory winding-up of the Company as:

In the matter of the Indian Companies Act 7 of 1913, and of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, Limited.

The present application by the Bharat Insurance Company Limited for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the winding-up order was also headed:

In the matter of the Indian Companies Act 7 of 1913, and of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, Limited (in liquidation), Lahore.

In this application no person was specifically named as a respondent. The office, however, issued notices to (1) Lala Madan Gopal, the original petitioner, and (2) the Official Liquidator, to show cause why a certificate under O. 45, Civil P.C., for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council be not granted. The applicant (Bharat Insurance Company Limited) was required to deposit process-fees for service of notices on Lala Madan Gopal and the Liquidator; this was duly done and notices served on them. At the hearing of the application before us, Lala Madan Gopal appeared and raised a preliminary objection that the application was not properly framed inasmuch as neither he, nor the Company, nor any other person had been impleaded by name as respondents in the appeal to His Majesty-in-Council. The objector contends that it was not sufficient for the applicant merely to give at the heading of the application the title of the original petition on which the winding up order was passed. He points out that in every 'cause' there must be a right litigated, a person asserting that right, and an 'opposite party' against whom that right is sought to be enforced and as in this application no 'opposite party' is named, the application is bad and should be dismissed in limine.

The objection appears to me to be based on a misapprehension of the true import and effect of a winding up order as well as of the nature of proceedings on applications made under Ss. 109 and 110, Civil P. C. It is no doubt true that, as laid down in S. 166, Companies Act, a petition for the compulsory winding up of a company may be made either by the company itself or by any creditor or creditors, or contributory or contributories. But after proceedings have been taken on such a petition and a winding-up order passed, the person at whose instance the proceedings were initiated has no special locus in the matter. As enacted in S. 167, Companies Act, an order for winding up a company operates in favour of all the creditors and of all the contributories of the company as if made on a joint petition of a creditor and a contributory. The order is, as observed by Buckley, L. J., a judgment for "the benefit of all concerned." The real parties to the proceedings, therefore, are not merely the petitioning creditor and the company but the entire body of creditors and contributories, and as a winding up order is made appealable by statute, it follows that any creditor or contributory, who feels dissatisfied with it, may take the matter in appeal. But to such an appeal all the creditors and contributories, as persons affected by the order, sought to be appealed from, are necessary parties, and it is not open to the appellant to pick and choose, and implead a few of them as respondents in the appeal, to the exclusion of the others. It is thus clear that the creditors and contributories, other than the person or persons appealing, constitute the 'opposite party' to the appeal, and every one of them is entitled to receive proper notice of the admission of the appeal and to enter appearance and be heard before the appellate Court.

But while this is so, it is not necessary that the names and addresses of all these numerous persons should appear at the heading of the memorandum of appeal, which attacks the winding up order. I am not aware of any provision of the law and indeed none was cited before us by the objector which lays down that a memorandum of appeal in such a case will not be considered valid, unless it contains, or is accompanied by, a list of all the creditors and contributories. The appeal is sufficiently described if it bears the same title as the original petition, i. e. "In the matter of the Indian Companies Act and of the (name of the Co.) Limited" and also gives the name or names of the person appealing. Notice to the 'opposite party' consisting, as it does, of all the creditors and contributories other than the appellants is served by advertisement in the Government Gazette and one or more public newspapers, and by leaving a copy at the head office of the company, if there is one in existence. It is not necessary, even if it were possible, to effect personal service on all the creditors and contributories. The only person who is given personal notice is the liquidator so that he may, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 55 Mad 180 (1), at p. 194, be ready to inform (the appellate Court) of any facts and circumstances in relation to the affairs of the company;

but he is not a respondent to the appeal, in the real sense of the term. In the matter of intituling the memorandum of appeal and effecting service on the "opposite party," the procedure followed in the appellate Court is, so far as may be, the same as that observed in the Court of first instance for the presentation and trial of the original petition for winding up. It is considered that the "opposite party" to that petition is not only the directors of the company, but the entire body of creditors and contributories; and that it is not necessary for the petitioner to give their names and addresses on the title page of the petition, or to file a list thereof with it, and service on them is effected not individually but by public advertisement. It may be stated that this procedure was duly followed in the objector's petition for the winding-up of this company and when a number of share-holders and creditors appeared at the hearing to support or oppose the petition, the title of the case was not amended so as to add the "supporters" as co-petitioners and to enter the names of the "opponents" as respondents to the petition. The case continued to be intituled as before, namely "In the matter of the Indian Companies Act and of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, Ltd." and this is the only heading given in the certified copy of the judgment of the Special Bench supplied to the Bharat Insurance Company, Ltd., which Mr. Achhru Ram produced before us. Indeed, it appears that no consolidated list of the opposing or supporting creditors and contributories was ever prepared or is available even now; their names will be found scattered all over the record and it will require considerable effort to collect them at one place. In these circumstances, it could not be expected that in the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council the applicant should have mentioned all the creditors conomine on the title page.

Another fallacy underlying the objection is the assumption that the application before us is a "substantive" cause. It is hardly necessary to say that this is not so. By presenting in this Court the application under Ss. 109 and 110, Civil P. C., accompanied by the "grounds of appeal," the applicant does not lodge the appeal to His Majesty in Council. That will be done in England after leave has been given, the record printed, and transmitted to that country. It is laid down in R. 29 of the "Judicial Committee Rules, 1925" that the "Petition of Appeal" may be lodged within four months of the arrival of the record in England, if it is printed in India, or within one month of the date of the completion of the printing thereof in England: see Bentwich's Privy Council Practice, pp. 210 and 351. The present application before us is not by any means a new and substantive "cause." It is merely a "miscellaneous application" in the case decided by the Special Bench and is truly described and numbered as such (Civil Misc. No. 767 of 1935). Such an application is, as observed by Bentwich (p. 141) the "assertion" within the period prescribed by law of the applicant's "intention to exercise the right to appeal," which, he claims, is given to him by statute, and all that he asks for is that this Court should certify that the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C., as regards 'value and nature' and is appealable as of right. In such an application it is not necessary to repeat in detail the names and addresses of all the parties to the 'cause' decided by the Court, against whose order the applicant intends to appeal. All that need be done is to give sufficient indication of the particulars of the case so as to fix its identity, and this may be done by giving either its number or its short title. On the presentation of the application, the relevant record is put up and it is obligatory on the Court to direct that notices be served on the other parties to the cause (as disclosed on the record) to show cause why the certificate should not be granted as laid down in O. 45, R. 3 (2).

An application for grant of leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council is as much an application in the original 'cause' as applications for having ex parte decrees set aside, or those for review of judgment, or for grant of certificates under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, for preferring second appeals to the High Court on questions of custom, or for certificates to appeal under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent. It is conceded that in none of these, is it necessary for the the applicant to set out at length in the heading of the application the names and addresses of all the parties to the original suit or appeal (as the case may be). It is sufficient if the number of the cause or its short title is given correctly. If this is so, I fail to see why the omission to give in detail the names of all the parties in applications under S. 109 should be considered a fatal defect. The objector relies strongly on R. 1 of the Rules and Orders, Vol. 5, Ch. 8-A, which states that an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council shall contain, inter alia, the name and address of each person whom it is proposed to make a respondent to the appeal. The rules in this Chapter, however, have no statutory force. They are by no means mandatory but are merely directory and may be modified according to the exigencies of each case. In any case, non-compliance with them is not such defect as would be fatal to the maintainability of the petition. In the majority of cases where the number of parties to a cause is small, and the decision binds some or all of them, it is generally convenient to set out in the petition the names of all the parties, but this is not possible in all cases, especially where the judgment sought to be appealed against is one in rem and the number of persons affected is too numerous to be easily known or conveniently entered in the petition.

The objector, realizing that the rule in Ch. 8-A, referred to by him, has not the force of law, urged that it was, at any rate, a 'rule of practice' and should have been followed strictly, but if I may be allowed to refer to my own experience (extending over a period of 28 years in this branch of the law) I can say that it has not been the invariable practice of the Punjab Chief Court or this Court to insist upon its observance in all cases. In this connection reference may be made to the following two cases as illustrative of what I have said above: In C. M. No. 42 of 1919 (2), there were 23 plaintiffs and one defendant. The judgment of this Court was in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and in the petition under S. 109, Civil P. C., instead of naming all the 23 plaintiffs as the "opposite party" he merely styled the case C. M. No. 42 of 1919 (2). This was considered sufficient as the names and addresses of the "others" could be ascertained by reference to the original record. C. M. No. 295 of 1920 (3). In this case there were 10 plaintiffs and several defendants. The names of all of them were not given in the petition under S. 109, but it was merely headed "Ahmad Khan etc. v. Mt. Chhanon Bibi etc." Many more cases of this type will be found, if a search were made in the record room.

It will thus be seen that R. 1, Chap. VIII-A has not been strictly followed in all cases, and it cannot be described as a "rule of practice," non-compliance with which is a fatal defect. The objector also referred us to R. 95 of the winding up rules printed in Chap. I, Vol. 2 of the Rules and Orders of this Court. This rule however merely states that:

In matters arising in the winding up of a Company, for which no specific provision has been made in the rules, the practice of the Court will be followed.

The application before us is not a "matter in the winding up" but is a miscellaneous application for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council against the winding up order itself. To such an application the rules in this Chapter are obviously inapplicable, and in any case as stated already, there is no such uniform and invariable practice as alleged by the objector. In my opinion the preliminary objection is without force and must be overruled. It may be mentioned in conclusion that the objector Lala Madan Gopal can have no legitimate grievance on this score, as the office actually served him with notice of this application, and he has not been prejudiced in any way.

On the merits it was admitted by the objector that he had no valid objection to raise. The order of the Special Bench of this Court which the petitioner proposes to appeal from, was passed on the Original Side by a Bench of three Judges, who "finally" decided that the Company be wound up. The amount involved is far above Rs. 10,000 and the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110.

I would accordingly allow the application (C. M. 767 of 1935) and grant the applicant (Bharat Insurance Co., Ltd.) the certificate applied for, but having regard to all the circumstances would leave the parties to bear their own costs of these proceedings. The other application (C. M. 796 of 1935) which purports to be presented on behalf of Lala Harkishen Lal, another shareholder of the Company, for grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council against the winding up order, is clearly unauthorised and must be dismissed. It was presented by Messrs. Dev Raj Sawhney and Basant Krishna, Advocates, who purported to 'act' under a vakalatnama signed by 'Jiwan Lal Gauba, attorney for and on behalf of Lala Harkishen Lal.' No power-of-attorney on behalf of Lala Harkishen Lal in favour of Lala Jiwan Lal was filed with the petition or was placed on the record. When the case came up for hearing before us on 13th November, Lala Madan Gopal brought this defect to the notice of the Court and an adjournment was granted to enable the Advocates to produce the power-of-attorney or a certified copy thereof. But this was not done even at the adjourned hearing on 22nd November 1935. Under Act 22 of 1926, no Advocate can 'act' without a proper vakalatnama by the person, on whose behalf the application purports to be made, or by his recognised agent as defined in O. 3, R. 2, Civil P. C.

As a last resort, Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney urged that he had been orally authorised by Lala Harkishen Lal to 'plead' for him in the application but counsel can only 'plead,' if there is a proper application before the Court, and as this is not the case, he has no right to be heard. There is little doubt that there has been gross carelessness in this case. The winding-up order was passed on 22nd May 1935; the application under S. 109, Civil P. C., was not made till 8th October, which was the very last day of limitation, having been extended on account of vacation; the application was not accompanied by a power-of-attorney from Lala Harkishen Lal and the power-of-attorney or its copy has not been produced even though an adjournment was granted for this purpose. I would accordingly dismiss this application as unauthorised. There will be no

TEK CHAND AND DALIP SINGH, JJ.

Ram Singh Kabuli & Co. — Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 1982 of 1933, Decided on 25th October 1935, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, D/- 28th August 1933.

Limitation—For application of Art. 54, Limitation Act, allegation of non-execution of hundis is necessary—Defence should make clear allegation of limitation in written statement.

For Art. 54, Lim. Act to apply, it must be alleged that the hundis were not executed as promised. If the defendants wish to make this allegation, it is for them to make it in their written statement or their pleadings clearly and without any attempt to mislead the plaintiffs. [P 329 C 2]

Badri Das and Daulat Ram—for Appellants.

Achhru Ram and Inder Dev—for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—The plaintiffs in this case sued the defendants for the price of timber supplied on an agreement dated 1st December 1919, printed at p. 111, Vol. 2 of the printed paper book. The plaintiffs alleged that the terms, according to the agreement, were that cash to the amount of one-third was to be paid immediately on delivery of timber and hundis on a five months' period were also to be drawn at the time for the remaining two-thirds of the price. There was a term in the contract as to the cutting short of the period of the hundis in case delay took place in the payment owing to the default of the defendants in carrying out measurements. There was no allegation in the plaint that the hundis were not duly drawn but it was alleged that from time to time the defendants executed hundis some of which, however, were not honoured, and hence a balance was left amounting to the item in suit which was due from the defendants to the plaintiffs.

In the first written statement to the plaintiff the defendants took various objections, but the main plea was that certain payments made by them had not been duly admitted and that if accounts were taken the result would show that the plaintiffs had been overpaid, and not that any sum was due from the defendants. There was no plea whatsoever that the suit was barred by limitation. Subsequently to this the plaintiffs alleged that they had made a mistake as regards certain payments made by the defendants which were admitted by them in the original plaintiff and asked for leave to amend the plaintiff. The plaintiff was, after some dispute, allowed to be amended but the onus of the issue in which these payments, which were once admitted and now denied, were to be proved, was cast on the plaintiffs and this order was upheld up to this Court. In reply to this amended plaintiff, for the first time, the defendants took the plea that this suit was barred by limitation. Nowhere was it alleged, however that the hundis which had been agreed to be drawn, had not been drawn, nor was any reason given as to how the suit was barred by limitation. Some time after this, on an application made by the plaintiffs' counsel, the defendants were called upon to furnish the reasons as to why the suit was barred by limitation. The only thing that their counsel then stated was that most of the items were barred by limitation because limitation ran from the date when the payment fell due.

This appears to have satisfied the Court and everybody else; at any rate nothing further was done in the matter and the issue remained with the onus on the plaintiffs that the suit was within time. During the course of the evidence one Jagat Singh, a partner of the plaintiff firm, appeared as a witness and in cross-examination he stated that he did not remember that any hundi had been drawn by the defendants after 15th February 1920. When the case finally came for argument it appears to have been argued by the learned counsel for the defendants that the suit was barred by limitation, because Art. 54, Lim. Act, applied. Owing to the Punjab Loans Limitation Act the period for the suit, if it fell within Art. 52 or Art. 53 or Art. 80, would have been six years. The plaintiffs, evidently thinking that their suit came within one of these articles and was well within time, as admittedly it would be if any of these articles applied, never thought that the defendants' plea of limitation was based on the allegation that no hundis had been drawn. The plaintiffs therefore appear to have been taken by surprise and all sorts of contentions were urged in the Court below which did not find favour with the Court, which finally held that, as the plaintiff did not contain any allegation that the hundis had been drawn as agreed upon and as the defendants had pleaded that the hundis were not so drawn, (which does not appear to be correct on the record) and as Jagat Singh admitted that he had seen no hundis after 15th February 1920, (a fact which also is not quite correct, because what Jagat Singh stated was that he did not remember whether any hundi had been drawn after 15th February 1920) the suit was barred by limitation, applying Art. 54 and three years period or in the alternative under Art. 115. The suit was therefore dismissed. The plaintiffs have come in appeal.

The findings on other issues which have been agitated before us will be dealt with later, but the first point to decide is obviously the question of limitation. It appears to me that there is no force in the contention that the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs had never alleged, as already stated, that the hundis were not executed. For Art. 54, Lim. Act to apply, it must be alleged that the hundis were not executed as promised. If the defendants wished to make this allegation it was for them to make it in their written statement or their pleadings clearly and without any attempt to mislead the plaintiffs. The whole trend of the litigation however shows that no such idea really entered the defendants' mind. There was some suggestion that some of the items were barred by limitation, though it is not clear why this was so.

There was no hint even that the whole suit was barred by limitation because of the non-execution of certain hundis. In the absence therefore of any allegation in the plaintiff that these hundis were not drawn, as agreed upon, and in the absence of any such pleading on the part of the defendants, it was not possible to hold that the hundis had not been drawn up, a point which had never been put in issue and that therefore the suit was barred by limitation. I would therefore overrule the decision of the Court below on this point and hold that the suit is within limitation. The learned counsel for the respondents agrees that if Art. 54 does not apply, the suit is not barred by limitation. (Their Lordships after discussing question of various payments concluded thereby their findings and then proceeded.) Upon these findings, the learned counsel on both sides agree that the total amount due to the plaintiffs is Rs. 6,6,311 in round figures, omitting annas and pies. The interest on this amount up to date reckoned at 4 per cent comes to Rs. 39,780. Hence the total amount due to the plaintiffs comes to Rs. 1,06,091. I would therefore accept the appeal and decree the plaintiffs' suit for this amount. As the plaintiffs claimed Rs. 1,30,000, and have succeeded only to the extent of about Rs. 66,000, I consider it fair to allow them two-third costs only in both Courts.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

 Criminal Trial—Evidence—Court determines guilt or innocence of accused—Prosecution should not deceive Court by "padding" cases—Person procuring false evidence runs risk of punishing innocent persons.

The duty of every one, police officers or constables, Government officials and plain citizens is to allow a case to come before the Court as it is without fabrication or "padding." It is for the Courts to decide whether an accused person is innocent or guilty, and not for the prosecution to determine his guilt in advance and attempt to deceive the Court into giving a verdict based on false evidence. Any one procuring false evidence or fabricating false evidence runs the risk of imprisonment and degradation from office, and what is still more serious, may have the burden on his shoulder of sending an innocent man to the gallows. [P 333 C 2]

Abdul Haye and Bashir Ahmad—for Appellants.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Young, C. J.—Ashiq Mohammad and Sadiq Mahammad have been convicted of the murder of Mt. Ram Ditta, child of seven or eight years, and have been sentenced to death. The main evidence for the prosecution is that of Hasan Bakhsh, P. W. 2, an approver. The accused are sons of Nawab Khan, a petition writer of Lodhran, and Hassan Bakhsh is a relation. Hassan Bakhsh has given a long statement, which includes a description of the murder, an account of disposal of the body, and of his own activities immediately afterwards. The following account is taken from his statement. On 13th February 1935 Hassan Bakhsh went to Lodhran to the house of Nawab Khan where he sat in a baithak with the two accused; they told him that there was a girl of five or six who was wearing ornaments worth Rs. 80 or Rs. 90 and suggested that her ornaments should be stolen. Hassan Bakhsh was reluctant but was eventually overborne and agreed to join in the theft: he and Sadiq Mohammad remained in the baithak, while Ashiq Mohammad went for the girl with whom he returned in a few minutes: the three then took the girl into an adjoining kothri and through it to an inner kotha, where they started to remove her ear-rings, sixteen in number: she started to cry and the assailants became alarmed and decided to kill her: the approver caught her legs, Sadiq Mohammad her hands and Ashiq Mohammad choked her: they came out of the inner kotha and divided the ear-rings: they then returned to the house: Hassan Bakhsh said that he was going and the accused asked him to return the next day so that they might throw away the dead body somewhere. During his absence from Lodhran he deposited his share of the ornaments with Mehrab Khan, his friend and resident of a neighbouring village.

On 18th February he returned to Lodhran and went straight to the house of Nawab Khan, where he saw Ashiq Mohammad and Sadiq Mohammad. They told him that the house was being watched by khattris, (the murdered girl was a Hindu), that they had not been able to remove the dead body and that the body was beginning to smell: it was suggested that Hassan Bakhsh, who pretended to possess powers of divination, should create a diversion by going to the bazar and talk of his powers, so that the khattris might hear of him and seek his aid in discovering the whereabouts of the corpse: this ruse succeeded and the attention of the khattris was distracted: Hassan Bakhsh arranged with them that he would set out that day to divine the whereabouts of the body. The attention of the khattris being distracted, the accused and Hassan Bakhsh took the opportunity of getting rid of the body: it was removed from the kotha by Ashiq Mohammad and thrown over a wall into the bhana of Khilanda, P. W. 11, at a short distance from the kotha: Hassan Bakhsh then set out with the persons interested in the girl and after leading them a wildgoose chase, he divined that the body was lying in the city in a house near the house of Nawab Khan on the other side of the wall. When the party returned the Assistant Sub-Inspector of police was present and told them that the body had been found. Suspicion arose that Hassan Bakhsh had been deceiving the party and he was called by the police, but it was not till 27th February that, after a conversation with the lambardar and others, he made a statement to the police and he and the accused were arrested. What his statement was is not and could not have been shown on the record, but one result of it was that on 28th February the ear-rings which Hassan Bakhsh said that he had taken as his share were produced at Hassan Bakhsh's instance by Mehrab Khan from a hiding place in the roof of the latter's house. On the same day Sadiq Mohammad and Ashiq Mohammad made statements before Mr. Lekh Raj, a Magistrate, admitting only that they had taken part in secretly removing the body from the kotha and throwing it over the neighbouring wall, and explaining that the presence of the body had been discovered accidentally by their grandfather Namdar. Their action was prompted by a fear that if the presence of the body in their house had been known, suspicion would have attached to them. When it is remembered that relations between Mohammadans and Hindus in the Multan District were at this time very strained and that the accused are Mohammadans, and the girl was a Hindu this fear ought not to be considered as unnatural and might well have been entertained by an ignorant, though innocent, person. It is also alleged for the prosecution that two further discoveries were made on 28th February, the first by Ashiq Mohammad and the other by Sadiq Mohammad, in this order, according to the evidence of the witnesses at these discoveries. The fard of the first of these discoveries (Ex. P. E.) relates that Ashiq Mohammad produced five gold ear-rings "buried in the ground to the north of the door towards the eastern wall along with a card-board box containing those ear-rings."

The fard of the second discovery relates that Sadiq Mohammad produced six ear-rings "tied in a white khadar piece of cloth from his house where chaff was stored, buried in the ground near the eastern wall."

Both fards are signed by the same six persons namely, Imam Shah, Zaildar, Jiwan Das, Kabir Mohammad, Sufaid Posh, Datu Mal, goldsmith, Behari Lal, father of the deceased and Mt. Mehngi, wife of Behari Lal. Hassan Bakhsh after a promise of pardon made a statement on 3rd March to Mr. Moon, District Magistrate, which contained the story in a brief form, which he related afterwards in greater detail in Court. The evidence against the accused is in the first place the statement of the approver. We think that there is no doubt that, apart from the question of the participation of the accused in the crime, this statement is generally true. It has been corroborated in several important particulars and so far as it can be tested by independent evidence, it has been found to be correct. The evidence to connect the accused with the crime (apart from the approver's statement) consists in the case of each of his own statement before the Magistrate describing the finding and disposal of the body, and the discovery of ornaments made by him.

The statements alone are not in themselves sufficient to connect the accused with the crime: they do not contain an admission of any connexion with the crime, nor an admission of any fact from which a connexion with the crime can reasonably be inferred: nor can we find that any of the facts alleged in the statements are necessarily false. There is a further reason which will appear later in our judgment, why we think that these statements ought not to be considered of value as evidence against the accused. The result is that, if a discovery took place by either of the accused as alleged there is evidence against him corroborating the approver's statement and connecting that accused with the crime. If we are not satisfied with the evidence relating to either of the discoveries, the accused, who is alleged to have made it, must be acquitted, and, if the evidence relating to one discovery is disbelieved, it will become necessary to consider whether the evidence of the same persons can be trusted in respect of the other. The contention of the learned counsel for the accused is that the evidence of the discovery by Ashiq Mohammad is false. To determine whether this charge is well founded requires an examination of the history of the case, so far as the evidence is concerned. It is unnecessary to discuss the evidence showing that the ear-rings discovered were those of the murdered girls, we consider that this has been established. Of the witnesses who signed the fards Mt. Mehngi Bai, Behari Lal and Datu signed them only as identifying the ornaments: and their evidence at the trial did not relate to the actual discoveries. At the trial the remaining 3 witnesses who signed the fards and Ghulam Nabi, Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police, who was in charge of investigation from 21st February onwards and was present and in control at the discoveries, were cross-examined about their statements in the Committing Magistrate's Court. The question in issue both before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge was the nature of the floor in the room where the articles were hidden. The witnesses stated on both occasions that the small box containing the ear-rings was buried in the ground near the wall of the baithak. The contention for the defence was that this was impossible, because the floor was a brick floor and there was no space between the bricks or between the bricks and the wall. It appears from the record that on 13th March Jiwan Das stated before the committing Magistrate that the card board box in which the ear-rings were lying was not covered with a brick or anything else excepting earth: when first asked whether the floor was pucca he said that it had not a pucca floor, but when the question was put a second time he replied that he was unable to say. Kabir Mohammad, who was examined on the same day, said:

It is a pucca floor with bricks of the baithak, but pointing has not been done. The bricks of the floor are of 'kishtiwala' type. No brick was taken out. There was a little space vacant between the wall and the bricks of the floor and it was from that vacant place in the baithak that the card board box was brought out.

This witness also said that he, Jiwan Das, and Imam Shah were standing at the doorsill and did not actually enter the baithak. Imam Shah said that as far as he knew the baithak had not a pucca floor. From the above it is easily deduced that these witnesses had probably not been inside the baithak. On 14th March, an application was put before the Magistrate on behalf of the accused, in which it was alleged that the evidence of Kabir Mohammad that there was unfloored ground between the walls and the floor was false, and praying for an inspection. No order was made except that the application should be put up on 25th March. Having allowed eleven days to elapse without taking any steps the Magistrate then decided that, as a month had passed since the occurrence, it would not serve any purpose if the inspection was then made. The application before the Magistrate taken in conjunction with the cross-examination of the witnesses on the previous day was sufficient to make it clear not only what the controversy was, but how vital to a decision on the value of the discovery it was to ascertain what was the nature of the floor. And immediate inspection would have determined the matter in dispute beyond doubt as indeed we decided when the case first came before us. Ghulam Nabi, the Assistant Sub-Inspector, was examined on 23rd March. He said:

Ashiq Mohammad did not take out any brick from the floor when he dug the earth to recover Ex. P. 21. Room No. 6 has a pucca floor: so far as I know pointing was not done there.

The defence did not allow the question to rest here. On 14th March photographs of the floor had been taken and on 3rd April 5 witnesses were called: two of these proved the photographs, and three, a draftsman, an overseer, and a mason testified to the character and age of the floor: the effect of their evidence was that the floor was an old floor of flat bricks closely set which ran up to the wall and had not been repaired. Even with this evidence before him, the Magistrate did not think an inspection worth while. The evidence of these witnesses of the discovery before the Sessions Judge is equally unsatisfactory, especially when considered with reference to their evidence before the Magistrate. There are a few important additions. Jiwan Das said that five or six inches of earth was removed in the digging up and the other witnesses repeated this; all stated that the floor was of bricks. The Assistant Sub-Inspector said: It has a pacca floor, but the pointing has not been done. The space between the bricks has not been filled in. The packet Ex. P. 21 was lying between the wall and a brick of the floor.

When the case came before us, the evidence which we have set out was before us and several photographs taken on 14th March. The photographs gave a good idea of the nature of the floor and it became clear to us that the evidence for the prosecution was in conflict with that afforded by the photographs. The explanation suggested by the learned counsel for the Crown was that between the date of the murder (the 13th of February) and the date of the taking of the photographs (14th of March) there was sufficient time to set a different floor: and we had to consider that possibility, we felt that, considering the nature of the issue, we should not much improve the position by having further oral evidence but that the only way of reaching a satisfactory conclusion would be to inspect the floor ourselves. We visited Lodhran on the 9th of November: inspected the scene of the murder, and examined the floor of the baithak. The evidence of the witnesses for the defence gives a proper description of the floor as it was when we first saw it before we had some of the bricks removed as a test. The card board box could not have been buried as stated by the witnesses for the prosecution: nor could it have been buried in the floor at all without the removal of a brick.

We had several of the bricks dug up in our presence in different places, (they were not easy to remove) including those at the place, where the box was stated to have been buried. We have no doubt that the floor is an old floor and that it has not been dug up since the date of the murder. We are driven to conclude that no discovery took place in the baithak: It follows that the evidence for the prosecution is false and that this discovery is a fabrication from start to finish. We have no reason for supposing that any of the witnesses who gave evidence about this recovery have knowingly supported a false charge: they may have been over zealous to establish a charge which they believed to be true; but making every allowance possible, we cannot condemn too strongly their grave offence. Had it not been that they were careless in not acquainting themselves with the nature of the floor, their evidence might have been the basis for the conviction of the accused persons innocent in the eye of the law because their offence would not have been established by true evidence. That such conduct on the part of responsible officials could take place, reveals a state of affairs which is intolerable. The matter would not be so grave, if this were an isolated case: but we know that this is not so. The records of this Bench for the last year alone show the contrary.

It may be well that we should give a warning to any one who may hereafter be tempted to interfere with the course of justice by the procuring of false evidence or the fabrication of evidence of recoveries that the duty of every one, police officers or constables, Government officials and plain citizens is to allow a case to come before the Court as it is without fabrication, or "padding." It is for the Courts to decide whether an accused person is innocent or guilty, and not for the prosecution to determine his guilt in advance and attempt to deceive the Court into giving a verdict based on false evidence. Anyone procuring false evidence runs the risk of imprisonment and degradation from office, and what is still more serious, may have the burden on his shoulder of sending an innocent man to the gallows.

In this case, we are now concerned only with the question whether there is evidence to show a connexion of the accused with the crime and so to corroborate the approver's evidence. The only evidence of the kind against Ashiq Mohammad is, we have found, a fabricated discovery supported by false evidence. As the evidence of a discovery by Sadiq Mohammad is that of the same witnesses, whose evidence upon the other discovery is false and was given for the purpose of procuring a conviction in the absence of what the police thought to be sufficient evidence, we consider that it would be dangerous to act on it. If the confessions of the accused afforded evidence of their connexion with the crime, we should be reluctant to act on them also: a person, who procures false evidence, cannot be trusted in anything connected with the investigation; and when the accused made their confessions, Ghulam Nabi was in charge of the investigations.

We cannot but be suspicious that these confessions, which only followed an earlier statement of the approver, may have been procured by improper means and are valueless. There being no evidence to corroborate the approver's evidence, both the accused must be acquitted. We allow the appeal and set aside the convictions and sentences.

J. G. Sethi—for Appellant.Nawal Kishore and Bhaqwat Dayal—for Respondents.

Young, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal against the decision of a learned Single Judge of this Court. It may be convenient in the first place to set out the facts out of which this appeal arises. In 1914 one Moti Ram obtained an injunction forbidding the defendants from building their house in such a way as to interfere with the passage of light and air through certain ventilators marked A, B, C and D constructed in the plaintiff's house. In 1933 the decree-holder filed an application in execution complaining that the defendants had disobeyed the injunction in that they had built their house in such a way that the ventilator A had been closed, as regards the passage of light and air, that the ventilator B had been interfered with by the passage of smoke from the kitchen; and also that the injunction with regard to the other ventilators had been disobeyed. A preliminary objection was taken in all the lower Courts that this application was barred by Art. 181, Lim. Act, the argument being that when the house was built it was built for all time and that an application complaining of this particular interference with the plaintiff's right must be brought within three years of the breach. This view found acceptance in all the three lower Courts. The appellant here that is to say the plaintiff in the original application, has argued that the breach is a continuing breach coming within the meaning of S. 23, Lim. Act, and therefore no limitation period under Limitation Act would apply; a fresh time starts running according to his argument every day the wrong continues.

For the purposes of the decision of this case we must take it that the house has been built in defiance of the injunction and that it does interfere with the plaintiff's right of light and air. This question of course will have to be decided as a matter of fact by the lower Court when we remand the case to that Court for decision according to law. Assuming that the house does definitely obstruct the right of the plaintiff-appellant to light and air we are of opinion that this is a continuing wrong; every day this building obstructs the flow of light and air. This view of the case is supported by consideration of many authorities in other Courts. For example their Lordships of the Privy Council in 6 Cal 394 (1), a case which was concerned with an obstruction which interfered with the flow of water to which the plaintiff was entitled—at p. 404 held that an obstruction of this nature was a continuing nuisance and the cause of action arising with regard to it was renewed de die in diem so long as the obstruction causing such interference was allowed to continue. The same view was expressed in 1 C W N 96 (2); that was an obstruction of a right of way. Their Lordships there held that that was a continuing wrong within the meaning of S. 23, Lim. Act.

In 29 I C 385 (3), where both flow of water and obstruction of right of way were concerned, their Lordships came to the same conclusion. It is clear that an obstruction of light and air is analogous to the obstruction of a right of way or flow of water. Counsel for the respondents submits that if this were a case of a suit or application, the building in this case would constitute a continuing wrong but it does not constitute a continuing wrong where the matter is an execution for enforcement of an injunction of this kind. This is a subtle proposition which we fail to appreciate. The question is a question of fact whether the building in this case is a continuing wrong or not. The question of fact cannot be affected by the nature of the suit or application. As this, according to our own view and the authorities, is clearly a case of continuing wrong we hold that no limitation period applies. We therefore set aside the judgments of the lower Courts and order that the case be returned to the trial Court for decision on merits. The appeal is allowed. The appellant will get his costs occasioned by the proceedings before the learned Single Judge and in this Court.

Criminal Appeal No. 1508 of 1934, Decided on 17th January 1935, from order of Sess. Judge, Sialkot, D. 31st October 1934.

Criminal Trial—Evidence—Blood stain — Discovery of bloodstained article is not by itself enough for conviction.

The discovery of a bloodstained article is not enough by itself to justify a conviction for murder. This is circumstantial evidence the value of which is very great when used to corroborate other evidence. It cannot by itself prove the case for the Crown.

Kanwar Sain—for Appellant.

Nazir Hussain—for the Crown.

Young, C. J.—Three persons, Dhunda, Shafi and Allah Rakha, were charged with murder in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge of Sialkot. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted Shafi and Allah Rakha but convicted Dhunda. Dhunda appeals. Dhunda had cause to dislike Maqaddam Din, the murdered man. On the night of the 15th/16th May, the prosecution alleges that while the deceased was sleeping with his wife and daughter and his son, these three accused came to the house, two of them seized the murdered man, and Dhunda, with a chopper, cut his throat. The eye-witnesses are the wife, daughter and the son. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the eye-witnesses could not be trusted. He says:

The statements of Mt. Daulat Bibi and her son and daughter are, in my opinion, far from reliable. They are full of discrepancies and contradictions.

Later on he says:

It seems to me that the account of the assault given by these three witnesses is very untrustworthy. It is true that they cannot be expected to have noticed minor details but some of these discrepancies are by no means trivial.

The learned Judge, because he could not rely on the eye-witnesses, has acquitted Shafi and Allah Rakha. Against Dhunda, however, there was evidence of the recovery from his house of a bloodstained chopper and a bloodstained sheet. The learned Judge has urged this evidence to corroborate the evidence which he has not relied on as against the two accused. We have examined the evidence and we come to the same conclusion as the learned Judge as regards the eye-witnesses. The contradictions and discrepancies are so many and so material that it is almost impossible to believe that these witnesses saw anything of importance. Their evidence is so unreliable as to be worth precisely nothing. It appears to us therefore to be impossible in law to corroborate this evidence. Nothing cannot be multiplied or corroborated. The only point remains as to whether the evidence of the recovery from Dhunda's house of a bloodstained chopper and a bloodstained chadar is enough by itself to justify the conviction of Dhunda. We do not think it is. This is circumstantial evidence the value of which is very great when used to corroborate other evidence. It cannot by itself prove the case for the Crown. It is possible to imagine many an occasion where the mere discovery of a blood-stained weapon or bloodstained clothes was due to something other than murder, for instance, concealing a dead body or receiving from the real murderer a blood-stained weapon in order to hide it and so assist the murderer. It is impossible to say that the discovery of a bloodstained article is enough by itself to justify a conviction for murder. This being our view we have to accept the appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence of death.

Misc. First Appeal No. 1345 of 1934, Decided on 12th February 1935, from order of Dist. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 12th May 1934.

Insolvency—Partition effected by debtor with his undivided brother without making provision for debts held to be act of insolvency.

Where a debtor effected a partition with his brother whereby he gave his brother all the property and himself taking only a small amount in cash and no provision was made for the settlement of his debts:

Held: that the partition may be taken to be effected with intent to delay or defeat creditors and so constituted an act of insolvency: 1930 Nag 215, Appl. [P 337 C 1]

Indar Dev for Fakir Chand—for Appellant.

Qabul Chand for Shamair Chand and Shamair Chand—for Respondents (Creditor).

Judgment.—Ganga Bishan, respondent, petitioned the District Judge, Ludhiana, under S. 9 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act, to have the present appellant Was Deo declared insolvent alleging that Was Deo owed him Rs. 1,900 which he was unable to pay and had committed an act of insolvency by partitioning his joint family property with his brother with the intention of defeating Ganga Bishan, his creditor. Was Deo resisted the petition denying that he owed the debt alleged and contending that the partition did not amount to an act of insolvency.

The District Judge found the debt proved and held that Was Deo had committed an act of insolvency. He made an order of adjudication accordingly. Was Deo has appealed and it is argued on his behalf that the District Judge's decisions on the points in issue were both erroneous.

The evidence regarding the debt is fully discussed by the District Judge and for the reasons he has given, I agree with his decision on this point. Ganga Bishan's case was that in dealings between Was Deo and the partnership Ganga Bishan Des Raj (Des Raj being Ganga Bishan's brother) Was Deo was found to owe the partnership Rs. 1,922-2-6 on 29th March 1932. This debt was discharged by Was Deo who borrowed Rs. 1,900 from Ganga Bishan and paid Rs. 1,922-2-6 to the partnership the same day executing in favour of Ganga Bishan a promissory note for Rs. 1,900 and also giving him a receipt for this sum. Was Deo at the same time was given a receipt by Ganga Bishan (Ex. D-A), as evidence of the discharge of the business debt due on accounts. Was Deo's story is that the payment of Rs. 1,922 for which the receipt Ex. D-A was given, discharged the debt on the promissory note.

The fact that the promissory note remained with Ganga Bishan goes strongly against Was Deo and the latter's counsel is unable to explain why it was not taken back by his client. The receipt Ex. D-A purports to be an acknowledgment of the payment of the business debt of Rs. 1,922-2-6. Ganga Bishan could give a discharge and the fact that the shop is not described as the creditor is of no consequence. It is not explained why although the promissory note was for Rs. 1,900, Rs. 1,922-2-6 were required to meet this debt. Was Deo's story is moreover clearly falsified by the fact that he repaid Rs. 150 to Ganga Bishan on 27th May 1933, a record of which payment was made on the back of the receipt for Rs. 1,900 (P-B).

The circumstances of the partition which was effected in June 1933 between Was Deo and his brother justified the District Judge's conclusion that it was a transaction with intent to defraud Was Deo's creditor. Direct evidence of intention is not ordinarily to be found in such cases. The fact that the partition was effected by an arbitrator does not justify any conclusion on this point one way or another. It has been held in 1930 Nag 215 (1) that a partition of joint family estate by a father without making adequate provision for the settlement of his debts may amount to a transfer of property with intent to delay and defeat creditors and so constitute an act of insolvency and I think that this principle is applicable in the present case. The property was a haveli and two shops and the whole of it was given to the brother Was Deo taking Rs 1,250 in cash to compensate him. The debt was not discharged. It is true that this is a statement by Was Deo (recorded in the vernacular record) that the property was mortgaged for Rs. 10,000. But there is no documentary proof in support of this nor is it shown that the compensation given to Was Deo represented his proper share in the equity of redemption. I find no sufficient reason for interfering with the lower Court's decision on this part of the case. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Muhammad Alam—for Petitioner.

Des Raj Sawhney and Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Rangi Lal, J. — Dial Singh, Allah Bakhsh and Harbans Singh were tried together and convicted under S. 379. I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo 1 1/2 years' rigorous imprisonment each. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge maintained the convictions but reduced the sentence passed on Harbans Singh to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Dial Singh and Allah Bakhsh, whose sentences were maintained, have come up to this Court in revision. The petitions were admitted by Din Mohammad, J., because he was of opinion that a confession made by Harbans Singh at the close of the prosecution case implicating himself and the other accused was wrongly admitted in evidence under S. 30, Evidence Act. The petitions came up for hearing before Coldstream, J., and he has referred them to a Division Bench because he was not inclined to agree with Din Mohammad, J., on the law point mentioned above.

We have merely to decide whether a confession made at the close of the prosecution by one of several accused persons who are being jointly tried implicating himself and such other persons can be taken into consideration against such other persons or not. The practice of this Court has been to take such a confession into consideration, but we do not find any discussion on the point in any of the published rulings cited before us. The Allahabad High Court has however held in 45 All 323 (1) that S. 30, Evidence Act, does not cover such a confession and that it applies only to a confession made previously and proved at the trial as a part of the case for the prosecution. This view has been approved by the Madras High Court in 54 Mad 788

1. Emperor v. Mahadeo Parshad, 1923 All 322 = 76 I O 1025 = 25 Or L J 305 = 45 All 323 = 21 A L J 179.

(2) and 1929 Mad 285 (3), though the opposite view was taken in an earlier decision of that Court, namely 38 Mad 302 (4). The Bombay High Court has fully considered the matter in 1930 Bom 354 (5) and has not agreed with the view of the Allahabad Court. The Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur has also taken the same view as the Bombay High Court in 134 I C 686 (6). In 4 Cal 483 (7) the point did not arise but, in the course of arguments, Garth, C. J., made a casual remark to the effect that the word "proved" in S. 30, Evidence Act, must refer to a confession made beforehand. This ruling is therefore of no help in deciding the case before us. In the Allahabad case referred to above the question was discussed at length by Walsh, J. The decision however mainly proceeds on the ground that S. 30, Evidence Act, creates an exception to the fundamental principles upon which criminal law is administered in England and must be construed with reference to those principles.

Those principles are, firstly, that an accused is entitled to know what the evidence against him is before he is called upon for his defence at all; secondly, that the prosecutor cannot re-open his case and make additions to it, except such voluntary additions as the accused may make himself; thirdly, that evidence cannot be received against an accused person which he has no power to submit to cross-examination; and, fourthly, that an accused person cannot himself give evidence. It is clear that the Indian legislature desired to depart from these principles in enacting S. 30, Evidence Act. Still the section has to be interpreted according to the ordinary canons of interpretation of statute law. It may be permissible to refer to the principles mentioned above, if there is any ambiguity in the language used by the statute, and adopt the interpretation which is in conformity with those principles. Walsh, J., realized that the interpretation he was placing on the section involved the addition of the words "as part of the case for the prosecution" which did not exist therein. He went on to say that that addition would have been superfluous in view of the principle that the only thing that an accused person has to meet in a criminal trial is the case for the prosecution, his own statement and the defence evidence. Finally, the learned Judge remarked that a confession could be "proved" only by tendering evidence to show that it was made on a previous occasion. We have to point out with great respect that, in arriving at this conclusion, the learned Judge and the learned Judges of the Madras High Court overlooked the definition of "proved" in S. 3, Evidence Act. That definition is:

A fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matter before it, the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists.

If a confession is made before the Court itself it "is a matter before it" and the Court must believe it to exist. It must, therefore, be said to be "proved." A fact can be proved not only by "evidence" as defined in S. 3, Evidence Act, but also by other matters before the Court. A confession recorded by the Court itself would not be "evidence," but would be a "matter before the Court." We are, therefore, of opinion that the language of S. 30, Evidence Act, does not justify a distinction between a confession made by an accused person before the trial and in the course of the trial. A confession made before the Court even at the close of the case for the prosecution can, therefore be said to be a confession "proved" within the meaning of S. 30, Evidence Act. This being so, it could legally be taken into consideration, that is to say, used as evidence. It is, however, clear that this evidence would be of the weakest kind, but we are not concerned here with the value to be attached to such evidence. This would be a matter for determination in each particular case.

In view of the interpretation which we place on S. 30, Evidence Act, it is unnecessary to consider the reasoning of Walsh, J. It is certainly very cogent, but we are not at liberty to read into the section words which do not exist there. The legislature has made a departure from certain fundamental principles and the Courts cannot stretch the language of the statute in order to give effect to those principles. In practice the section need not create any difficulty. It is always for the Court to consider what value to attach to such evidence. It has to be borne in mind that, if such a confession is made before a Magistrate at the close of the case for the prosecution, the accused whom it affects has an opportunity of nullifying its effect by his defence evidence and also by cross-examining the prosecution witnesses after the charge. For these reasons we hold that the confession of Harbans Singh was admissible in evidence against Dial Singh and Allah Bakhsh. Even apart from this confession there is sufficient evidence to justify their conviction.

We dismiss the petitions.

Ch. Zafrullah Khan and Asadullah Khan—for Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—One Faujdar, a Kalon Jat of Sialkot District was the grantee of two squares of land in Chak No. 146, R. B. Tahsil and District Lyallpur. He fulfilled the conditions of the grant and in due course "occupancy rights" in the land were conferred on him. On Faujdar's death in 1899, the tenancy was mutated in the name of his widow, Mt. Begam. Mt. Begam died on 25th December 1930, and on her death the plaintiffs, who are Faujdar's brother's son's sons, took possession of the land. On 28th January 1931 the Naib Tahsildar sanctioned the mutation of $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the land in favour of the plaintiffs and $\frac{1}{4}$ th in favour of his daughter Mt. Barkate in accordance with an alleged settlement between the parties. On appeal the Collector ordered mutation of the entire land in the name of Mt. Barkate. Thereupon the plaintiffs brought a suit in the civil Court for a declaration that they were in lawful possession as occupancy tenants of $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the land under the aforesaid family settlement. In the alternative, they prayed that in case the alleged family arrangement be not proved, they be declared to be occupancy tenants of the entire land. In the plaint it was alleged that Mt. Barkate was not the daughter of Faujdar, but that she was, Mt. Begam's daughter from a former husband. They further averred that in the course of mutation proceedings the parties had settled their dispute amicably through the intervention of the bradari, whereby $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the land had been given to the plaintiffs and $\frac{1}{4}$ th to Mt. Barkate. They also pleaded that according to the custom prevailing in the tribe of the parties, collaterals succeeded to the self-acquired property of a sonless male proprietor to the exclusion of his daughter.

Mt. Barkate traversed these allegations and stated that she was the legitimate daughter of Faujdar and that according to custom she had a prior right to succeed to Faujdar's self-acquired property. She denied that any settlement, as alleged by the plaintiffs, had been arrived at in the course of the mutation proceedings. The learned Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiffs, on all these points and dismissed their suit. Before us the first contention raised by counsel is that Faujdar was not the last male-holder of the property, but that he left him surviving a four year old son Allah Ditta who died eighteen months later. It was urged, therefore that even if the plaintiffs, fail on all other points, Mt. Barkate had no right to succeed, as she was the sister, and not the daughter of the last male holder. This however is an entirely new case set up for the first time in the course of the arguments before us.

It was not mentioned in the plaint or in the memorandum of appeal, and is not supported by any tangible evidence on the record. As stated already, on Faujdar's death in 1899, mutation of the land was effected in favour of his widow Mt. Begam, which could not have been the case if he had left a son. The mutation proceedings in 1899 had continued for six months and though the lambardar and several members of the brotherhood are stated to have been present, the record does not contain any mention of the existence of a son of Faujdar. The suggestion is clearly a baseless after-thought and I have no hesitation in rejecting it.

Counsel attacked in a half-hearted manner the lower Court's finding as to Mt. Barkate being the legitimate daughter of Faujdar. We have read the evidence bearing on the point and find that it fully supports the conclusion of the learned Sub-Judge. Mt. Barkate was married to one Jalal on 26th August 1911 and in the marriage register she was described as the daughter of Faujdar. There is no reason to suppose that a false statement was made about 20 years before the present dispute arose. It is significant that in the mutation proceedings, which followed on the death of Mt. Begam, the defendant's status as the daughter of Faujdar was not challenged by the plaintiffs or anyone else. Similarly in the document Ex. D. W. 3/1, which according to the plaintiffs was executed on 6th January 1931, and in which the alleged family settlement is stated to have been recorded, the plaintiffs themselves described her as the daughter of Faujdar. It is further important to note that the plaintiffs have not been able to give the name of Mt. Begam's alleged first husband of whom Mt. Barkate is alleged to have been born. In the lower Court the plaintiffs in support of their claim to succeed to the self-acquired property of Faujdar in preference to the defendant relied on the answer to Question No. 47 of the Riwaj-i-Am of Sialkot District compiled by Mr. Byod in 1916. It is well settled that the initial presumption must be made in favour of the correctness of this entry, but the lower Court after a careful examination of the evidence on the record and the previous judicial decisions held that the defendant had succeeded in displacing the presumption. Before us, Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din frankly admitted that he was unable to assail this finding. He conceded that there were several instances of daughters excluding collaterals in succession to non-ancestral property of their sonless fathers, while there was not even one instance in support of the answer as recorded. This entry in the riwaj-i-am has been examined in several cases by this Court and in every one of them it has been found that it was not in accord with the actually prevailing custom. See 4 Lah 99 (1), 10 Lah 485 (2); 10 Lah 489 (3); 1930 Lah 724 (4); 11 Lah 415 (5) and C. A. No 381 of 1930 (6). The finding on this point in favour of the defendant therefore must be maintained.

The last point urged was that after the death of Mt. Begam, when mutation proceedings were going on before the Naib Tahsildar, the parties came to a settlement whereby the land in dispute was divided between the parties, Mt. Barkate being given $1\frac{1}{2}$ square and the plaintiffs, $1\frac{1}{2}$ squares. In support of this contention reliance was placed mainly on an unregistered document (Ex. D. W. 3/1) which purports to have been executed by Mahi and Ilahi, plaintiffs, on 6th January 1931. This document however is not signed by Mt. Barkate. The oral evidence produced by the plaintiffs is vague and discrepant and was rightly rejected by the lower Court. Some of the witnesses, who claimed to have brought about the settlement, have stated that two agreements were executed, one of which was given by the plaintiffs to Mt. Barkate, and the other was given by Mt. Barkate to the plaintiffs. This later document, if it was executed at all, must have been in possession of the plaintiffs, but it was not produced at the trial. Indeed, Mahi, plaintiff, when examined as his own witness, denied that Mt. Barkate had executed any agreement in favour of himself or his brother. I agree with the lower Court that the plaintiffs have failed Criminal Appeal No. 606 of 1934, Decided on 6th June 1934, from order of Sess. Judge, Sialkot, D/- 7th February 1934.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Charge only of murder and attempt to murder—Evidence as to accused being members of terrorist association is irrelevant and unnecessary.

Where the only offences with which accused were charged were murder and attempt to murder:

Held: that evidence to prove that the accused were members of a terrorist association was wholly irrelevant and quite unnecessary.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164—After recording confession, Magistrate should avoid handing over document to police in charge of prisoner—No prejudice caused to accused by sending it through police—S. 164 (2) held complied with substantially.

A Magistrate who records a confession under S. 164, Criminal P. C., should avoid handing over the document after completion to the police in charge of the prisoner, but should forward it as required by sub-s. (2) of S. 164, Criminal P. C. direct to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be enquired into or tried. But where by sending such document the accused is not prejudiced there is substantial compliance of S. 164 (2).

(c) Criminal Trial—Concerted attack by two accused armed with deadly weapon—Weapon used with fatal result—Both are guilty of murder.

Where the two accused were engaged in a concerted attack upon the police and either of them was armed with a deadly weapon and used it to kill a police officer:

Held: they were both equally guilty of murder and it did not matter which of them attacked with the weapon.

[P 344 C 1]

(d) Criminal Trial—Prosecution should confine to simple and true evidence—It should not hide facts and embroider case.

The conviction of a guilty person would be more certainly obtained if the prosecution is confined to simple and true evidence and no attempt is made either to hide essential facts or to embroider the case.

(e) Penal Code (1860), S. 302—Sentence—Two accused equally guilty—One sentenced to death and another to lesser penalty—Appeal by both—That one is given only lesser penalty is no consideration for commuting extreme penalty of other.

Where two accused who were equally guilty of a brutal and premeditated murder should have received the same sentence, but one was sentenced to death and the other to transportation and both appealed and there was no appeal by the Crown for enhancement:

Held: that the fact that one of them was given only the lesser penalty was no consideration, which would entitle the High Court to commute the sentence of death passed on the other.

B. R. Puri—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney for the Crown.

Young, C. J.—Hans Raj and Pritam Khan (alias Prabhe Khan) were charged under S. 302 read with S. 34, I. P. C., and S. 307 read with S. 34, I. P. C., in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge, Sialkot. The learned Judge found Hans Raj guilty under both sections and sentenced him to transportation for life. Prabhe Khan was found guilty under both sections and sentenced to death. Both appeal and we have to consider the question of the confirmation of the death sentence on Prabhe Khan. At the outset it is to be noted that murder and attempt to murder were the only offences charged. On 7th May these two together with Jagdish Chandar, absconder, and Kasturi Lal, who was acquitted at a previous Sessions trial on a similar charge, were travelling in a third class compartment in a train from Jammu to Sialkot. There were with them in the carriage three police officers and a bank peon. The train had not proceeded far before the accused and the others with them are alleged to have produced revolvers and a knife and attacked the police party. One police constable named Karam Dad was shot dead, the two other police officials were wounded by bullets.

It is to be seen from the above that this is a simple case the facts of which lie within a small compass. It is almost unbelievable that in the Court below it took over two months to try and that the judgment extends to 42 printed pages. The reason is that the prosecution produced a mass of evidence in order to prove that the two accused were members of a terrorist association. It appears to us that this procedure was wholly unjustified. The sole point for decision was were these two accused parties to a murderous attack upon the police. For this it was quite unnecessary and indeed wholly irrelevant to consider whether they were terrorists or members of any other body. There was no charge of conspiracy. This mass of evidence should have been excluded by the learned Sessions Judge. The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is divided into chapters. Ch. 6 is headed "Material evidence." It is unnecessary to consider most of the previous chapters. The procedure in this case in the trial Court has resulted in a great waste of public time and money. Fortunately for the purpose of this appeal counsel both for the Crown and the defence agreed that it was unnecessary to consider the irrelevant evidence. We are confining our attention to the question which ought to have been the sole question in the trial Court, namely, were these two accused parties to this murderous attack upon the police which resulted in the death of one policeman and the wounding of two others?

The material facts of this case are that during April 1931 a cheque for Rs. 497-4-0 was drawn on the Sialkot branch of the Imperial Bank which on 2nd May 1931 was discovered to be a forgery. Private investigation by the Bank followed but was unsuccessful and on 6th May a report was made to the police. In the course of the investigation a police party headed by Assistant Sub-Inspector, Ata Ullah, Khan Bahadur, Head Constable, and Karam Dad, foot constable, proceeded to Jammu to make enquiries taking with them a Bank peon, Haveli Ram, for the purpose of identification. Arriving at Jammu on 7th May 1931 Haveli Ram identified Kasturi Lal and Hans Raj as being concerned in this forgery. When these two men were found they were in the company of Jagdish Chandar and Prabhe Khan. The police took all four to Jammu police station. Here it is alleged by the police that Kasturi Lal being mainly concerned in the forgery was directed to attend at the police station, Sialkot; the other three were discharged. In his confession Hans Raj alleges that he also was kept under police detention. Whatever the truth may be it is common ground that the police party travelled by train to Sialkot that evening accompanied by Kasturi Lal, Hans Raj, Prabhe Khan and Jagdish Chandar. The case for the prosecution is that Jagdish Chandar, Prabhe Khan, Kasturi Lal and Hans Raj organised a concerted murderous attack on the police. The case for the defence is that during the journey the police maltreated Kasturi Lal and thereby drew upon themselves an attack by Jagdish Chandar and his friends to avenge the treatment of Kasturi Lal, but the defence version does not explain how the party of the accused came to be in possession of revolvers or why the revolvers were used on the police.

It has been argued in this connexion by Mr. Puri that the story of a concerted attack by the accused's party on the police must be rejected. It is contended that at least two of the accused's party being under detention by the police, they must have been searched in which case it would be inconceivable that they could have been left in possession of lethal weapons. The Assistant Sub-Inspector Ata Ullah and the police however deny that the accused were under arrest. In this matter we are of opinion that the police have not told the whole truth. It seems to us unlikely that the four accused should by chance, or of their own free will, be travelling with the police party from Jammu to Sialkot in the particular circumstances of this case. We are of opinion that although none of the accused's party may have been under formal arrest, at least two of them, viz., Kasturi Lal and Hans Raj, must have been travelling under some form of compulsion, whether by the British police or of the Kashmir State police. It is unnecessary to speculate. We are of opinion, in disagreement with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge, that none of the accused's party were in fact subjected to any search (Hans Raj in his confession does not say they were), a fact which explains how they came to be in possession of lethal weapons. It will be convenient at this stage to consider the confession proved against Hans Raj which was retracted during the Sessions trial. This confession is Exhibit P. W. 53-B and was recorded by Mr. C. H. Disney, First Class Magistrate, who gave evidence for the prosecution as P. W. 19.

The learned Sessions Judge has rejected this confession for reasons which we are unable to appreciate. Mr. Puri has attempted to support the decision of the learned Sessions Judge in this respect by drawing attention to certain discrepancies noted in Mr. Disney's evidence at p. 20 of the paper book. These discrepancies consist of certain minor differences between the vernacular and the English record of Hans Raj's statement. We are of opinion that these discrepancies, such as they are, are wholly immaterial and they do not in any way affect the admissibility of the confession. Another point taken by Mr. Puri is that although the necessary certificate and memorandum regarding the voluntary nature of the confession appears on the English record, it has been omitted from the vernacular record. Whatever may have been the effect of this omission, it has been cured by Mr. Disney's evidence in Court. Further it has been urged that Mr. Disney failed to comply with the provisions of sub-s. (2), S. 164, Criminal P. C., which require that the statement after being recorded shall be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be enquired into or tried. Mr. Disney states in his cross-examination that after completing the statement he made it over to the same Police Officer who had brought Hans Raj before him. But the statement admittedly reached the Magistrate by whom the case was enquired into in due course.

There is no suggestion that it was tampered with in transit and Mr. Puri concedes that his client has not been prejudiced by the method of forwarding the statement actually adopted by Mr. Disney. We are, in these circumstances, of opinion that there has been substantial compliance with the provisions of the section. At the same time we take this opportunity of pointing out that a Magistrate who records a confession under S. 164, Criminal P. C., should avoid handing over the document after completion to the police in charge of the prisoner, but should forward it as required by sub-s. (2), S. 164, Criminal P. C., direct to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be enquired into or tried.

The learned Sessions Judge has also assigned as a reason for rejecting the confession that it is a mixture of truth and palpable falsehood and contains matter which in the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge is "not only totally ridiculous and incredible but even grossly repugnant to common sense." The learned Sessions Judge has referred to what he calls the constant shuffling and passing of the revolver, cartridges and knife from one hand to another in the railway compartment under the very eyes of the police.

It appears to us that the learned Sessions Judge has exaggerated the effect of Hans Raj's statement. It is here necessary to refer to the confession itself. The material part reads as follows :

Jagdish Chandar and Prabhe Khan were released at the thana while I and Kasturi Lal were taken by the police. Prabhe Khan accompanied us at his own request. We were taken to the railway station. Shortly after Jagdish Chandar also arrived at the station in a tonga. He and Prabhe Khan spoke together and then Jagdish Chandar informed me that they had decided to release Kasturi Lal, and that I should take Kasturi Lal's revolver from him in case he was searched. Kasturi Lal made an excuse of asking me where the balance of the money was and on this pretext he was allowed to speak to me alone in the railway compartment. There at my request he quietly gave me his revolver. . . . When Kasturi Lal was taken out by the police I quietly gave Jagdish the knife I was carrying and he made it over to Prabhe Khan. I kept the revolver. . . . On the pretence of speaking to Kasturi Lal about a lawyer, Jagdish Chandar secretly obtained a box of revolver bullets from him. Kasturi Lal then went back to his own seat. Jagdish Chandar gave me the bullets. I went to the lavatory and loaded my revolver with five bullets ; one chamber remained empty. I then came back to my seat.

It will be seen from this that Jagdish Chandra and Prabhe Khan came to the station of their own free will. It is to be noted that Kasturi Lal and Hans Raj were suspected of forgery. The police had apparently no indication that they were dangerous criminals inclined to violence or likely to be armed with lethal weapons. There is nothing unbelievable therefore in the statement that Hans Raj should be allowed to speak either to Jagdish Chandar or to Kasturi Lal or that Kasturi Lal should be allowed to speak to Jagdish Chandar. Under these circumstances it would be perfectly simple for the accused's party to pass from one to the other small weapons like the pistols exhibited in this case or a small box of cartridges. These articles have been produced before us in Court. It would have been otherwise if the police had cause to suspect the accused of being violent criminals. There is nothing in our opinion in the confession of Hans Raj which is not in accord with what might easily have happened under the circumstances of this case. The fact undoubtedly remains that there were revolvers or pistols in that compartment and that they were used. The police were negligent in the matter of searching the accused and unfortunately have paid for their neglect.

The confession is clearly admissible in evidence and may be taken into consideration against both appellants who were jointly tried. Hans Raj implicates himself to an equal extent with the other accused. The confession of Hans Raj is corroborated by the evidence of the eye-witnesses, and in our opinion gives in all essential points a substantially true account of this occurrence (His Lordship then examined the evidence of the eye-witnesses and proceeded.) It is clear to us that the evidence of the eye-witnesses, the confession of Hans Raj, and the circumstances under which this sudden attack was made upon the police, show premeditation and common intention on the part of the two appellants. It is wholly unnecessary to establish which of the appellants attacked which of the policeman or indeed to show what particular weapons were used by either appellant. If the two appellants were, as we have found, engaged in a concerted attack upon the police and either of them was armed with a deadly weapon and used it to kill a police officer, they are both equally guilty of murder.

It was urged before us that the learned Sessions Judge had wrongly refused to permit the defence to make use of certain alleged statements of witnesses embodied in the inquest report. At the time that this inquest report was made it was obvious that the death of Karam Dad was homicidal and the case was therefore under police investigation so that the statements of any witnesses thus recorded by the police are governed by the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., and could only have been made accessible to the defence under the limitations provided by that section for the purpose of contradicting the statements made by these witnesses in evidence. In point of fact there are no contradictions. It is true that there is no specific mention of the use of a knife in the inquest report, nor is there any mention of the signal word "ready." But these are omissions which do not amount to contradiction. Moreover it is obvious from the medical evidence that a knife must have been used so that the omission of this weapon in the inquest report is in any case of no significance. It follows that no inference prejudicial to the prosecution can be drawn from the inquest report. In Ch. 7 of the judgment dealing with "expert evidence" the learned Sessions Judge has attempted to fix the number of shots fired. This under the circumstances of this case is wholly impossible. Several shots may undoubtedly have gone out of the windows and the bullets for this reason would not be recovered. Accordingly the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that only two revolvers were used and not three, cannot be accepted. The evidence in this case leaves us in no doubt that both the appellants actively participated in this murderous assault upon the police.

We would in conclusion observe that the lack of candour on the part of the police with regard to the detention of Kasturi Lal and Hans Raj has added greatly to the difficulty of this trial and has given an argument to the defence that the rest of the police evidence is unreliable. We think it is possible that the police adopted this attitude because the arrest in Kashmir may have been illegal. It cannot too often be pointed out that the conviction of guilty persons would be more certainly obtained if the prosecution was confined to simple and true evidence and no attempt was made either to hide essential facts or to embroider the case. It would further add to the facility of trials if irrelevant evidence was excluded. Further where there is no distinct charge of conspiracy, or where it is unnecessary and the evidence is sufficient, if believed to prove the particular offences with which the accused are charged, it is a waste of time and money to try and establish a conspiracy. We invite the attention of the proper authorities to this criticism of the evidence and the procedure adopted in this case.

The result is that we confirm the convictions of both the appellants. With regard to Prabhe Khan, we confirm the sentence of death passed upon him. In our opinion Hans Raj is fortunate to escape the extreme penalty, but since the Crown has not petitioned for enhancement, we have not thought it necessary to take any action on our own motion. Both the appellants are equally guilty of a brutal and premeditated murder and should have received the same sentence. This consideration however does not entitle us to commute the sentence passed on Prabhe Khan. The appeal is dismissed.

Misc. First Appeal No. 102 of 1934, Decided on 10th July 1934, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Karnal, D/- 9th December 1933.

Arbitration—Agreement to refer—Arbitrator looking into account books of one party before agreement to refer was written—Parties heard and award delivered—Award not vitiated.

After the arbitrator began looking into the 'bahis' of one of the parties, the agreement of reference was written. After an examination of the 'bahis' the arbitrator heard the parties and delivered his award which was at once reduced to writing. The award was then signed by the parties:

Held: that looking into the 'bahis' by the arbitrator before the agreement to refer was drawn up does not vitiate the case of award.

Shamair Chand—for Appellant.

Krishan Swarup—for Respondents.

Judgment.—On 14th November 1933, Lakhi Ram presented an application in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, alleging that a dispute between him and the defendants, Parbhal Singh and Rajbir Singh, had been referred to the arbitration of one Ram Chand, that Ram Chand had delivered the award, that this award may be ordered to be filed in Court under para. 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., and that a decree may be passed in accordance therewith. This application was registered as a plaint and notice was issued to the defendants requiring them to show cause why the award should not be filed. On 9th December 1933, the defendant Parbhal Singh made the following statement:

I admit the agreement and the award, Exs. A and B. As the plaintiff was about to bring a suit against us, we told Ram Chand to arbitrate. Lakhi Ram came to Karnal to institute the suit. We followed him. Ram Chand was already in the Court compound. Ram Chand and Lakhi Ram were sitting with the petition writer when we came. All of us told him to decide our dispute. Ram Chand then saw plaintiff's bahis. He then fixed Rs. 15,000 and made it payable by instalments. Then the agreement Ex. A was written and after that the award Ex. B was written. The same petition writer wrote all this at the same time.

Rajbir, defendant 2, supported the statement of his father Parbhal Singh. The trial Court refused to file the award on the ground that the statements of the defendants showed that the arbitrator had already given his award, before the agreement of reference and the award, Exs. A and B, were written. The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court. It appears to me that the inferences drawn by the trial Court from the statements of the defendants are not justified. As all the proceedings took place the same day it is impossible for the defendants to remember the exact sequence of events. The statements of the defendants must be read subject to the allegations contained in the agreement and the award. The agreement Ex. A runs as follows:

Joki ham friqain ka tanaza babat gaymi raqm len den barue bahi wa tariqa adaygi raqm wajib hai is liye ham friqain ne bar razamandi khud Lala Ram Chand... ko wahid salis khangi bina bar tasiya tanaza khud muqarar kya hai.

The award Ex. B mentions the fact that the arbitrator had heard the statements of the parties and that Lakhi Ram had produced a transliteration of his bahis. After an examination of the bahis and a consideration of the statements of the parties the arbitrator found that Rs. 15,000 were due by the defendants to the plaintiff. The award made this amount payable by means of instalments, and also laid down elaborate stipulations as to what was to happen if any instalment was not paid in time. An examination of the statements of the defendant and the two documents mentioned above shows that as soon as the defendants arrived at the stall of the petition writer they orally agreed to refer the matter to the arbitration of Ram Chand, that thereafter Ram Chand began looking into the bahis of the plaintiff and the agreement of reference Ex. A was written by the petition writer. After an examination of the bahis the arbitrator heard the parties and delivered his award which was at once reduced to writing by the same petition writer. The award was then signed by the parties. It is clear, therefore, that at the time when the parties appointed Ram Chand as the sole arbitrator there was a real dispute between them, particularly with respect to the payment of interest, and the period and nature of instalments. The defendants did not plead in the trial Court that there was no valid reference to arbitration or that no valid award was made by Ram Chand. On the other hand it was stated in the written statement of the defendants that Ram Chand had been duly appointed as the sole arbitrator, and that the award given by him was correct. It was prayed that a decree for Rs. 15,000 may be passed against the defendants, but that they may be relieved from the payment of costs. The learned counsel for the appellant relied on 137 I C 807 (1) and 1930 Lah 860 (2); while the learned counsel for the respondents quoted 54 I C 285 (3) and 1931 Bom 164 (4). It is, however, unnecessary to deal with these rulings as it appears to me that the parties had not arrived at any final settlement before they appointed Ram Chand as the sole arbitrator. Even if the agreement Ex. A was written after the arbitrator had looked into the basis of the plaintiff it does not affect the case in any manner. For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal and order the award to be filed and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants in accordance with the terms of the award. Parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Shuja-ud-Din and Akbar Ali—for Appellants.

Nawal Kishore and Bashir Ahmad—for (Plaintiffs) Respondents.

Skemp, J.—This suit and the appeal concern the land left by one Fazal Shah, a Bukhari Sayyad of Kotli Amir Ali, Tehsil and District, Sialkot. The Collector sanctioned mutation in favour of his collaterals in the fifth degree. The present plaintiffs Muhammad Hussain and Mt. Ghulam Fatima are respectively the daughter's son and the daughter's daughter of Fazal Shah. They state in their plaint that Fazal Shah died about 40 years ago, being succeeded by his two widows. On the death of one of them the other succeeded to the entire estate and died shortly before suit. The plaintiffs alleged that the land in dispute was non-ancestral. The defendants pleaded that it was ancestral and that in accordance with the Customary law of the Sialkot District, by which the parties were bound, their claims as heirs were preferential to those of the plaintiffs. The parties went to trial on these two main issues and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge found, first, that the land was non-ancestral and secondly, that in respect of non-ancestral land among Sayyads of Sialkot District daughters and their issue were not excluded by collaterals of the fifth degree. The defendants have appealed through Dr. Shuja-ud-Din, who has agitated the same two points. Dr. Shuja-ud-Din relies on the statement of the history of the village prepared at the settlement of 1865 (Ex. D-1). This sets forth that 250 years previously, in the reign of the Emperor Aurangzeb, the common ancestor Mir Mohammed Mohsin founded the village in the jungle.

This village, then called Sayyedawali, was deserted after about 40 years, but re-founded by Amir Ali, son of Mir Mohammed Mohsin. Since the second foundation the village, which was then called Kotli Amir Ali, has never been deserted. The statement continues that Amir Ali took possession of a larger area (apparently of a larger area than his father) "according to his means." Afterwards his brother's son, Faqir Ullah, also came to the village and took possession of a small area. Two tarafs, called after Amir Ali and Faqir Ullah, were formed comprising the area held by each of them and the descendants of one Mir Hadi also came to taraf Faqir Ullah.

The learned counsel also relies upon the pedigree table of the owners of the village prepared at the same settlement, and according to remarks in that pedigree table the measure of ownership was "possession according to means." "According to means" is a translation of hasab-i-stata'at the words meaning "strength or pecuniary means" and from this fact and the fact that in the pedigree table, prepared at the last settlement of 1913-14, certain acquisitions by purchases were specifically recorded, he seeks to derive the principle that in this village there was a special custom whereby the owners held as much land as they could and yet the whole of the property was ancestral. But in my opinion this alleged principle is no principle, and this case must be decided in accordance with the usual rules. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge gave an abbreviated pedigree table of the parties which will be useful :

He pointed out that according to the settlement records of 1865 the areas owned by different members of the family were very unequal, for instance, Fazal Shah and Mt. Sultan Bibi, widow of Sher Shah, owned 82 ghumaons odd out of which Mt. Sultan Bibi held 129 kanals and Fazal Shah 527 kanals odd. Thus Fazal Shah and Sher Shah did not own land in equal shares. Similarly the areas held by the descendants of Mir Faiz Din were unequal. The descendants of Karam Shah held 64 ghumaons odd, Rukhan Din's 31 ghumaons odd and Mohammad Shabs 31 ghumaons odd. These facts are prima facie inconsistent with the ancestral nature of the property. It is necessary for persons relying on the ancestral character of property to prove that the common ancestor of themselves and the last male owner actually held the property in dispute and that it had devolved from him to the last male holder by inheritance, and not merely that their common ancestor had founded the village. For these reasons, I am in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that appellants have not shown that the property in dispute is ancestral.

The next point is whether fifth degree collaterals exclude daughters and their issue. The Collector in ordering mutation in favour of the collaterals relied on Question and Answer 47 to Boyd's Customary Law of the Sialkot District, which states that in the absence of male lineal descendants unmarried daughters take possession of their father's property till marriage but not subsequently. This statement is made with regard to all property. The answer then says :

that married daughters do not inherit in the presence of collaterals, but adds that this is the general rule, but under the influence of judicial decisions some people assert that daughters succeed in preference to collaterals of the fifth or more remote degrees.

This Question and Answer were the subject of consideration very recently before a Division Bench of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 381 of 1930 (1). It was there pointed out that the answer is ambiguous and that it cannot be said with any degree of certainty that the distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property was understood by the persons answering the questions. It was also pointed out that in a number of rulings there quoted, a daughter had succeeded to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to near collaterals. With this ruling I am in respectful agreement. Dr. Shuja-ud-Din took us through the instances and the evidence brought on the record in the present case. There are five alleged instances in his favour, but three of them concern alienations effected by widows in favour of strangers and are therefore irrelevant. A fourth Ex.-D 9 was a suit brought to set aside an adoption of a daughter's son amongst Sayyads of Sialkot District. The suit was successful but the property was ancestral. This also is no guide here. Ex.-D 10 is a mutation in which a gift made by the mother of the last male-holder to her daughter, i. e. to the sister of the last male-holder was set aside at the instance of the collaterals and is also not relevant. On the other hand, the learned Subordinate Judge at pp. 45-46 of the printed paper book has surveyed a number of instances which support his conclusion and which are in accord with the rulings cited in Civil Appeal No. 381 of 1930. For the above reasons I am of opinion that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs and would order accordingly.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree with the conclusions reached by my learned brother on both the points which have been argued before us. It is true that the "history of the foundation" of the village as given in the Settlement record of 1865 shows that more than two hundred years ago Amir Ali, the common ancestor of the parties, and his nephew Faqir Ullah, had refounded the village, but this fact is insufficient to justify the assumption that all the land now held by the various descendants of Amir Ali had devolved on them by inheritance from generation to generation. As pointed out in detail in the judgment of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, there is very great disparity in the areas owned by the various members of the family, including Mir Musa's descendants, and the plaintiffs have failed to furnish any satisfactory explanation as to why this is so. Clearly it was for the plaintiffs to exclude the possibility of acquisition, otherwise than by inheritance from the common ancestor but admittedly this they have not done. It is quite possible that during the long time that has elapsed since the death of the common ancestor, one branch of the family might have acquired from another portions of the land now held by it, by sale, gift, pre-emption, prescription or otherwise, and it has not been shown that this could not have been the case. The finding of the lower Court that the land has not been proved to be ancestral is therefore correct.

On the question of custom, I have no doubt that the plaintiffs have succeeded in discharging the onus which lay on them, that in the tribe to which the parties belong daughters of a sonless male proprietor succeed to his self-acquired property in preference to the collaterals. In the judgment of the lower Court, the evidence produced by the parties has been carefully analysed and it has been shown that, in numerous cases in this and the neighbouring districts daughters were successful, and that there is not a single proved instance of collaterals excluding daughters in succession to such property. Before us the appellants' counsel relied solely on the presumption arising from the answer to Question 47 of Boyd's Riwaj-i-Am. This answer has been considered in several rulings of this Court and in each of them it was found that not a single instance was forthcoming in support of the custom as recorded, whereas there were several instances to the contrary. See 4 Lah 99 (2), 10 Lah 489 (3), 10 Lah 485 (4), 1930 Lah 724 (5), 11 Lah 415 (6), 1935 Lah 106 (1) and Civil Appeal No. 1308 of 1932 (7). The finding of the lower Court on this point is also correct. I agree that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Order.—The learned Public Prosecutor has not been able to show me any section at law by which the present petitioner can be sent back to jail. The sentence of the High Court was passed in October 1926. Thereafter the petitioner was released after undergoing his full term of imprisonment on offering security for fine payable by instalments. The last instalment was paid in October 1931 and then nothing happened until the present order was passed recommitting the petitioner to jail. The fine admittedly is no longer leviable under S. 70 and I do not see how imprisonment in default of fine can be inflicted now. It is true the original order releasing the prisoner was illegal, but no law has been shown me by which the present order is legal, and I therefore set aside the order of the Additional District Magistrate and direct the petitioner to be released. The learned Public Prosecutor wishes me to add that his contention is that the fine not having been paid in full, the proportionate sentence still stands and must be served. He cites no law in support of this contention.

Second Appeal No. 1561 of 1929, Decided on 29th May 1934.

Punjab Colonization of Government Land Act (5 of 1912), Ss. 19, 21 (a)—Widow of occupancy tenant allowed to succeed by Government—Gift by her to her daughter—Sanction of Commissioner obtained—Reversioner cannot contest gift.

Where after the death of an occupancy tenant his widow succeeds to him and the Government by allowing her to succeed allots her fresh occupancy rights the succession to such occupancy rights in the widow is governed by S. 21 (a), Act 5 of 1912. The right of alienation is governed by S. 19, which requires sanction by the Commissioner. When therefore the widow gifts her rights to her daughter, and the Commissioner has sanctioned such gift, the gift is good and the reversioners have no locus standi to contest the gift. [P 349 C 2]

Khurshaid Zaman for Zafrullah Khan—for Appellants.

Mohammad Amin—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—The plaintiffs are nephews of one Nikka who was granted occupancy rights in a square of land by Government. Nikka died in 1897 and was succeeded by his son, Ghulam Nabi, who died in 1898. Government allowed his mother, Mt. Mahtab Bibi, widow of Nikka, to succeed to the occupancy rights. Later she made a gift of those rights in favour of Mt. Mohammad Bibi, one of her daughters. This gift was sanctioned by the Commissioner under S. 19, Act 5 of 1912. The plaintiffs then sued for a declaration that the widow had no power to make this gift or the Commissioner to sanction it, and that it should be held inoperative after the death of Mt. Mahtab Bibi. The Courts below have dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs have preferred this second appeal. Prior to the enactment of Act 5 of 1912 it was held, in 14 P R 1908 (1), that succession to these special occupancy rights was regulated by S. 59, Punjab Tenancy Act. Mt. Mahtab Bibi was not an heir to her son under this section when she was allowed to become the occupancy tenant in 1898. This act of Government, therefore, amounted to allotting to her the occupancy tenancy. In these circumstances she must be treated as a person to whom the tenancy was first allotted by Government, succession to whom would now be governed by S. 21 (a), Act 5 of 1912, and her right of alienation is thus restricted only by the provisions of S. 19 of the Act, that is the sanction of the Commissioner is necessary to validate the gift. This has been given and therefore the reversioners of the husband have no locus standi to contest it. The suit was rightly decided and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

A company had a monopoly of quarrying slate from quarries in a village. The proprietary body of the village assailed that right and the company had to incur expenses in defending that suit:

Judgment.—The Commissioner of Income-tax has referred to us for our opinion the question whether the expenditure incurred by the Kangra Valley Slate Co. Ltd., in defending as lessee of certain land in Mouza Kanhayara, District Kangra a suit for possession and injunction instituted by the lessors who are the proprietary body of that village, is deductible under Cl. (9), sub-s. (2), S. 10 Income-tax Act. The material facts of this case are that the Kangra Valley Slate Co. Ltd., by lease dated 22nd February 1867 secured in perpetuity the exclusive right of quarrying slate in Kanhyara village of the Kangra District. The company is also a share-holder in the village shamilat and as such enjoyed quarrying rights in common with the proprietary body, but the essence of the company's business is that by reason of the lease it enjoys a monopoly of slate quarrying in this village. This monopoly has been recently assailed by the village proprietary body who, on 10th July 1928, instituted a suit to reject the company from the quarries covered by the lease and also for an injunction to prevent the company from quarrying. On 11th July 1930 a decree was passed against the company by the trial Court and an appeal against that decree is pending in this Court. The company have obtained stay of execution so far as the injunction is concerned, so that the business of the company continues during the pendency of the appeal.

In submitting a return of its income for the year ending 30th June 1930, which is the 'previous year' for the purpose of assessment under consideration (1931-32), the company showed a net income of Rs. 23,350 which was arrived at after deducting Rs. 13,397 on account of the legal expenses of the suit to date. The Income-tax Officer, supported by the Commissioner, Income tax, has held that no deduction is permissible because the legal expenses were expenditure in the nature of capital; and since it was not incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits and gains of a business it did not fall within the purview of S. 10 (2) (ix), Income-tax Act. Para. (ix), sub-s. (2), S. 10, Income-tax Act, provides that allowances may be made on any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains.

Mr. Badri Das on behalf of the company urges that the cost of the litigation was incurred to defend the monopoly of quarrying which is the very life-blood of the company. For this reason he contends that the expenditure should be held to have been incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains; since if the monopoly were lost, the business of the company would come to a standstill and there would be no profits or gains. Further he contends that the expenditure is debitable to revenue and is not capital expenditure and that for these reasons the deduction is permissible under the clause. The opinion of the Commissioner is that since the subject matter of the suit represents the capital of the company, the expenditure on litigation was incurred to defend the capital of the business and must therefore be deemed to be in the nature of capital expenditure. Accordingly he holds that no deductions can be permitted. No authority applicable to the facts of this case has been cited before us at the Bar. Counsel for the assessee has invited our attention to a British case reported as 6 Tax Cas 399 (1), in which a Brewery Company as lessees of a number of houses which they had acquired in the course of their business claimed deductions on account of certain expenditure as being money wholly and exclusively laid out for the purpose of the Brewery; and this claim was upheld on appeal to the House of Lords. The only point of relevance in this case is that a sum of £66-2-8 was included in the expenses thus claimed and allowed as legal and other costs.

This authority however has no bearing upon the present case, partly because this item for legal expenses, being trifling in comparison with the other expenses claimed, passed practically unnoticed in the course of the legal discussion and also because (as would appear from p. 410 of the ruling) it was agreed between counsel at the commencement that these legal expenses were not incurred for any extension of the business so as to make them 'capital business.' In our opinion the answer to the reference made by the Income-tax Commissioner in the present case depends on the question whether the legal expenditure incurred by the Kangra Valley Slate Company was or was not in the nature of capital expenditure; and since it was agreed that the legal expenses permitted in 6 Tax Cas 399 (1) were not to be considered capital expenditure, the authority has no bearing on the present dispute. As observed by Wright, J., in 3 Tax Cas 298 (2) the question whether certain expenditure in respect of which a deduction is sought is capital or not is in its essence one of fact; and as such it is open to question whether this is a permissible reference to us under S. 66, Income-tax Act. But we have no doubt that this reference should be treated as involving a question of law. It should however be understood that in answering this reference we are not deciding any question of principle, but are giving an opinion which is relevant solely to the facts of the case before us. The Income-tax Act does not contain any definition of the term 'capital expenditure' nor has any definition been attempted in the various authorities cited at the Bar. The nearest approach to a definition of 'capital expenditure' occurs in certain observations by Lord Dunedin in the case reported as 5 Tax Cas 529 (3). Lord Dunedin observed (on p. 536) as follows:

2. Marant Surveyor of Taxes v. Wheal Grenville Mining Co., (1894) 3 Tax Cas 298.

3. Vallambrosa Rubber Co. Ltd., v. Farmer, (1910) 5 Tax Cas 529.

I think it is not a bad criterion of what is capital expenditure as against what is income expenditure, to say that capital expenditure is a thing that is going to be spent once for all and income expenditure is a thing that is going to recur every year.

This test laid down by Lord Dunedin was approved in the case reported as 12 Tax Cas 351 (4) in which Clerk, L. J., at p. 355 observed that this criterion has been accepted in several subsequent cases. The expenditure incurred by the Kangra Valley Slate Co. Ltd., in the present case was clearly a non-recurring outlay required to retain a capital asset. Following the criterion laid down by Lord Dunedin in the Vallambrosa case (3) we hold that the expenditure incurred by the Kangra Valley Slate Co. Ltd., in this particular case is in the nature of capital expenditure and we agree therefore with the Commissioner of Income-tax in answering the question referred to us in the negative.

Appeal No. 772 of 1934, Decided on 7th November 1934, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 17th February 1934.

Custom (Punjab)—Gift—Delivery of possession necessary—Gift by simpleton with no one to advise is not valid.

A gift to be valid must ordinarily be followed by possession. Where therefore a deed of gift has been obtained from a man who is a simpleton and who has no friends and relations to advise him, it cannot be allowed to stand in the absence of proof of delivery of possession; merely mutation of names is not sufficient.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Achhru Ram and R. P. Khosla—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for possession. The trial Court dismissed the suit, but on appeal by the plaintiffs the lower appellate Court has decreed the claim. The defendant has come up to this Court in second appeal. Lalu, defendant, has been described as a simpleton. He had neither wife nor children and was living all alone in his native village. On 20th June 1931 one Tek Singh, a caste fellow of Lalu obtained a deed of gift in his favour from Lalu. Tek Singh was a native of a neighbouring village. Mutation proceedings were started and Tek Singh himself did not appear before the Revenue Officer, but Lalu was present with his mother. The Revenue Officer recorded that Lalu was a simpleton and was unable to say anything, but his mother denied the execution of the deed of gift and further stated that possession had not been given to the donee and the whole thing was a deception. Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that delivery of possession had not been made, the mutation was rejected. In 1925 the patwari made a report that possession had now passed and that mutation might be sanctioned. On 5th June 1925 Lalu is said to have appeared before the Revenue Officer accompanied by the village lambar-dar and is said to have attested something, we don't know what. It was ordered that the case should be put up in the presence of the donee.

The donee however did not appear, but his brother Sunder appeared on 20th December 1925 and mutation was sanctioned on the basis of the gift. In the meantime Tek Singh died and on 21st January 1928 mutation was sanctioned in favour of the sons of Tek Singh. In 1931 Lalu brought a suit for a declaration that the gift in favour of Tek Singh was invalid but subsequently he withdrew the suit saying that he himself was in possession, and therefore, it was not necessary for him to sue for a declaration.

On 13th June 1933, the sons of Tek Singh instituted the present suit for possession against Lalu. The plea which prevailed in the trial Court on behalf of Lalu was that no delivery of possession had taken place and therefore the gift was incomplete and invalid. The suit of the plaintiffs was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs went up in appeal before the District Judge. The judgment of the learned District Judge is not by any means clear. He seems to be of opinion that no possession was actually delivered under the deed of gift. But, since mutation had been effected in favour of the plaintiffs, therefore the gift must be taken to have been given effect to. He refers to para. 60 of Rattigan's Digest which lays down that a gift to be valid must ordinarily be followed by possession and must be free from undue influence. He however says that the word 'ordinarily' makes all the difference and the present is one of the cases in which it would not be necessary for the validity of the gift that it should be followed by actual delivery of possession, and that in any case it is more than amply proved that everything has been done to make the gift complete and irrevocable. Apart from para. 60, I may observe that in primitive or semi-primitive societies a transfer could only take place by actual delivery of possession. Under the old English law it used to be "feoffment" and delivery of seisin. Under the Mohammadan law a gift was incomplete without delivery of possession. This idea seems to have been at the foundation of the rule of Customary Law as enunciated by the compilers of Rattigan's Digest. We have to see whether there is clear and cogent evidence that possession had been given. That evidence is lacking in this case and the learned Judge therefore considered himself justified in falling back upon the evidence of mutation entries, in order to hold that the gift was valid. In my opinion the mutation and the circumstances attending the same in the present case are wholly insufficient to be a legal substitute for delivery of possession without which the gift cannot be valid and legally binding on the parties. The word "ordinarily" in para. 60 of Rattigan's Digest probably refers to those cases when the property from its nature is incapable of delivery of possession. The learned Judge has clearly misread the opening portion of the mutation proceedings dated 20th December 1925 which makes all the difference. He understood the sentence to mean that Lalu, the donor, identified by the lambar-dar, attested possession. This was not so. The word used is deh and not qabza and deh goes with the lambar-dar.

I was asked by Mr. Achhru Ram, the learned counsel, for the respondents, to remit an issue on the question of delivery of possession. The trial Court had given a finding on the evidence that there was no delivery of possession. The learned Judge disposed of the case on the ground that in the absence of possession other circumstances go to show that the gift was a valid one. If the case were to be remanded at this stage the result would be that a good deal of perjured evidence would be led on both sides. I therefore, do not consider it proper in the interests of justice to prolong these proceedings by ordering a remand. The deed of gift, which as already stated, had been obtained from a man who is described as a simpleton and who had no friends and relations to advise him, cannot under the circumstances be allowed to stand in the absence of proof of delivery of possession. I therefore, allow the appeal and setting aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court, restore the decree of the trial Court. The defendant-appellant shall get his costs throughout.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 65 of 1934,
Decided on 29th October 1934.

* * Criminal Trial—Pardon—Case against co-accused withdrawn by Government—Magistrate not tendering pardon suo motu—Government withdrawing case through Magistrate—Provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., not applicable.

In a criminal case the Public Prosecutor withdrew the case against some accused under S. 494, Criminal P. C. The Local Government had promised pardon or 'non-prosecution' to these accused on condition that accused would make a true statement of facts in the case. Afterwards these accused were produced as witnesses against the remaining accused. At the time of framing charge the accused under trial raised an objection that the case must be "committed to the Sessions" as some of the accused were tendered pardon:

Held: that this was a case of promise of pardon by the local Government through the Magistrate and as the Magistrate had not tendered pardon suo motu, provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., were not applicable. Moreover, if the case could by any means come under S. 337 then there was no necessity of withdrawing the prosecution as in this case, because under S. 337 the moment pardon was tendered, the accused no longer remained an accused: 1931 Lah 476, Rel. on. [P 853 C 2; P 354 C 1,2]

Held also: when the Government intended to withdraw a prosecution and not to have recourse to S. 337, Criminal P. C., care should be taken to make the fact clear to all concerned.

Bhide, J.—The material facts giving rise to this petition for revision are as follows: On the termination of a suit based on a promissory note, the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, took action under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and filed a complaint under Ss. 467/471, read with S. 120-B, I. P. C., against three persons, named Sain Das, Vishwa Mitter and G. S. Kochhar. The Public Prosecutor filed a complaint in connection with the same transaction against the petitioner Bawa Faqir Singh and two other persons named Shamsher Singh and Ram Lal. Both these complaints were being inquired into by Mr. R. N. Luthra, Special Magistrate. Before any evidence was recorded the case against Sain Das was withdrawn with the permission of the Magistrate under S. 494, Criminal P. C., and he was then produced as a witness against the other accused, including the petitioner. After a certain number of witnesses were examined the case against Vishwa Mitter was similarly withdrawn and he, too, then appeared as a witness. When charges were framed by the Magistrate the petitioner raised an objection that both Sain Das and Vishwa Mitter had been tendered pardon by the District Magistrate and the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., being applicable, the case ought to be committed to the Court of Session. The objection was overruled by the learned Magistrate and a petition to the Sessions Judge for revision of that order having proved unsuccessful, the petitioner Bawa Faqir Singh has moved the Court on the revision side praying that the case against him be ordered to be committed to the Court of Session.

It is not disputed that Sain Das and Vishwa Mitter were produced before the District Magistrate and the Additional District Magistrate (who had all the powers of a District Magistrate), and that they were told that no proceedings would be taken against them provided they made a true statement of facts relating to the case within their knowledge, and that after they had accepted the terms, the cases against them were withdrawn under S. 494, Criminal P. C. The petitioner's contention is that, in the circumstances, the case fell within the purview of S. 337, Criminal P. C., and he is entitled to have it tried by the Court of Session in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. 2-A of that section. The learned Government Advocate, on the other hand, contended that the promise of pardon or "non-prosecution" was made in this instance by the Local Government and it was merely conveyed to Sain Das and Vishwa Mitter through the District Magistrate and the Additional District Magistrate, respectively, and as the Magistrates concerned did not act suo motu in the matter, the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., are not applicable. The order of the local Government, which authorized the promise in question to be made to Sain Das, has been produced and placed on the record: vide Exhibit P. W. 4/G. The order communicated to Vishwa Mitter has not been produced, but it is not disputed that it was of a similar character.

It appears from Exhibit P. W. 4/H that the terms of Exhibit P. W. 4/G were explained to Sain Das and were accepted by him and then the Public Prosecutor was directed to withdraw the prosecution against him. After fully considering these documents, I am of opinion, that there is force in the contention of the learned Government Advocate. The order Exhibit P. W. 4/G merely authorises the "Deputy Commissioner" of Lahore to inform Sain Das that His Excellency the Governor had directed that no proceedings would be taken against him, provided he made a full and true disclosure of the facts within his knowledge and repeated the same when called upon to do so in a Court of justice. If the intention was to take action under S. 337, Criminal P. C., it would have been sufficient to say so, and it would not have been necessary to specify the terms upon which the Local Government had agreed not to prosecute Sain Das. It may also be noted that S. 337, Criminal P. C., requires the person to whom pardon is tendered to make a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and "to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor in the commission thereof." The latter portion, which I have put within inverted commas is not to be found in the order of the Local Government. Lastly, S. 337, Criminal P. C., does not say anything about "repeating the facts disclosed in a Court of justice." It would thus appear, that the terms were not identical with the terms prescribed by S. 337, Criminal P. C. If action was to be taken under S. 337, Criminal P. C., I think care would have been taken to mention that section and to adhere strictly to its provisions.

The above facts indicate that the Local Government did not contemplate action being taken under S. 337, Criminal P. C. This view is further confirmed by the fact that the Deputy Commissioner, after acceptance of the terms by Sain Das, directed the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the case against him. If action was being taken under S. 337, Criminal P. C., there would have been no necessity to withdraw the case. For an accused person to whom a pardon is tendered under S. 337, Criminal P. C., ceases to be an accused person from the moment the pardon is accepted and is to be treated as a witness thereafter: cf. 1931 Lah 476 (478) (1). The petitioner has laid stress on the fact that Mr. F. H. Puckle, the Deputy Commissioner, while explaining the terms to Sain Das and directing the withdrawal of the case against him has signed his order as D. M. (District Magistrate), instead of D. C. (Deputy Commissioner). This was probably due to inadvertence. For the order of the Local Government was certainly conveyed to him as Deputy Commissioner and not as District Magistrate, and as pointed out above there are indications in the order of the Local Government as well as in Mr. Puckle's order, which go to show that action under S. 337, Criminal P. C., was not contemplated. The only persons who might have reasonably complained in the matter were Sain Das and Vishwa Mitter, if they had been misled by the procedure adopted and had been led to think that the pardon was being tendered to them by Mr. Puckle in his capacity as District Magistrate under S. 337, Criminal P. C., and that they were, therefore, entitled to all the privileges conferred by that and the following sections. But they made no such complaint in Court. Notices were issued to these persons in these proceedings as the decision of this petition would have affected them; but they have not cared to appear. In the circumstances, it may be presumed that they understood and accepted the position taken up by the Government, viz., that no pardon was tendered to them under S. 337, Criminal P. C.

1. Khairati Ram v. Emperor, 1931 Lah 476 = 1931 Cr C 700 = 32 Cr L J 913 = 132 I C 519 = 12 Lah 635.

Section 133, Evidence Act, lays down clearly that an accomplice is a competent witness. It was conceded by the petitioner that the Local Government has the option of not taking proceedings against an offender, and that it can, if it so chooses, produce him as a witness, without having recourse to the procedure laid down in S. 337, Criminal P. C. In the present instance, the circumstances mentioned above show that there was no intention to proceed under that section, and the mere fact that Mr. Puckle signed his order as District Magistrate instead of Deputy Commissioner (apparently through inadvertence) cannot, in my opinion, be held to be sufficient to bring the case within the purview of S. 337, Criminal P. C. It has been urged that the Local Government has merely tried to circumvent the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., in order to avoid the necessity of commitment of the case to the Court of Session. That may be the case. But when it is conceded that the alternative procedure was open to the Local Government, that fact cannot render the procedure "illegal." The procedure adopted possibly places the prosecution in a much weaker position; for it may be that the Court will not be inclined to attach the same importance to the testimony of an ordinary accomplice as it will to the testimony of an approver to whom pardon has been formally tendered by a Magistrate under S. 337, Criminal P. C., and who enjoys certain privileges as a consequence of that procedure.

But this was a matter for the Local Government to decide, and if it has chosen to adopt the above procedure, it must, of course, accept it with the consequent risks, such as there may be. There is, however, one point to which I would like to refer and that is, that if it is intended not to adopt the procedure under S. 337, Criminal P. C., care should be taken to make the fact clear to all concerned. In the present instance the promise of pardon or "non-prosecution" was made through the District Magistrate. This fact was likely to mislead and create an impression that proceedings were being taken under S. 337, Criminal P. C. If Sain Das and Vishwa Mitter had raised any such objection, we might have found it necessary to consider the matter further; but no such objection has been raised. If proceedings are not being taken under S. 337, Criminal P. C., the best course would be to produce the persons concerned before some Police or other Executive Officer, and not before a Magistrate empowered to act under S. 337, Criminal P. C., and make it clear in the proceedings that action is being taken independently of S. 337, Criminal P. C. The advisability or propriety of adopting such a procedure is, of course, a matter for the Local Government to decide, and I am not concerned here with that aspect of the question. But if that procedure is to be adopted, there should be no room left for any doubt as to the nature of the proceedings.

I have already stated above that it was admitted before us that the order of the Local Government in respect of Vishwa Mitter was to the same effect as that in the case of Sain Das though the order has not been placed on the record. But there are two points of difference. The order of the Local Government was communicated to Vishwa Mitter, not by the District Magistrate but by the Additional District Magistrate and, secondly, this was done while he was under trial. It would appear from the proviso to S. 337, Criminal P. C., that when pardon is to be tendered during the course of an enquiry or trial, it must be tendered by "the District Magistrate." There is only one District Magistrate for a district (vide S. 10, Criminal P. C.) and although the Additional District Magistrate may have the powers of a District Magistrate he cannot be called "the District Magistrate." I do not therefore, think the Additional District Magistrate was empowered to take action under S. 337, Criminal P. C., in the circumstances of the case. It was next argued by the petitioner that S. 343, Criminal P. C., is a bar to pardon being tendered to an "accused" person during the course of a trial, unless the pardon is tendered under Ss. 337 or 338, Criminal P. C. In support of this contention reliance was placed on 10 C W N 847 (2) and 33 Cal 1353 (3). The wording of S. 343, Criminal P. C., lends some colour to this argument and the point is not free from difficulty. But it is unnecessary to discuss this question for the purposes of this petition. For assuming that the contention of the petitioner in this respect is correct, that would at the most render the evidence of Vishwa Mitter inadmissible. That would certainly not be a ground for commitment of the case to the Court of Session. It is open to the petitioner to raise the question of the admissibility of the evidence of Vishwa Mitter in the Court below and it would be for the learned Magistrate to decide the point. In my opinion the petition fails and must be dismissed. I note however, that the trial of the case has already taken an inordinate amount of time and it is desirable that the learned Magistrate should proceed to dispose of the case with the least possible delay.

2. Paban Singh v. Emperor, (1906) 10 C W N 847=4 Cr L J 44.

3. Banu Singh v. Emperor, (1906) 33 Cal 1353=10 C W N 962=4 Cr L J 145.

—for the Crown.

Order.—A case was instituted by the police under S. 307, I. P. C., against the applicant Ujagar Singh. Record of evidence commenced on the 3rd October 1934. On the 5th of October, Ujagar Singh filed a cross-complaint under Ss. 326, 324 and 452, I. P. C. This case was adjourned from time to time along with the challan. After arguments had been heard in the challan, the applicant applied for a transfer of the case, which was refused by the District Magistrate. He has now come to this Court with a request that either the case should be transferred or the Magistrate ordered not to announce judgment till he has recorded the evidence in the complaint case. The learned Public Prosecutor raises an objection to the effect that the application for transfer cannot be entertained as it is not accompanied by an affidavit. S. 526 (4), Criminal P. C., provides that such applications must be supported by an affidavit, the mode of swearing the affidavit being provided for in S. 539, Criminal P. C. This objection has not been seriously contested by Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din and must be accepted.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din, however, presses his alternative prayer. It certainly appears reasonable that the pronouncement of orders in the challan case should be deferred until the Magistrate has heard the evidence in the case brought by the applicant. It is obviously desirable that both cases should be heard by one and the same Magistrate and thus the danger of conflicting decisions being given on the same facts would be avoided. Reference has been made by counsel to 112 I C 563 (1), and 1930 Mad 190 (2). The matter is clearly one to be decided on the basis of convenience, and it is clearly convenient that both cases should be disposed of by the same Court after hearing the whole of the evidence. I, therefore, reject the application for transfer, but direct that the learned Magistrate should not pronounce orders in the challan case until he has completed the hearing of the complaint brought by the applicant.

If confessing persons know that there is a likelihood of their being returned to police custody after making confession, they would be more inclined to make false confessions at the instance of the police than they otherwise would do. This practice ought to be abolished. [P 357 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial — Evidence — Evidence recorded under Chap. 18, Criminal P. C.—Taking on record of such evidence by Sessions Court—There need not be any corroboration—It is like all other evidence, to be believed or not and to be valued.

There is nothing in S. 283, Criminal P. C. itself to show that there need be corroboration of evidence so recorded. Evidence recorded in this manner in the Sessions Court is precisely the same as any other evidence. It has, like other evidence, to be examined with care. It is to be considered together with all the other surrounding circumstances. The Judge or Jury, as the case may be, must make up their minds whether the evidence is to be believed or not, and if it is believed, what value has to be placed upon it. No general law can, therefore, be laid down as to this. Evidence must be judged—as all evidence must be—according to the facts of each particular case. It is clear that there is no difference in law between evidence of this sort and any other evidence: 51 P. R. 1887, Foll. [P 358 C 1]

Mohammad Din Jan—for Appellant.D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Narinjan Singh, the appellant in this case, has been condemned to death by the learned Sessions Judge of Lahore for the murder of one Mt. Tej Kaur, his aunt. The deceased woman was of loose character. She was at the time of the murder living with the uncle of the accused. Shortly before the murder Gurdit Singh, the father of Narinjan Singh, and another man named Kammum had jointly pawned some ornaments. Narinjan Singh redeemed them. Kammum wished to have in his possession on payment his half of the ornaments. Narinjan refused. Mt. Tej Kaur provided hundred rupees in order to enable Kammum to pay Narinjan Singh and recover the jewellery. Narinjan Singh however, refused after having taken the money, either to return the money or to return the ornaments. Mt. Tej Kaur had summoned a panchayat to decide this matter and a day had been fixed for the return of the ornaments or the money. On the day before the day fixed Mt. Tej Kaur was killed.

In the committing Magistrate's Court no less than five eyewitnesses gave evidence that they had seen the accused slaughtering Mt. Tej Kaur with a chhavi. These witnesses were witnesses who ordinarily would be in the vicinity. They lived in adjacent houses or were staying in those houses with friends. One of them Mt. Mamo ran at once to inform the father of the deceased woman of the murder and thereafter the father proceeded to the police station and made a first information report in which he stated that his daughter had been killed by Narinjan Singh. The accused further was arrested the same day with the blood-stained chhavi still in his possession. At this time the accused must have been without hope. There were all the eyewitnesses and he himself had been arrested with the actual weapon with which he committed the murder. It was not unlikely, therefore, that he should make a confession. He expressed his willingness to make a confession and on 5th March he did make a confession before a Magistrate under S. 164. The Magistrate very improperly returned the accused after the confession to the custody of the police.

In this Court we have frequently observed that this practice is very improper. It is equally not in the interest of the prosecution that this should be done. It gives a very strong argument both in the trial and appellate Courts that the confession should not be relied on. It is perfectly clear that if confessing persons know that there is a likelihood of their being returned to police custody after making confessions they would be more inclined to make false confessions at the instance of the police than they otherwise would do. This practice ought to be abolished. In the committing Magistrate's Court the eyewitnesses all gave evidence to the effect that on hearing the cry of Mt. Mamo they had come up and actually seen Narinjan Singh attacking the deceased with a chhavi. In the Sessions Court, however, every one of them went back on their statements in the committing Magistrate's Court most of whom said that they did not know who the murderer was at all. Mehtab, however, said that there were two murderers and Narinjan Singh was one of them. Wassan, although he did not say who the murderer was, admitted that Narinjan Singh was standing there by the deceased woman. The learned Sessions Judge in accordance with the provisions of S. 288, Criminal P. C., placed the evidence given in the committing Magistrate's Court upon the record of the Sessions Court. In his judgment he records the facts of the case very clearly. He, however, is in our opinion, misled as to the law as regards these statements. The learned Judge says that he can only act upon the evidence given in the committing Magistrate's Court if there is "corroboration of those statements otherwise." This point also has been argued by the counsel for the appellant in this Court. We have examined the actual section of the Code which is clear and is as follows :

The evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chap. 18, may in the discretion of the presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provision of the Evidence Act, 1872.

The words "the evidence.....be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provision of the Evidence Act of 1872," could not be stronger. There is nothing in the section of the Act itself to show that there need be corroboration of evidence so recorded. In our opinion evidence recorded in this manner in the Sessions Court is precisely the same as any other evidence. It has like other evidence to be examined with care. It is to be considered together with all the other surrounding circumstances. The learned Judge or Jury, as the case may be, must make up their minds whether the evidence is to be believed or not, and if it is believed, what value has to be placed upon it. No general law can therefore be laid down as to this. Evidence must be judged—as all evidence must be—according to the facts of each particular case. It is clear however in our opinion that there is no difference in law between evidence of this sort and any other evidence. Our attention has been drawn to several authorities and we may say that we are in entire agreement with the statement of the law on this point laid down by Plowden, J. of the Punjab Chief Court in 51 P R 1887 (Cr.) (1). It might be advantageous to repeat what the learned Judge has said on this point :

Once admitted it is on the same footing with all other evidence in the case, that is to say, it is to be considered by the jury or by the assessors and the Judge, according to the nature of the trial, as part of the materials upon which the verdict or a finding is to be given. . . . Its value is a question in the particular case for the jury or for the assessors, subject to the directions of the Judge in summing up, or for the Judge in cases where he is a judge of fact. . . Whether any portion or the whole of the evidence thus admitted is entitled to credit, and if so, to such a degree that a conviction may be based upon it wholly or in part, are very important questions for the jury or assessors, or for the Judge, as the case may be.

We have dealt with this point as it has been raised, but, in any event, there is ample evidence to corroborate the evidence of these witnesses. There is the fact that long before the police came on the scene the first information report on the information of Mt. Mamo was recorded and in that first information report Narinjan Singh is named as the murderer. Kishen Singh, a lambardar, also gave evidence. He was early on the scene and he says—as a result of a question put to him by defence counsel in cross-examination—that all these eyewitnesses were present at the time he arrived and that they all said that Narinjan Singh was the murderer. This piece of evidence was given not in examination-in-chief but in cross-examination. Therefore any suggestion that this statement was made in order to assist the police or the prosecution falls to the ground. There is also the fact, which was unchallenged in the lower Court, that the accused was in possession of his bloodstained chhavi when arrested. The Chemical Examiner and the Imperial Serologist establish that the blood on the chhavi was human blood. There is also the fact of the confession by the accused himself. This confession, it is true, was retracted in the Sessions Court, but was not retracted in the committing Magistrate's Court. The learned committing Magistrate put to the accused several questions, but the only answer that he made to any of them was "I will make my statement in the Court of Session." If, as the accused now contends, the confession was the result of improper treatment by the police he undoubtedly would not answer in the way he did before the committing Magistrate.

It was contended here that the accused had been in custody of the police right up to the time of his committal proceedings. But on looking at the record we find that he was only in the police custody after the confession until 8th March; the date of his statement in the committing Magistrate's Court is 29th March, i. e. the accused had three weeks after leaving the custody of the police before he made his statement in the committing Magistrate's Court. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that if there had been any improper treatment of the accused he should have made a complaint about it at that time.

We are satisfied therefore on the evidence of the eyewitnesses given in the committing Magistrate's Court after considering it carefully and of the surrounding circumstances and the other evidence in this case that the learned Judge in the lower Court came to the only possible conclusion, namely that Narinjan Singh was guilty of the crime with which he was charged. On the question of sentence we see no reason to interfere. The accused in his confession tried to raise a defence that he had seen a man leaving the room of his aunt. No attempt has been made to prove this. Indeed the confession has been denied now by the accused. In any event, even if this suggestion is true, there would not be enough provocation in our opinion to justify us in reducing the sentence from that of death to transportation. Every one apparently knew that this woman was of loose character and the woman's own husband had not taken action in the matter. The real motive was more probably the one suggested, namely that Mt. Tej Kaur was making herself objectionable to Narinjan Singh in the matter of the jewellery and the money. The learned Judge in the earlier part of his judgment makes it clear that the reason for the retraction by the eyewitnesses of their original statements is probably the fact that Deva Singh and Narinjan Singh are influential persons in the village and that the witnesses were all tenants or neighbours of Narinjan Singh or his father. We therefore see no reason to interfere either in the conviction or sentence and we confirm the sentence of death and dismiss the appeal. In view of the fact that it appears that the eye-witnesses in this case, namely Mt. Mamo, wife of Gama, Wassan, Mehtab, Mt. Daro, Mt. Barkat and Mt. Madho, have committed perjury, we direct that necessary proceedings be taken against them.

Baij Nath Bhatnagar — Accused —

v.

Muhammad Din — Complainant — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 525 of 1935, Decided on 2nd November 1935, from order of Sess. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 1st April 1935.

(a) Criminal Trial — Statement made to police officer during investigation not reduced to writing relevant and not privileged under S. 123 or S. 124, Evidence Act, can be used.

Statements not reduced to writing made to a police officer during investigation, if relevant, and not privileged under S. 123 or 124, Evidence Act, can be used at a trial for an offence not under investigation when they were made.

(b) Criminal Trial — Recorded statement can be used for offence of trial not under investigation when it was made — Record of statement heard by police officer and recorded in diary forms unpublished official record—Evidence derived from which when can be produced—Court not bound to give copies of such statements.

Section 172 of the Code does not forbid a recorded statement to be used at a trial for an offence not under investigation when it was made. There is, however, no doubt that the record of a statement heard by a police officer in exercise of the power conferred by S. 161 of the Code and recorded either in the diary or separately in the course of investigation proceedings is an unpublished official record relating to an affair of state evidence derived from which cannot be produced in a case to which the first proviso to S. 162 is not applicable except with the permission of the officer at the head of the police department. It cannot in any sense be termed a deposition and it is not evidence. It is not a document, a copy of which must be given on demand under the provision of S. 76, Evidence Act. [P 360 C 2; P 361 C 1]

Jhanda Singh for the Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner in this case was being tried by the District Magistrate of Gujrat for offences under Ss. 211, 344 and 504, I. P. C. In order to contradict some of the prosecution witnesses by confronting them with statements made by them previously, he applied to the Magistrate (who being District Magistrate was also head of the District Police) to be furnished with copies of the records of statements made by them to the police in the course of an investigation into an offence other than that for which he was being tried. The District Magistrate declined to give the copies. The learned Sessions Judge has recommended that this Court should, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, order that the copies asked for be furnished. He has based his recommendation on the remark made by Madras High Court in 56 Mad 154 (1) that a statement made to the police is as good evidence as a statement made to any other person save for certain exceptions to be found in the Indian Evidence Act and in the Code of Criminal Procedure. That judgment, as noticed by the District Magistrate in his order now under question, did not deal with the point whether a person is entitled to be given copies of statements recorded by the police.

It is true that the prohibition in S. 162, Criminal P. C., against the use of statements made to the police, relates only to the use of them at an enquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was used. (Before it was amended in 1923, the section forbade the use of any such statements 'as evidence'). It seems clear that S. 162 does not forbid an accused person to contradict a witness by a previous statement made to the police in an investigation not made in respect of the offence for which the accused is being tried.

For the Crown it is contended before me that statements recorded by the police are nothing more than entries recording the investigation proceedings in the diary prescribed in S. 172, that the whole of this diary is privileged and that the Magistrate was right to refuse to order the copies asked for to be given. In reply the petitioner's counsel argues that the record of statements of witnesses examined under S. 161 are not part of the diary but separate records to which no protection is given by S. 172, and that records of statements written by a police officer can be used in the same way as memoranda of statements made by any other person so long as they do not come within the scope of S. 162.

So far as statements not reduced to writing are concerned, I see no reason why statements made to a police officer in the course of an investigation should not, if relevant under the Evidence Act, be used at a trial for an offence not under investigation when they were made, provided that they are not held privileged by the provisions of Ss. 123 and 124, Evidence Act.

The question whether a recorded statement written by a police officer in the course of an investigation can be used to confront the maker of the statement when he is giving evidence in a case which was not under investigation when he made the statement does not appear to have been raised before in this Court. The judgment in 1933 Lah 498 (2) cited by Counsel for the Crown does not express distinctly any decision on this point, although it makes it clear that S. 172 precludes a Court from giving an accused access to police diaries of the investigation into the particular offence for which he is being tried or into a connected offence. In 17 P R 1894 (3) it was held by Plowden and Roe, JJ., that the diary was the proper place for putting on departmental record memoranda of such statements made by person examined by a police officer as he considers of sufficient importance to be reduced to writing, and that when such statements are included in the diary, they form an integral part of it. In the same judgment, however, Plowden J., remarked that it does not necessarily follow from the qualified protection of the diaries and memoranda against inspection by an accused in a judicial proceeding which is the result and continuation of the police investigation that the diaries or memoranda are privileged against production in any subsequent or collateral proceedings in which they are capable of being used as relevant evidence or to refresh the memory. I understand the law on the matter to be this: S. 172 of the Code does not forbid a recorded statement to be used at a trial for an offence not under investigation when it was made.

1. Kovuro Subayya v. Pata Verraya, 1933 Mad 65=1933 Cr C 81=141 I C 276 = 34 Cr L J 137=56 Mad 154=63 M L J 794.

3. Kallu v. Empress, (1894) 17 P R 1894.

There is, however, no doubt in my mind that the record of a statement heard by a police officer in exercise of the power conferred by S. 161 of the Procedure Code and recorded either in the diary or separately in the course of investigation proceedings is an unpublished official record relating to an affair of State evidence derived from which cannot be produced in a case to which the first proviso to S. 162 is not applicable except with the permission of the officer at the head of the Police Department (S. 123, Evidence Act). By itself the record of the statement will prove nothing. As pointed out by Knox, J., in 16 All 207 (4) it cannot in any sense be termed a deposition and it is not evidence. It is not a public document a copy of which must be given on demand under the provision of S. 76, Evidence Act. But the fact or allegation that the statement has been reduced to writing will not preclude evidence of its having been made (subject, of course, to the provisions of the Evidence Act), for S. 91, Evidence Act, does not apply. To prove that the statement was made, it would be necessary to call the police officer who heard it. If the accused has succeeded in having the original record of the statement produced, notwithstanding objections raised under S. 123, 124 or 125, Evidence Act, and the police officer has referred to it to refresh his memory under S. 159, the provision of S. 145 of that Act will apply. The District Magistrate was not bound to give copies of the statements. There is, therefore, no reason for this Court to interfere.

Judgment.—In this case a suit was instituted by the residents of Baradari Nawab Wazir, Delhi, for a declaration that the defendant was not the lawful Mutawalli of the mosque situated in their Mohalla, and for his removal and the appointment of a new Mutawalli and for rendition of accounts. The defendant resisted it on various grounds. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the defendant had not been proved to be guilty of the mismanagement alleged against him and that no case for his removal was therefore made out. He dismissed the suit in toto. On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the conclusions arrived at by the Court below, but, in the interest of the trust itself, settled a scheme appointing a committee of five persons, including the Mutawalli himself as its president, to manage the trust in future. Of the remaining four, two were to be nominated by the Mutawalli, and two were to be elected by the residents of the Mohalla by majority of votes. This committee was charged with collecting subscriptions, keeping accounts, appointing the Imam, starting an elementary school, supervising the furniture of the mosque and regulating the hours when the mosque should remain open. The defendant appealed, but in the meantime he has died and is now represented by his son. The respondents, however, have no objection to his continuance as Mutawalli in place of his father. One of the original plaintiffs has also died, but as the suit had been brought in a representative capacity, we are of opinion that the three surviving plaintiffs are competent to prosecute the appeal.

The only point that has been urged before us is that as no sanction had been given by the Collector under S. 92, Civil P. C., for settling a scheme the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to grant a relief on that basis. We are not, however, inclined to agree that, in the circumstances of this case, in the absence of express sanction by the Collector, this relief could not be granted. Under R. 33, O. 41, Civil P. C., an appellate Court has no power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require. We are satisfied therefore that in settling a scheme the learned District Judge did not exercise his jurisdiction in a manner which was not warranted by law or would justify our interference at this stage. It is amply proved that for want of funds the mosque is not being properly run. This may not amount to mismanagement of the Mutawalli, as he is not to blame if funds are not forthcoming, but it is obvious that, unless the Mutawalli secures the co-operation and goodwill of the residents of the Mohalla, he cannot be expected to be in possession of funds that will be required to look after the mosque in a proper manner. We think therefore that a committee consisting of the representatives of the Mohalladars as well as the nominees of the Mutawalli, would be in a better position to collect the necessary funds than the Mutawalli, himself who has lost favour with some of the worshippers who visit the mosque.

We however consider that the scheme, as propounded by the learned District Judge, is open to objection on one minor point. The system of election of the two representatives of the Mohalladars introduced in the scheme will not be so workable as at first sight it appears to be. All the three respondents are present before us and have agreed to the modification proposed by us of this part of the scheme which we consider will be more practicable. We, therefore, modify the scheme settled by the learned District Judge to this extent: that instead of the two representatives of the Mohalladars being elected in the manner suggested by him, they will, in future, be nominated by the Muslim Municipal Commissioner who at the time represents the Ward in which Baradari Nawab Wazir, Delhi, is situated. As we have not interfered with the scheme in any other manner, and this modification is acceptable to the defendants, we dismiss this appeal, but direct that the modification be incorporated in the decree. Parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Dalip Singh, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Mt. Koshalia and Mt. Shakuntla, the mother and widow of Jagat Ram, deceased, who was killed in a motor accident by a car belonging to Mr. Muin-ud-Din, I.C.S., son of Mr. Riaz-ud-Din, Superintendent of Police, and driven by Muhammad Bashir, defendant 2, the chauffeur of Mr. Muin-ud-Din. The suit was under the Fatal Accidents Act and the amount of damages claimed was Rs. 10,000. The trial Court held that there had been negligence on the part of the chauffeur Muhammad Bashir, defendant 2, and that Mr. Riaz-ud-Din, who was his temporary master, was also liable for the tortious act of the chauffeur. Accordingly after considering the evidence the trial Court held that Jagat Ram, deceased, was earning about Rs. 20 a month at the time and out of this sum of Rs. 20 was likely to give or was actually giving about Rs. 10 per month to his mother and widow, the claimants. Allowing Rs. 4 as the maintenance amount for the mother and Rs. 6 as the maintenance for the widow and taking the "normal age" as 50 he held that the mother was entitled to Rs. 576 and the widow to Rs. 1,944. Looking to the fact that the sum was to be paid in one amount and not by monthly instalments he allowed Rs. 500 to Mt. Koshalia, the mother, and Rs. 1,500 to the widow, Mt. Shakuntla. The total amount came to Rs. 2,000 and a decree for this amount and proportionate costs exclusive of Court-fee, was passed in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants. Out of this amount Mt. Koshalia was held entitled to recover Rs. 500 and one-fourth proportionate costs and Mt. Shakuntla to recover Rs. 1,500 and three-fourths proportionate costs. The suit was brought in forma pauperis, and the learned Judge directed that the amount of Court-fee, Rs. 712-8-0 would be paid by the parties as follows:

The plaintiffs have come in appeal claiming that the sum allowed is too small and that a sum of Rs. 5,000 should have been allowed to them by way of damages. The defendants did not appeal but cross-objections were filed under O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., on behalf of Mr. Riaz-ud-Din. In the cross-objections it was objected that the finding of the learned Judge, that the accident was due to the negligence of the chauffeur, was not correct, that the death was due to the negligence of the deceased himself and that the amount of damages awarded by the lower Court was excessive and the prospects of Mt. Shakuntla's re-marriage had not been considered by the Court in assessing it. As the "cross-objections" went to the root of the case, whereas the appeal only affected the quantum of damages, we decided to hear the "cross-objections" first. A preliminary objection was raised by the learned counsel for the appellants that the "cross-objections" were not cross-objections in law, because they had been filed before notice of the date of hearing of the appeal was sent to the parties. The fact appears to be correct, and from the record it seems that notice of the hearing of the appeal was not sent to the respondents until some time in February 1935. The "cross-objections" were filed on 23rd February 1934. The appeal was filed on 13th November 1933 and was admitted to a Division Bench on 8th December 1933. It appears that the respondents took the notice for printing of the paper-book as notice of the hearing of the appeal. The result is somewhat curious, but there can be no doubt on the law. O. 41, R. 22 lays down that a respondent may cross-object provided he does so "within one month from the date when he receives notice of the hearing of the appeal." The use of the word "within" would fix two limits; an anterior limit starting from the date of receipt of the notice and a posterior limit of one month after that date. The "cross-objections" filed before that date would not be cross-objections at all in the strict legal sense of the word. If for instance the appeal had been withdrawn after being admitted to a Division Bench in December 1933, before February 1935, the mere fact that the cross-objections had been filed on 23rd February 1934 would not entitle the respondents to have the "cross-objections" heard.

This was conceded by the learned counsel for the respondents, and it appears to me to be incontestable. Mr. Riaz-ud-din died on or about 15th March 1934 and his legal representatives never applied that the "cross-objections" already filed should be treated as their cross-objections, nor did they file any fresh cross-objections. The difficulty, therefore, arises that the "cross-objections" actually filed, are cross-objections by Mr. Riaz-ud-din, which were filed before the date when the right to put in cross-objections had accrued. Mr. Riaz-ud-din has since died. It is impossible to attach these "cross-objections" to him as he died before the issue of the notice of the date of hearing of the appeal; nor is it possible on this record to attach these "cross-objections" to his legal representatives or to extend the time under O. 41, R. 22, because after looking at the record there is no power-of-attorney or vakalatnama in favour of the learned counsel appearing for the respondents, nor on behalf of the counsel who filed the cross-objections on behalf of the legal representatives of the deceased. It is, therefore, impossible to attach these "cross-objections" to the legal representatives, for the counsel appearing has no power to act on their behalf; and to treat these cross-objections as being now filed on behalf of the respondents would be to allow the counsel to act on behalf of the legal representatives. The preliminary objection, therefore, must, in my opinion, prevail and the "cross-objections" must be dismissed with costs.

Turning now to the appeal of the plaintiffs-appellants the learned counsel has addressed us at length, pointing out that there is nothing to show that Jagat Ram was not earning Rs. 20 per mensem exclusive of his own board and lodging, that the accounts which have been put in in support of this statement by his employer Jagan Nath have wrongly been rejected by the trial Court and that Mt. Koshalia's evidence proves that Jagat Ram used to give her the whole of this Rs. 20 per mensem which he had been earning for some time previously after he gave up reading in school and became a full time worker in the shop of Jagan Nath. I must say I am unable to see why the trial Court seems to consider these accounts unreliable. It is true that the employer does not keep a roznamcha but he keeps a rokar or daily cashbook and it was not unusual to find a small shop-keeper keeping nothing more than a daily cashbook and a khata bahi. However the real point that arises in this case is a very short one, and it is unnecessary to go at length into the evidence on the record. Even on the learned Judge's own finding, Rs. 10 was a fair amount to take as the contribution of Jagat Ram towards the maintenance of the plaintiffs. It may also be taken that the trial Court was right in dividing this sum in the proportion of Rs. 4 to the mother Mt. Koshalia and Rs. 6 to the widow Mt. Shakuntla. There is no evidence on the record to show why the learned Judge fixed the normal age of the parties at 50 years. From the actuarial tables of the Oriental Life Assurance Co. Ltd. it would appear that the "expectation of life" at the age of 20 is 36.8 and the "expectation of life" at the age of 39, which is the age of Mt. Koshalia, is 23. The normal "expectation of life" of Jagat Ram at the age of 23 would have been 34.6. It seems to me, therefore, that proceeding on the lines of the learned trial Judge, but taking the actuarial tables as furnishing a more correct basis for the normal "expectation of life" than the rough figure of 50 years taken by him, the amount due to Mt. Koshalia at the rate of Rs. 4 per mensem for 23 years would come to Rs. 1,104 and the amount due to Mt. Shakuntla at Rs. 6 per mensem for 35 years as being the "expectation of life" for Jagat Ram would come to Rs. 2,520; adding the two amounts the total would come to Rupees 3,624. Taking into consideration the somewhat slender chance of re-marriage possessed by Mt. Shakuntla, to my mind a remote contingency having regard to the fact that the Suds as a rule, as is wellknown, do not favour widow re-marriage, and also taking into account that the amount is being paid in a lump-sum and not by monthly instalments, I consider that a sum of Rs. 3,000 would be a fair amount to allow. This sum of Rs. 3,000 would be divided between the plaintiffs, Rs. 1,000 to the mother Mt. Koshalia and Rs. 2,000 to the widow Mt. Shakuntla. Both the plaintiffs would be entitled to proportionate costs on this amount in both Courts from the estate of Mr. Riaz-ud-din and from the person and estate of Mohammad Bashir, defendant 2. In the trial Court the Court-fee, which amounted to Rs. 712-8-0 would be paid as follows:

Rs. 262-8-0, the Court-fee on Rs. 3,000 decreed, payable by defendants.

Rs. 150 payable by Mt. Koshalia.

Rs. 300 payable by Mt. Shakuntla.

The appeal is not a pauper appeal and so no trouble arises about the distribution of Court-fee therein. The appellants will get proportionate costs on Rs. 1,000, by which sum the amount decreed by the trial Court has been enhanced in appeal. If any of the sums decreed by the trial Court have already been realized by the Crown, proportionate amounts by way of adjustment will of course be taken or returned according as may be necessary to arrive at the result given above. The full amount spent by the plaintiffs in having the paper-book printed shall be recovered from the defendants-respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1214 of 1935, Decided on 13th December 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 22nd March 1935.

Administration Suit—Court can direct one of parties to hand over assets belonging to estate in possession of such party—Disputed debt is not asset—Meaning of word "asset."

No doubt a Court in pursuance of a decree in the administration suit is competent to direct one of the parties to the suit to restore or hand over to the administrator or the receiver assets belonging to the estate in possession of such party, but a debt, specially a debt which is disputed, is not governed by this rule, because the expression "asset" as used above means property which has come in the hands of the representatives of the deceased as such either actually or by implication and a disputed debt cannot be deemed to be an asset which has come in the hands of any person representing the estate: 1932 Lah 328, Ref.; 1921 Bom 187, Explained. [P 365 C 2]

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Nawal Kishore—for Appellants.

Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Mt. Rahmat Sultan died on 6th April 1924 and an administration suit was instituted in respect of her estate on 3rd April 1930. Mohammad Din, her husband, was impleaded as a defendant in that suit. A preliminary decree was passed and a receiver was appointed to take charge of the estate. It appears that Mt. Rahmat Sultan was living separately from her husband Mohammad Din owing to strained relations. Mohammad Din has died and is now represented by the respondents. The appellants are four of the heirs of Mt. Rahmat Sultan. The dispute on this appeal is about two items. It has been found by the learned District Judge that deferred dower was due to Mt. Rahmat Sultan from Mohammad Din at the time of her death. He has not mentioned the amount but the trial Court held, and this is not contested before me, that it was Rs. 700. The learned District Judge has held that in an administration suit it is not open to the Court to direct a debtor to pay the debt due to the estate to the administrator or to the receiver. But the learned counsel for the appellants contends that this view of the learned District Judge is erroneous and he cites 45 Bom 1053 (1) and 1932 Lah 328 (2). Both these cases however do not in my opinion support him in the proposition that he has propounded. It has been held in the Bombay case that a Court in pursuance of a decree in the administration suit is competent to direct one of the parties to the suit to restore or hand over to the administrator or the receiver assets belonging to the estate in possession of such party.

I do not think that a debt, specially a debt which is disputed is governed by this rule. The expression 'asset' as used in the Bombay case in my opinion means property which has come in the hands of the representatives of the deceased as such either actually or by implication and a disputed debt cannot be deemed to be an asset which has come in the hands of any person representing the estate. The second question relates to a house the title to which, it has been found, is in the name of Mohammad Din but it is claimed on behalf of the appellants, and this claim seems to be well founded, that the house was purchased by Mohammad Din with the money of Mt. Rahmat Sultan. This claim is based specially on the fact that when there was a dispute as to the partition of the joint property between Mohammad Din and his father and the matter was referred to arbitration Mohammad Din claimed that the house could not be partitioned as it belonged to his wife and it was on account of this claim that the house was excluded from partition. It is true that the learned District Judge has not given a definite finding that the house has been established to belong to Mt. Rahmat Sultan, but that seems to be his conclusion and in any case I am of opinion that it has been established that the house belonged to Mt. Rahmat Sultan.

The view of the learned District Judge that the house could not be restored to the estate under the circumstances except on a suit to be brought for that purpose does not appear to be correct. The authorities cited above support the contention of the appellants that in a case like the present the party in possession of the assets of the deceased can be directed to hand the same over to the administrator or the receiver. It is however, claimed by the respondents that Mohammad Din after the purchase of the house effected improvements to the same out of his own money and that before the house is handed over to the receiver they should be reimbursed in respect of the cost of such improvements. The appellants deny that there were any improvements effected, but there has been no enquiry on this question in the Courts below. The reason is that it was not claimed by Mohammad Din that he had effected any improvements and the claim for the first time has been put forward by his legal representatives who on his death were impleaded in this Court. Under these circumstances, I do not think it is open to them to claim any compensation for any alleged improvements to the house. Accordingly I accept this appeal to this extent, that I direct that the house in dispute be handed over by the legal representatives of Mohammad Din to the receiver to be administered as part of the estate of Mt. Rahmat Sultan. The appeal is otherwise dismissed. As both parties have succeeded partially in this Court I leave them to bear their own costs, Second Appeal No. 1375 of 1935, Decided on 13th December 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, D/- 25th April 1935.

2. Praphull Dev v. Sham Lal, 1932 Lah 328=138 I O 335.

Part Performance — Sale-deed of a house not registered—Purchaser put in possession—Document could be admitted in evidence for collateral purposes—T. P. Act not applicable to Punjab—Doctrine of part performance is applicable to Punjab.

Though the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab, yet the doctrine of part performance has been held to be applicable in this province: 1934 Lah 751, Foll. [P 366 C 2]

Where a document purporting to be a sale-deed of a house which should have been registered but is not registered, such document, if the person is put in possession of the property, can be admitted into evidence for a collateral purpose under the provisions of S. 53-A, T. P. Act. [P 366 C 2]

Arjan Dev Bagai—for Appellant.

C. L. Gulati—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Mt. Jiwan sued in this case for possession of 27/36th share of a certain house by partition. Allah Bakhsh, defendant 1, pleaded that he was in possession of the eastern half of the house by virtue of a sale made by Ali, to whom the house originally belonged. He alleged further that the western half was not in his possession but had been sold to one Palia. The plaintiff, however, persisted in the allegation that Allah Bakhsh was in possession of the whole house and the suit was proceeded with on that basis. The learned Judge of the trial Court held that the sale deed on which Allah Bakhsh, relied was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration as the property was worth more than Rs. 100. The plaintiff was, therefore, granted a preliminary decree for possession by partition as prayed for. This decision was confirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge. From this decision a second appeal has been preferred by Allah Bakhsh.

It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the Courts below have erred in holding that the sale-deed, dated 15th January 1926, on which appellant relied, was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. It was contended that the principle of part performance, laid down in S. 53-A, T. P. Act, was applicable inasmuch as the appellant had been put in possession of the house in pursuance of the contract. Reliance was placed in support of this argument also on the proviso to S. 49, Registration Act, which was added in the year 1929. The Transfer of Property Act is not in force in this province but the doctrine of part performance has been held to be applicable in this province: see 1934 Lah 751 (1), which follows the Privy Council ruling reported as 42 Cal 801 (2). The learned counsel for the respondents was unable to give any reason why the doctrine of part performance should not be held to be applicable to the circumstances of the case. He merely pointed out that before the learned District Judge the learned counsel for the appellant had only urged that the document was admissible for a collateral purpose. The judgment of the learned District Judge is, however, very brief and I am not prepared to hold that the point now raised was not raised before the learned District Judge. In fact it appears from the judgment of the learned trial Judge that the point had been raised even in the trial Court. I accept the appeal and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below, remand the case to the trial Court for receiving the sale deed relied upon by the appellant in evidence and decision on merits. Costs will follow final decision.

1. Kaura Rama v. Chamanlal, 1934 Lah 751=154 I C 1088.

2. Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar, 1914 P C 27=28 I C 930=42 I A 1=42 Cal 801 (P C).

Judgment—The pedigree table of the parties may be briefly stated:

DHANI NATH

There was a firm styled Dhani Nath-Raja Ram against whom a decree was obtained by another firm styled Hira Lal-Narain Das. In execution of the decree a shop was attached but an objection was raised by Dharm Chand, plaintiff, that it was his sole property by virtue of a will made by his grandfather Raja Ram. The objection having been dismissed he instituted the present suit to establish his title. One of the main issues in the case was whether the will on which the plaintiff based his title was genuine and duly proved. According to S. 63, Succession Act, 1925, this will was required to be attested by two witnesses. The contention on behalf of the defendants was that the necessary attestation was not proved. The learned District Judge has held that it was proved by the evidence of Nand Lal and Lekh Raj. The will was also held to be genuine in view of other facts and the plaintiff's suit was decreed by the learned District Judge. It is from this decision that the present appeal has been preferred.

The sole point argued before me was whether the attestation of the will had been proved in accordance with law. It was contended that the witnesses Nand Lal and Lekh Raj had signed the will only in token of their consent to the disposition of property made thereby and that in the circumstances they could not be considered to be attesting witnesses within the meaning of S. 63, Succession Act. In support of this contention reliance was placed on a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as 1927 P C 248 (1). A somewhat similar question arose in that case and it was held that the signatures of the sons to a will made by the father were in token of their consent and that they were not attesting witnesses. There were, however, other attesting witnesses in the case and the contention of the sons that they were only attesting witnesses was not accepted in view of all the circumstances. I do not think this ruling lays down that persons who have signed a document in token of their consent cannot be held to be attesting witnesses even if all the conditions laid down in S. 63, Succession Act, are otherwise fulfilled. It is not disputed that these conditions were fulfilled in the present case and the mere fact that the witnesses signed the document in token of their consent cannot, in my opinion, prevent their being looked upon as attesting witnesses also. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court in 62 I C 97 (2), following two previous decisions of the same Court, that a scribe may be held to be an attesting witness if the conditions as regards attestation are otherwise satisfied. In 1934 Cal 772 (3), it was held that if the conditions for a valid attestation under the Transfer of Property Act, are fulfilled, there is nothing in law to prevent a Sub-Registrar from being treated as an attesting witness even though the signature of the Sub-Registrar might have been made merely to satisfy the requirements of the Registration Act. The present case appears to me to stand on a similar footing. In my opinion the decision of the learned District Judge is correct. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

1. Shiram Sunder Singh v. Jagannath Singh, 1927 P C 248=106 I C 534 (P C).
2. Jagannath Khan v. Bajrang Das, 1921 Cal 208. 62 I C 97=48 Cal 61.

An oral request was made for a certificate to file an appeal under the Letters Patent. I grant the necessary certificate.

Insolvency — Judgment-debtor declared insolvent during execution—Insolvent has no locus standi to appeal from order confirming sale.

A person who has been declared insolvent during execution proceedings has no locus standi to appeal under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. from an order confirming a sale: 1921 Mad 402 and 1933 Mad 694, Dissent. [P 368 C 1, 2]

Shamair Chand and Shuja-ud-Din — for Appellants.

Achhru Ram and Inder Dev—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order confirming a sale in execution proceedings. A preliminary objection is raised that the appellants, who were declared insolvents during the sale proceedings, have no locus standi to appeal. In support of this contention reliance was placed on 1928 Lah 675 (1) and 35

I C 530 (2). The learned counsel for the appellants, on the other hand relied on 1921 Mad 402 (3) and 1933 Mad 694 (4) in which a contrary view was taken. These rulings apparently proceed on the ground that although the property of the insolvent is vested in the Official Receiver, he still has a contingent interest in the sale, e.g., in the event of a surplus being available out of his assets, after the debts are satisfied. This view seems to be opposed to the principle followed in a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court, reported in 49 Mad 461 (5). That was a case under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and the question for consideration was whether an insolvent was an 'aggrieved' person within the meaning of S. 8 of the Act, so as to entitle him to appeal. Although the word 'aggrieved' is not used in O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., the words 'whose interests are affected by the sale,' are practically of the same import. In the Full Bench Madras case, certain English authorities were cited and it was observed:

The insolvent has no legal interest but has merely a hope or expectation, and as James, L.J. pointed out, the mischief of allowing a bankrupt, on the contingent chance of ultimately acquiring title to some surplus which might never be realized to interfere with and embarrass the administration of the estate, would be immeasurable.

With all respect to the learned Judges who have taken the contrary view, I must say that I see no good reason why this principle should not apply to a sale under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. In the end it may be noted that during the sale proceedings the Official Receiver had apparently taken charge of the case and it was he who produced the evidence. He has, however, apparently not thought it fit to appeal. To allow the insolvent to appeal in such circumstances would be clearly anomalous. I uphold the preliminary objection and dismiss the appeal, but leave the parties to bear their costs in this appeal.

N. C. Pandit, Shamair Chand and Prem Nath Bhardwaj—for Appellants.

D. C. Ralli—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants Shiv Dial Bakhtawar Mal Lal were parties to a suit which was instituted in the Bombay High Court in exercise of its original jurisdiction. They engaged Messrs. Kanga and Co., Solicitors of Bombay, as their solicitors in that suit. After the termination of the original suit in the Bombay High Court the solicitors made an application for their costs against their clients Shiv Dial Bakhtawar Mal being taxed and for an order of payment thereof. A learned Judge of the Court, after hearing both the parties, passed an order determining the amount due by the appellants to the respondents and made an order against the appellants for payment of the sum allowed by him on taxation. The solicitors obtained a certificate of transfer under Ss. 39 and 40, Civil P. C., addressed to the District Judge of Hissar where apparently the appellants reside and have property. This certificate of non-satisfaction was sent by the District Judge to the Senior Subordinate Judge of Gurgaon. An objection was raised before the Senior Subordinate Judge that the order in question could not be executed as if it were a decree against the appellants. Two grounds for objection were stated in support of this contention: one was that the order of payment made by the Bombay High Court was ultra vires and that the order transmitting the decree for execution to the District Judge of Hissar had not been signed by a competent official. The Senior Subordinate Judge has decided both these objections against the appellants and has directed that the execution of the order should proceed as if it were a decree and consequently this appeal has been presented in this Court. The order transferring the decree to the District Judge of Hissar for execution was signed by the Registrar of the Bombay High Court. The contention of the appellants seems to be that it should have been signed by the learned Judge who passed it. As this objection has not been repeated before me, it is not necessary for me to decide it, but it is obvious that the objection has no force. The objection pressed before the Senior Subordinate Judge and repeated before me is that there is no jurisdiction in the Bombay High Court on a mere application by the solicitor to tax his costs against his client and to make an order for their payment by the latter to the former. But R. 874 of the rules framed by the Bombay High Court is quite clear on the subject. It provides that :

An attorney, when he has taxed his bill of costs against his client, may apply in Chambers on summons for an order against his client or the legal representatives of such client for payment of the sum allowed on taxation or such sum as may then remain due. The Judge on hearing the summons may make such order or refer the parties to a suit. Such order may be executed under O. 21, Civil P. C., as a decree for money.

If this rule has been validly framed by the Bombay High Court, then it is obvious that two results follow on an application being made by the attorney: the Judge either investigates the claim of the attorney and determines the amount that is payable by the client or, if the Judge is of opinion that for some reason he should not enter into an enquiry into the merits of the application, he may refer the attorney to a civil suit: that is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Judge. In the present case the learned Judge chose to follow the first alternative, that is to say to determine the amount due to the attorney and on such determination passed a payment order. The second result is that when a payment order is passed it has the force of a decree and can be executed as a decree. The learned counsel for the appellants, however, contends that no decree can be passed except in consequence of a suit, but this is an order which has the force of a decree and no decree has been passed. Moreover there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code that no order which is capable of being executed as a decree can be passed except in a suit or on a suit instituted praying for such an order. The order in question was passed by the Bombay High Court in exercise of its original jurisdiction and S. 129, Civil P. C., expressly authorises that Court to make rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction. It has not been shown by the appellants' counsel that there is anything in the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court which is inconsistent with the rule in question. The rule, therefore, has not been shown to be ultra vires. The order could be executed as if it were a decree; it was, therefore, open to the Bombay High Court either to execute it itself or to send it to another Court for execution under Ss. 39 and 40, Civil P. C., and this is the procedure that has been followed in the present case. In my opinion there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 101 of 1935, Decided on 21st November 1935, from order of Backet, J., D/- 6th June 1935.

Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 57—Occupancy rights under S. 6 or S. 8—Usufructuary mortgage of such rights—Mortgage rights cannot be attached and sold in execution.

Where occupancy rights falling under S. 6 or S. 8 are mortgaged usufructually, the rights of the mortgagee in the occupancy tenancy are not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree. [P 371 C 1]

Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din—for Appellants.

R. L. Anand I — for Respondent (Decree-holder).

Addison, J.—Narain Das in execution of his decree, attached certain mortgage rights in an occupancy tenancy. The appellants in this Letters Patent appeal objected to this attachment on various grounds; one of these was embodied in issue 5, "can the occupancy rights in certain field numbers which were mortgaged with Ladha Khan be attached and sold in this decree? Under what section of the Tenancy Act do these rights fall?" The finding was that the occupancy rights fell within S. 6 or S. 8, Tenancy Act, and that the mortgage of them was therefore exempt from attachment and sale in execution of a decree. The decree-holder appealed and in para. 3 of the grounds of appeal urged that, although under S. 56, Tenancy Act occupancy rights under Ss. 6 and 8 were exempt, this exemption did not extend to the rights of the mortgagee in the occupancy rights. The position was thus accepted, that the occupancy rights themselves fell within S. 6 or S. 8, Punjab Tenancy Act. The lower appellate Court held that, although the occupancy rights themselves were exempt as they fell either within S. 6 or S. 8, this exemption did not extend to the mortgage rights in those occupancy rights. There was a second appeal by the judgment-debtors to this Court, which was heard by a Single Judge. It was pointed out that S. 57, Punjab Tenancy Act, had been overlooked by the lower appellate Court. It is to the effect that :

When a right of occupancy has been transferred by sale, gift or usufructuary mortgage to a person other than the landlord that person shall, in respect of the land in which the right subsists, have the same rights and be subject to the same liabilities, as the tenant to whom before the transfer the right belonged had and was subject to.

The appeal was therefore remanded for a finding as to whether Ladha or Abdula held a usufructuary mortgage of the occupancy tenancy, as if that was so. S. 57 provided the same exemption to such a mortgagee as S. 56 gave to the occupancy tenant. After the remand the appeal came before another Judge who held that the mortgages were usufructuary, but went on to observe that there was nothing, so far as he could see, to show that the occupancy rights had not been originally acquired under S. 5 of the Act. On this ground therefore he dismissed the appeal of the judgment-debtors, who have preferred this Letters Patent appeal. From what has already been said, it is clear that the executing Court held that the occupancy rights fell within S. 6 or S. 8 and there was no ground of appeal taken to the lower appellate Court by the decree-holder against that finding. The lower appellate Court endorsed that finding, but held that, although the occupancy rights themselves would have been exempt from attachment, yet the rights of the mortgagees were not exempt. On the finding therefore that the mortgages are usufructuary the appeal should have been accepted by reason of the provisions of S. 57, Punjab Tenancy Act. We accordingly accept the appeal with costs throughout, set aside the decision of the Single Judge of this Court and the lower appellate Court and restore the finding of the executing Court as regards the mortgage rights in the occupancy tenancy in question, to the effect that they are not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree.

Currie, J.—The sole point arising for decision in the present second appeal is whether among Chima Jats of Gojra, Tahsil Daska, District Sialkot, the adoption of a daughter's son in the presence of collaterals of the third degree is valid. By a registered deed dated 19th May, 1927 Makhan Singh adopted his daughter's son, Gurmukh Singh. On 12th May 1933 the collaterals of the third degree instituted a suit for a declaration to the effect that the adoption was not valid. The trial Court decreed the suit, but on appeal the learned Additional District Judge reversed his decision. He however granted a certificate for second appeal on the point of custom. In reaching his decision the learned Additional District Judge expressed the opinion that there is nothing in the entries of the riwaj-i-ams which would go to show that the adoption of a daughter's son by Chima Jats of the Daska tahsil is not sanctioned by custom. He further held that the evidence on the record was sufficient to establish that the adoption of a daughter's son was valid even in the presence of collaterals. Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, in opening the case for the appellants, referred to the important Full Bench ruling 50 P R 1893 (1), in which Sir Meredyth Plowden examined the whole position regarding adoption in this Province. The learned Senior Judge remarked, at p. 233 :

I think therefore that we are fully warranted in holding generally—creed, tribe and locality apart—that when a sonless man in any land holding group which recognises a power to adopt, asserts that he is competent to adopt a daughter's son or other non-agnate in presence of near agnates, irrespective of their assent, the presumption at the outset is against the power; and in the absence of any admission in the pleadings in a particular case, which may qualify the presumption, the form of the issue should be such as to throw the burden of proof on the person asserting the existence of the unqualified power.

He further pointed out that except in endogamous tribes there is a general prejudice against the adoption of a daughter's son. This ruling dealt with the question of onus in such cases on a wide provincial basis and was not confined to the Jullundur District as the learned Additional District Judge seems to have imagined. The ruling may have lost some of its force in view of the subsequent decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, laying down the principle that the riwaj-i-am is entitled to great weight as evidence of custom and that the onus lay on the party who seeks to set up a custom contrary to that stated in the riwaj-i-am. Nevertheless it is still a very valuable and lucid exposition of the general position as regards the custom of adoption in the Province. As regards Sialkot District, there are three different riwaj-i-ams prepared in 1865, 1895 and 1916. No copy of the first has been placed on the file, but its provisions on this subject are quoted as follows in 50 P R 1893 (1) at p. 229 :

In Sialkot, according to the Riway-i-am (which has been digested by Munshi Amin Chand, and a translation of the Digest made by Mr. Roe), some gots and tribes allow daughter's and sister's sons to be adopted, but many do not; and in all a brother's son has at least a prior claim, whether or not it amounts to a right.

In the two subsequent riway-i-ams there was no difference in the language of Question 71 which ran as follows :

Is there any rule by which it is required that the person adopted should be related to the person adopting? If so, what relatives may be adopted? Is any preference required to be shown to particular relatives? If so, enumerate them in order of preference. Is it necessary that the adopted son and his adoptive father should be (1) of the same caste or tribe, (2) of the same got.

In 1895 the answer was :

Varying answers were given by the different tribes, but they all agree that an adoption must be within the clan from the near collaterals. Failing them in the third degree, a daughter's son can be adopted, and in his absence one of the agnates up to the third degree in the descending line. All tribes of the Daska tahsil, say that in default of collaterals a daughter's son can also be adopted without any regard being had to the clan.

In 1916 the answer ran :

An agnate or a daughter's son or daughter's grandson or sister's son or sister's grandson may be adopted but near agnates have preferential claim as compared with the descendants of daughters or sisters. A great many Jats and Rajputs deny that a sister's or daughter's son can be adopted in the presence of any collaterals. Among Arains, Awans and Kakkezais a daughter's son can be adopted even in the presence of a brother's son. The adopted son need not necessarily be of the same tribe or got.

From these answers, especially the portions in italics it is clear that according to the riway-i-am collaterals of the third degree are preferred to a daughter's son. Thus the onus should have been placed on the daughter's son to prove that by custom his adoption was valid. Actually the trial Court placed the onus of the issue on the plaintiffs, though in the course of his judgment the learned Sub-Judge apparently shifted the onus as he remarked that :

The evidence adduced by the defendant is not sufficient to establish a custom by which adoption of a daughter's son is recognised among Chima Jats of Gojra.

The learned Additional District Judge rightly remarked :

Both parties led their evidence on the point and there is sufficient material on the record to warrant the decision of the point involved without prejudice to the parties.

To turn now to the evidence on the record, Mr. Mahajan has placed no reliance on the oral evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiffs. He pointed out, and I think correctly, that the instances cited in the 1916 riway-i-am show considerable diversity and argued that it would be unsafe to rely on the instances from other tahsils except where they related to Chima Jats. Fifteen instances were cited in the riway-i-am from the Daska Tahsil. No 1 was a case reported in 69 P R 1907 (2), in which it was held that among Sekhu Jats of the Daska tahsil no such custom had been established. The adoption of a daughter's son was set aside in No. 3, (Dhariwal Jats of Sambarilal), and No. 7 (Jats of Mauza Bhopalwala). On the other hand such an adoption was upheld in Nos. 5 (Bhalola Jats), 6 (Jats of Ghazipur), 11 (Jats of Dhuleke) and 14 (Jat Sahi of Daska). The other instances are not strictly relevant. To turn now to the instances cited in the present case; Ex. P-3 is a decision of the Sub-Judge, dated 1st June 1904 in which a Chima Jat of village Amaotra, Tahsil Daska, adopted his daughter's son, a Virk, and the adoption was set aside. Ex. P-4 is a decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 16th April 1906, relating to parties of the same village in which the adoption of a daughter's son was set aside. In that case counsel admitted that he was unable to argue that among Chima Jats the adoption of a daughter's son was valid in the presence of near collaterals. Ex. P-5 is a decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 25th January 1894, relating to this very village. This was the decision in appeal from Ex. D-9, a decision of the District Judge (old style), dated 11th September 1893, the learned Additional District Judge being in error in stating that the decision given in Ex. P-5 was upset on appeal by the decision given in Ex. D-9. The position is exactly the reverse. The decision in Ex. D-9 was upset in appeal by the Divisional Judge in Ex. P-5 in which it was held that the instances cited were insufficient to prove that the adoption was valid. The oral evidence shows that the parties in this case were Chimas. The decision of the Divisional Judge was given after remand for further enquiry. The decision above cited, 69 P R 1907, (2) related to Sekha Jats and is only of importance in so far as it holds that the riwaj-i-am of 1865, in which the answer was to the effect that in the absence of sons a brother's son and in his absence a daughter or sister's son could be adopted, had been superseded by the riwaj-i-am of 1893, as in that, all tribes of the Daska tahsil stated that it is only in default of collaterals that a daughter's son can be adopted.

Of the instances in support of the custom, Ex. D-3 is a decision of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, dated 8th March 1880, a case among Chima Jats of this village which was decided in accordance with the custom as stated in the riwaj-i-am of 1865. In that case it was admitted by the plaintiff that if the adoption was established he had no claim. Ex. D-4 is the decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 25th January 1895. The parties were Muhammadan Chimas of village Bhopalwala and the person adopted was the sister's son who was married to the adoptive father's daughter and was a Khandamad. This instance is therefore of no value. Ex. D-5, a decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 28th May 1913, was a case of gift made for services rendered among Bajwa Jats, and is of no help. Ex. D-6, a decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 2nd May 1911, related to Walana Mahomedan Jats of village Walana in the Sialkot Tahsil. Ex. D-7, another decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 3rd April 1914, related to Mahomedan Jats of Tahsil Sialkot. Neither of these instances is therefore in point, as they come from other Tahsils, apart from the fact that the parties were Mahomedans. Ex. D-8, another decision of the Divisional Judge, dated 18th April 1913 dealt with Awans of a village in the Sialkot Tahsil and is entirely irrelevant.

For the respondents Mr. Shabir Ahmad, suggested that the answers given in the riwaj-i-am merely indicated that preference should be given to near collaterals and did not prohibit the adoption of the daughter's son in the presence of near collaterals. There is nothing however to support that view in any of the decisions which have been cited above. Considering the evidence as a whole, I think there can be no doubt that it has been established that among Chima Jats of village Gojra in the Daska tahsil, the adoption of a daughter's son in the presence of collaterals of the third degree is invalid. I would therefore accept the appeal with costs and restore the decree of the trial Court with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 944 of 1935, Decided on 6th January 1936, from decree of Dist. Judge, Sargodha, D/- 19th February 1935.

Custom (Punjab) — Succession—Nekokara Qureshis of Jhang District—Sister succeeding brother is succeeded by her sons and not by her husband—Self-acquired property of sister—Husband succeeds in absence of sons.

Amongst Nekokara Qureshis of Jhang District, where a sister succeeds her brother she is succeeded by her sons, but if there are no sons her husband does not succeed. If, however, the land in question is the self acquired property of the sister her husband would succeed in the absence of sons. [P 374 C 1]

Nand Lal and Bhagwat Dayal—for Appellant.

Achhru Ram—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—The sole question in this second appeal is whether the husband of Mt. Nur Bibi, deceased, who succeeded after the death of her mother to the land, the last male holder of which was her brother, is the heir to that land or whether the collaterals are. The parties are Nekokara Qureshis of Jhang district and follow custom. The latest riwaj-i-am of that district was prepared in 1929 and the relevant questions are Nos. 74, 76 and 79. According to question No. 76 when a woman dies holding property in her own right, her sons will first inherit it, but if there are no sons, then her husband succeeds and after him daughters. This question corresponded to question No. 26 in the former riwaj-i-am where it was clearly brought out what the meaning of 'holding property in her own right' was, namely, holding property which was her own self-acquisition. It seems clear that in the new question and answer No. 76 'holding property in her own right' means that. Further it is stated in answer to question No. 79 that sisters have the same rights as unmarried daughters till their marriage as laid down in the answer to question No. 39. It is added that in cases when inheritance devolves on sisters, sister's sons would succeed to their mothers' shares in the absence of their mothers, but the husband of a sister is not entitled to succeed in any case. It is obvious from a consideration of the answers to these two questions that where a sister succeeds her brother she is succeeded by her sons, but if there are no sons, as in the present case, her husband does not succeed. If, however, the land in question is the self-acquired property of the sister her husband would succeed in the absence of sons. In this case it was not her self-acquired property. The decision of the District Judge is therefore correct and we dismiss the appeal, but make no order as to costs in this Court.

Second Appeal No. 301 of 1935, Decided on 24th July 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 8th November 1934.

Arbitration—S. 89, Civil P. C., covers all references to arbitration—Words "by any other law for the time being in force" in S. 89 cannot cover O. 23, R. 3—Court superseding arbitration—Course left open is to proceed under Sch. 2, Para. 8.

Section 89, Civil P. C., covers all references to arbitration, whether the reference is or is not made without the intervention of the Court, and whether an award does or does not follow and it says that they shall be governed by the provisions of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. The words in S. 89, Civil P. C., "by any other law for the time being in force" must refer to some law extraneous to the Civil Procedure Code and cannot be legitimately held to cover O. 23, R. 3. Once S. 89, Civil P. C., is held to apply, no reliance can be placed for any purpose on O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. The only remedy left is either to proceed with the arbitration or if the Court has superseded the arbitration, to proceed with the hearing of the appeal on the merits as required by Para. 8 of Sch. 2, read with Para. 19: 1921 Lah 232, Foll. [P 375 C 1, 2]

Harnam Singh—for Appellant.Badri Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—On 23rd March 1931 Harbans Lal instituted a suit for rendition of accounts against Sita Ram and Thakur Singh. The trial Court treated it as a suit for rendition of accounts in a dissolved partnership, but for certain reasons which are not material to this appeal dismissing the suit with costs. Harbans Lal then appealed to the District Judge. During the pendency of the appeal the parties obtained an order from the District Judge adjourning the hearing for compromise. On 3rd July 1934, a written agreement was presented to the Court to refer the question in dispute (which was described as a matter of accounts) to the arbitration of two persons, Sita Ram and Ramji Lal. The District Judge made the necessary order of reference, but on 19th October passed a formal order superseding the reference to arbitration and decided to deal with the appeal on its merits. At the same time, counsel for Harbans Lal presented an application that the document Ex. A dated 5th June 1934, and presented on 3rd July 1934, which purported to be a reference to arbitration, was in reality a compromise and should be treated as an adjustment of the suit under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. The District Judge has accepted this argument and has held that the document Ex. A is in fact a compromise and a virtual admission by Sita Ram, defendant, of the major portion of the plaintiff's claim against him. In pursuance of this compromise, he dismissed from the suit Thakar Singh (a contesting party who had throughout denied that he was a member of the partnership), and holding that the only matter remaining was a settlement of accounts of Sita Ram granted the plaintiff a preliminary decree for rendition of accounts for the period 1st January 1924 to 30th June 1929, and remanded the case to the lower Court for a final decree to be passed. From this decision Sita Ram has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

There is no finding in the District Judge's judgment or elsewhere of the respective shares of Harbans Lal and Sita Ram. It may be mentioned here that the document Ex. A is also silent as to the question of shares; and one of the grounds of appeal by the appellant is that the District Judge should not have passed the preliminary decree without deciding the respective shares of the parties. In the case of the parties as represented before me in second appeal, the shares of the parties are disputed and it appears to me that for this reason alone it would be difficult to maintain the judgment of the District Judge as it stands. But it is unnecessary to consider this matter as, in my view, the District Judge's order must be set aside on the ground that the matter in dispute having been referred by the District Judge to arbitration, the case is governed by S. 89, Civil P. C., and this section, as interpreted by this High Court, precludes the parties from invoking the provisions of O. 23, R. 3. It appears that this aspect of the case was not brought to the notice of the District Judge, but this is, of course, no reason why it should not be raised for the first time in second appeal. S. 89, Civil P. C., lays down that save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration shall be governed by the provisions contained in Sch. 2. The material words are "or by any other law for the time being in force." There is a divergence of opinion amongst the various High Courts as to whether these words do or do not include the Civil Procedure Code itself, but a Division Bench of this High Court has ruled in 67 I C 123 (1), that these words refer to some law extraneous to the Civil Procedure Code and cannot be legitimately held to cover O. 23, R. 3. It is true that this authority is not on all fours with the present case because it dealt with a case in which the parties without the intervention of the Court, referred a dispute during the pendency of an appeal to the decision of an arbitrator who gave an award.

In the present case the Court was asked to intervene since a written agreement was presented to the Court on 3rd July 1934, asking for a reference to an arbitrator. Moreover, there was no award in the present case. Counsel for the respondent urges that in these circumstances the ruling has no application, and that the real point in issue in 67 I C 123 (1) was the applicability of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., to a case where there had been an award, to which the parties had consented. It is apparent however that the ratio decidendi in that case applies equally to the circumstances of the present case. S. 89, Civil P. C., covers all references to arbitration, whether the reference is or is not made without the intervention of the Court, and whether an award does or does not follow and says that they shall be governed by the provisions of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. Clearly therefore the reasoning in 67 I C 123 (1), will apply to any case in which there has been a reference to arbitration. The Division Bench held that the words in S. 89, Civil P. C., "by any other law for the time being in force" must refer to some law extraneous to the Civil Procedure Code and cannot be legitimately held to cover O. 23, R. 3, in other words that once S. 89, Civil P. C., is held to apply, no reliance can be placed for any purpose on O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C.

The only remedy left is either to proceed with the arbitration or, if, as in this case, the District Judge has superseded the arbitration, to proceed with the hearing of the appeal on the merits as required by Para. 8 of Sch. 2 read with Para. 19. No authority of this Court has been brought to my notice which takes a contrary view or holds that O. 23, R. 3, can be invoked in a case governed by S. 89, Civil P. C. Mr. Badri Das has attempted to avoid the difficulty by urging that there was no proper agreement to refer to arbitration and that therefore the case is not governed by S. 89. It is true that the document Ex. A does not specifically refer to matters previously in dispute and purports to limit the dispute to the mere taking of accounts as between Harbans Lal and Sita Ram for a definite period; nevertheless, inasmuch as the Court was asked to refer the question of the settlement of accounts as between the parties for this period (which is after all the essential point in dispute in this case) to a decision by arbitration. I must take the document Ex. A to be a reference to arbitration within the meaning of S. 89, Civil P. C. I must hold therefore that the respondent is precluded from invoking the provisions of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., and that the District Judge was wrong in holding that there has been any adjustment between the parties either wholly or in part. I therefore accept the appeal, set aside the lower Court's order and remand the case to the lower appellate Court for a decision of the appeal on merits. Since the appeal has succeeded on a point which was not agitated before the lower Court I leave the parties to Misc. First Appeal No. 1292 of 1935, Decided on 22nd November 1935, from order of Dist. Judge, Mianwali, D/- 21st June 1935.

Insolvency—Generally Court should not take action under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, after property is sold—Minor adjudged insolvent—Such order is illegal—Minor unable to take proceedings due to minority—In such case Court can take action under S. 4.

Section 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, itself does not say anything as to the stage up to which the Court is competent to take proceedings under S. 4, but under sub-s. (2), the intention of the Legislature seems to be that the Insolvency Judge should not take action under S. 4 after the property has been sold. That should be the ordinary practice and a convenient practice but where a minor is adjudicated an insolvent and the order has been found to be illegal, and where the property was taken possession of by the Official Receiver and even when it was sold the minor could not raise any objection under S. 4 and owing to his minority he could not contest the validity of the order adjudicating him an insolvent, S. 4 is wide enough to cover the case as it is the duty of the insolvency Judge to do justice between the parties and to restore to the person his property which has been seized under an illegal order; specially when the order has been cancelled by the Judge. [P 376 C 2; P 377 C 1]

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellant.
Badri Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This firm Daulat Ram-Udai Bhan was adjudicated insolvent. The appellant Piara Ram was a partner of the firm but was a minor at the time of the order of adjudication. The whole property of the insolvents, that is to say of the firm constituted by the two partners including Piara Ram, was taken possession of by the Official Receiver and sold on 3rd June 1930 when Piara Ram was still a minor. Possession, however, was not given to the auction purchasers for more than four years. Consequently they made an application on 16th August 1934 to be put in possession of the property purchased by them from the Official Receiver. This application was made to the Insolvency Judge. To this application objection was raised by Piara Ram. Piara Ram also made an application on 26th November 1934, alleging that he being a minor had been illegally adjudicated an insolvent.

The learned District Judge has held that Piara Ram was adjudicated an insolvent illegally and that it must be assumed that no order adjudicating him an insolvent exists. The question now arises what should happen to the property, if any, of Piara Ram which has been sold by the Official Receiver but possession whereof has not yet been given to the purchasers. The learned District Judge has decided that Piara Ram should secure a decision of this question by instituting a civil suit. He does not appear to have decided that the case is not covered by S. 4 or that in exercise of his discretion he would not adjudicate in the matter under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act. It is contended by Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan on behalf of the appellant that having regard to the fact that the Court has found that the order adjudicating Piara Ram an insolvent is illegal and in view of his minority at the time of the adjudication order and also at the time of the sale of the property, it is unfair that he should be driven to a civil suit to get possession of his property, if any, from the Official Receiver. Mr. Badri Das on the other hand contends that under the Hindu law the property of Piara Ram vests in the receiver and is saleable by him and therefore the appellant has no right to any relief in these proceedings. That however is a matter to which the attention of the learned District Judge does not seem to have been invited and I am therefore unable to decide it at this stage.

The other contention of Mr. Badri Das is that S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, does not empower the Insolvency Judge to adjudicate upon the rights of persons concerned after the sale of the property by the Official Receiver. The section itself does not say anything as to the stage up to which the Court is competent to take proceedings under S. 4, but sub-s. (2) is relied upon by Mr. Badri Das in support of his contention that the intention of the Legislature was that the Insolvency Judge should not take action under S. 4 after the property has been sold. That perhaps should be the ordinary practice, and a convenient practice, but the facts of this case are peculiar. This is not a case in which a valid order of adjudication has been passed and a third person, who is interested in the property taken possession of by the Official Receiver, has slept over his right. Here a minor was adjudicated an insolvent and the order has been found to be illegal. When the property was taken possession of by the Official Receiver and even when it was sold he could not raise any objection under S. 4, and owing to his minority he could not contest the validity of the order adjudicating him an insolvent. It may be that after attaining majority he did not promptly go to the Court asking for the cancellation of the order adjudicating him an insolvent, but that by itself does not imply that he is not entitled to the relief, which he would otherwise be entitled to, if he can establish that any property which belong to him, and which could not therefore vest in the Official Receiver has been illegally sold by him. I consider that S. 4 is wide enough to cover a case like the present, and in any case it would be the duty of the Insolvency Judge to do justice between the parties and to restore to the person his property which has been seized under an illegal order: specially when the order has been cancelled by the Judge.

I accept this appeal and send the case back to the learned District Judge with directions to hold an enquiry whether any property belonging to the appellant Piara Ram, or any interest in any property which vests in Piara Ram, has been taken possession of by the receiver and has been disposed of by him, and, if it is possible to make restitution of the same to the minor in these proceedings, to do so. This order also is in the interest of the auction purchasers because, if it is found afterwards that the property has been sold to them which did not vest in the Receiver, or could not vest in the Receiver they may run the risk of being deprived of that property in subsequent proceedings without a chance of refund of their money in such proceedings. The order therefore that I have passed is in the interests of all concerned. I return the case to the District Judge. Costs will abide the result.

Civil Revn. No. 389 of 1935, Decided on 10th December 1935, from decree of Sm. C. Judge, Jhang, D/- 28th February 1935.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), Art. 8—Co-sharers transferring right to recover rent—Transferee bringing suit against other co-sharer for recovery of rent realized by him—Such suit is maintainable in Small Cause Court.

Some of the co-proprietors of land transferred their right to recover their share of rent from the tenants to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought a suit against the non-transferor co-proprietor to recover the share of rent transferred to him:

Held: that exception in Art. 8 did not apply because the defendant was not a tenant of transferor and the suit was not for arrears of rent. The suit was not excepted by Art. 31 because the action was not a claim for immoveable property. The expression "belonging to the plaintiff" as used in Art. 31, applies to immoveable property and not to profits. So the suit in the Small Cause Court was maintainable.

Ganesh Datta—for Petitioner.Ram Chand Manchanda—for Respondent (Plaintiff).

Order.—This is a petition for revision of a decree passed by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Jhang. The only ground raised is that the suit was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. The objection was raised before the trial Judge but was overruled and a decree passed subsequently. The facts, as alleged by the plaintiff-respondent, are these: Sunder Singh, Kirpal Singh and Sat Ram Das were co-owners of land which was under the cultivation of tenants who paid rent to the landlords. Sunder Singh and Kirpal Singh transferred their right to recover their share of rent from the tenants to Sardar Singh and Sardar Singh transferred the same right to Sadhu Singh. Sadhu Singh then instituted a suit against Sat Ram Das for a decree for the amount alleged to be due to him on account of Sunder Singh and Kirpal Singh's share in the produce of the land recovered by Sat Ram Das from the tenants of the land. The plea of Sat Ram Das, defendant, appears to be that Sunder Singh and Kirpal Singh had no share in the land. The learned Judge, Small Cause Court, has decreed the suit.

The question is whether such a suit is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. The learned counsel for the petitioner relies upon two articles of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act in support of his contention that the suit is excepted from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court, Art. 8, which excepts a suit for the recovery of rent, and Art. 31, which excepts a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant. It is obvious that the suit is not for the recovery of rent because Sat Ram Das is not the tenant of Sunder Singh and Kirpal Singh. He is, according to the allegation of the plaintiff and the finding of the trial Judge, a co-sharer in the land. It is not also a suit such as is mentioned in Art. 31 because the plaintiff does not claim the immoveable property in dispute. He is only a transferee of the right to recover the share of the income of the property of Sunder Singh and Kirpal Singh. I think the expression "belonging to the plaintiff, as used in Art. 31, applies to immoveable property and not to profits. Neither of the two articles relied upon by the petitioner's counsel therefore governs the case. Therefore the suit was cognizable by the Small Cause Court and I dismiss this petition; but the question was an arguable one and therefore I make no order as to costs.
